The ninth annual conference of the Railroad Department of the Young Men's Christian Associations was held at Fort Wayne, Ind., October 20-23. More than 600 railroad delegates were present. All the meetings were largely attended and the gathering was one of the most spiritual conferences the associations have ever held. Strong indorsements of the work of the Railroad Department were presented by prominent officials from all parts of the country. The Railroad Department now has 130 associations, employing 145 secretaries and owning or using 51 buildings designed especially for their work, valued at nearly $800,000. In all of these buildings are reading rooms, libraries and other appliances common to Young Men's Christian Associations and in many of them lunch rooms and sleeping apartments. During the year an active evangelistic effort has been made in connection with the railroad associations, and large numbers of railroad men have been converted. It is a thoroughly practical as well as a spiritual work.

Tolstoy Fund.

Count Leo Tolstoy, whose seventieth birthday has recently been celebrated, writes to a correspondent in this country urging the raising of funds to aid in the emigration of the oppressed Doukhobortsi. These people—thrifty, industrious farmers, some ten thousand in number—form a Protestant sect whose tenets resemble those of the Quakers. Their only offense is their refusal from conscientious scruples to serve in the Russian army. For this reason they have been repeatedly exiled from one part of the empire to another, and so persecuted and maltreated by the government officials that their position in their own country has become intolerable. With much difficulty they have obtained permission to emigrate to foreign lands, and steps have been taken to settle them, temporarily at least, in the Island of Cyprus, but it is hoped that they may eventually reach America. There is urgent need of funds to enable them to take advantage of the privilege to emigrate which has been accorded to them. A committee has already been formed in London to raise money for this purpose, and the undersigned have been constituted a committee to co-operate with them in America. It seems appropriate that such money as is collected should be offered to the Doukhobortsi through Count Tolstoy, and that in honor of the seventieth anniversary of his birth it should be called the Tolstoy Fund. This cause lies close to the heart of the distinguished Russsian and nothing could give him greater joy than its success. We appeal to all of our fellowcitizens who believe in liberty—in the freedom of man to abstain from taking up arms against his brother-man—to contribute as they may be able to this worthy object. Contributions in any amount may be sent to Isaac N. Seligman, Esq., Treasurer of the Committee, Mills Building, New York.

The Christian Hymnist,

A New Church Singing Book.

A Brand-new Singing Book for All Departments of Church Work and Worship.
Over 300 pages, More than 500 Tunes, and between 600 and 700 Hymns.

Part One
Contains the old standard hymns and tunes, gathered from every available source, together with a large number of new tunes, written expressly for this book

Part Two
Contains choice and valuable hymns and tunes of the "Gospel Songs" order by leading writers and composers.

In compiling and editing this book, both the Choir and Congregation were kept in mind, as, in fact, were all the departments of Church work where praise in song is given.

Choice Tunes
From such writers as TENNY, the FILLMORES, SHOWALTER, OGDEN, TOWNER, HERBERT, GABRIEL, ROBERTS, HOFFMAN, PAINTER, ROSECRANS, HAWES, WARE, KIEFFER, O'KANE, THOMPSON, DOANE, GIFFE, LANGLEY, DOUTHIT, SUFFERN, RHEEM, MOORE, KING, ALLEMAN, KURZENKNABE, CRIST, BELDEN, MCPHERSON, HUGG, MCINTOSH, MCCAULEY, LORENZ, HOPKINS, and others, will be found in this collection.

Our Own Writers
Another feature of the book is the number of our own hymn-writers represented: BATEMAN, BROWN, BRADLEY, COBB, TRICKETT, WRIGHT, GILCREST, and others.

The Music
In this work is sufficiently classical for the most cultured choir, yet of a character that can be comprehended and rendered by any congregation.

The topical arrangement of the work is so perfect that an appropriate hymn and tune for any occasion can readily be found.

Praise the Giver!

EDWARD ORVILLE SHARPE.

I.

For the festival of glory
In creation's ancient story,
When the morning stars were singing,
And those godlike voices ringing,
Told of wise and blessed power,
Loading earth with wondrous dower;
Bending bough and harvest golden
Ripening in Eden olden;
For such heritage of beauty,
Render love and praise and duty.

II.

For the heroes rare and saintly
Garbed and mannered all so quaintly;
Children they in faith and feeling,
Wayward oft, yet oft revealing
Tender hearts for heavenly trusting,
Wooed and won from earthly lusting;
For their praying and their toiling
Under burdens and reviling;
Men were they in mighty measure,
Rich are we in their soul-treasure;
While time flows to the Forever,
For such gifts O! praise the Giver.

III.

For the gift within the manger,
Rays of love and shades of danger;
Trace the way his feet have trodden,
Mark the soil his blood hath sodden,
Stand beside that flood of passion,
Crossed by none in such a fashion:
Since the tomb that tells the story
Of his conquest and his glory,
We may praise with hearts a-quiver,
For his throne and home forever.

IV.

For the message that is given
To all creatures under heaven;
Great the honor in its bearing
Through the world with faith unfearing.
Till mankind shall own its Master,
And shall wake to issues vaster:
For the victors gone before us,
And the triumph coming for us,
To our God be all praise given,
Here on earth and there in heaven!

Farmer Truesdall's Thanksgiving.

BY THE EDITOR.

"Corn Holler" will not be found in the list of popular resorts. Its fame is purely local. It has no great scenic attractions, and it is a little off from the railroad and many miles removed from the hurry and bustle of city life. But the quiet beauty of the valley, hedged in by almost parallel lines of hills or low mountain ranges, has a charm all its own. Its rich soil made it famous in that part of the state for the yield of corn or Indian maize, which gave the valley its local designation as "Corn Holler." In addition to this, however, the valley produces an abundance of all manner of fruits and vegetables, which made its humble homes the abode of plenty.

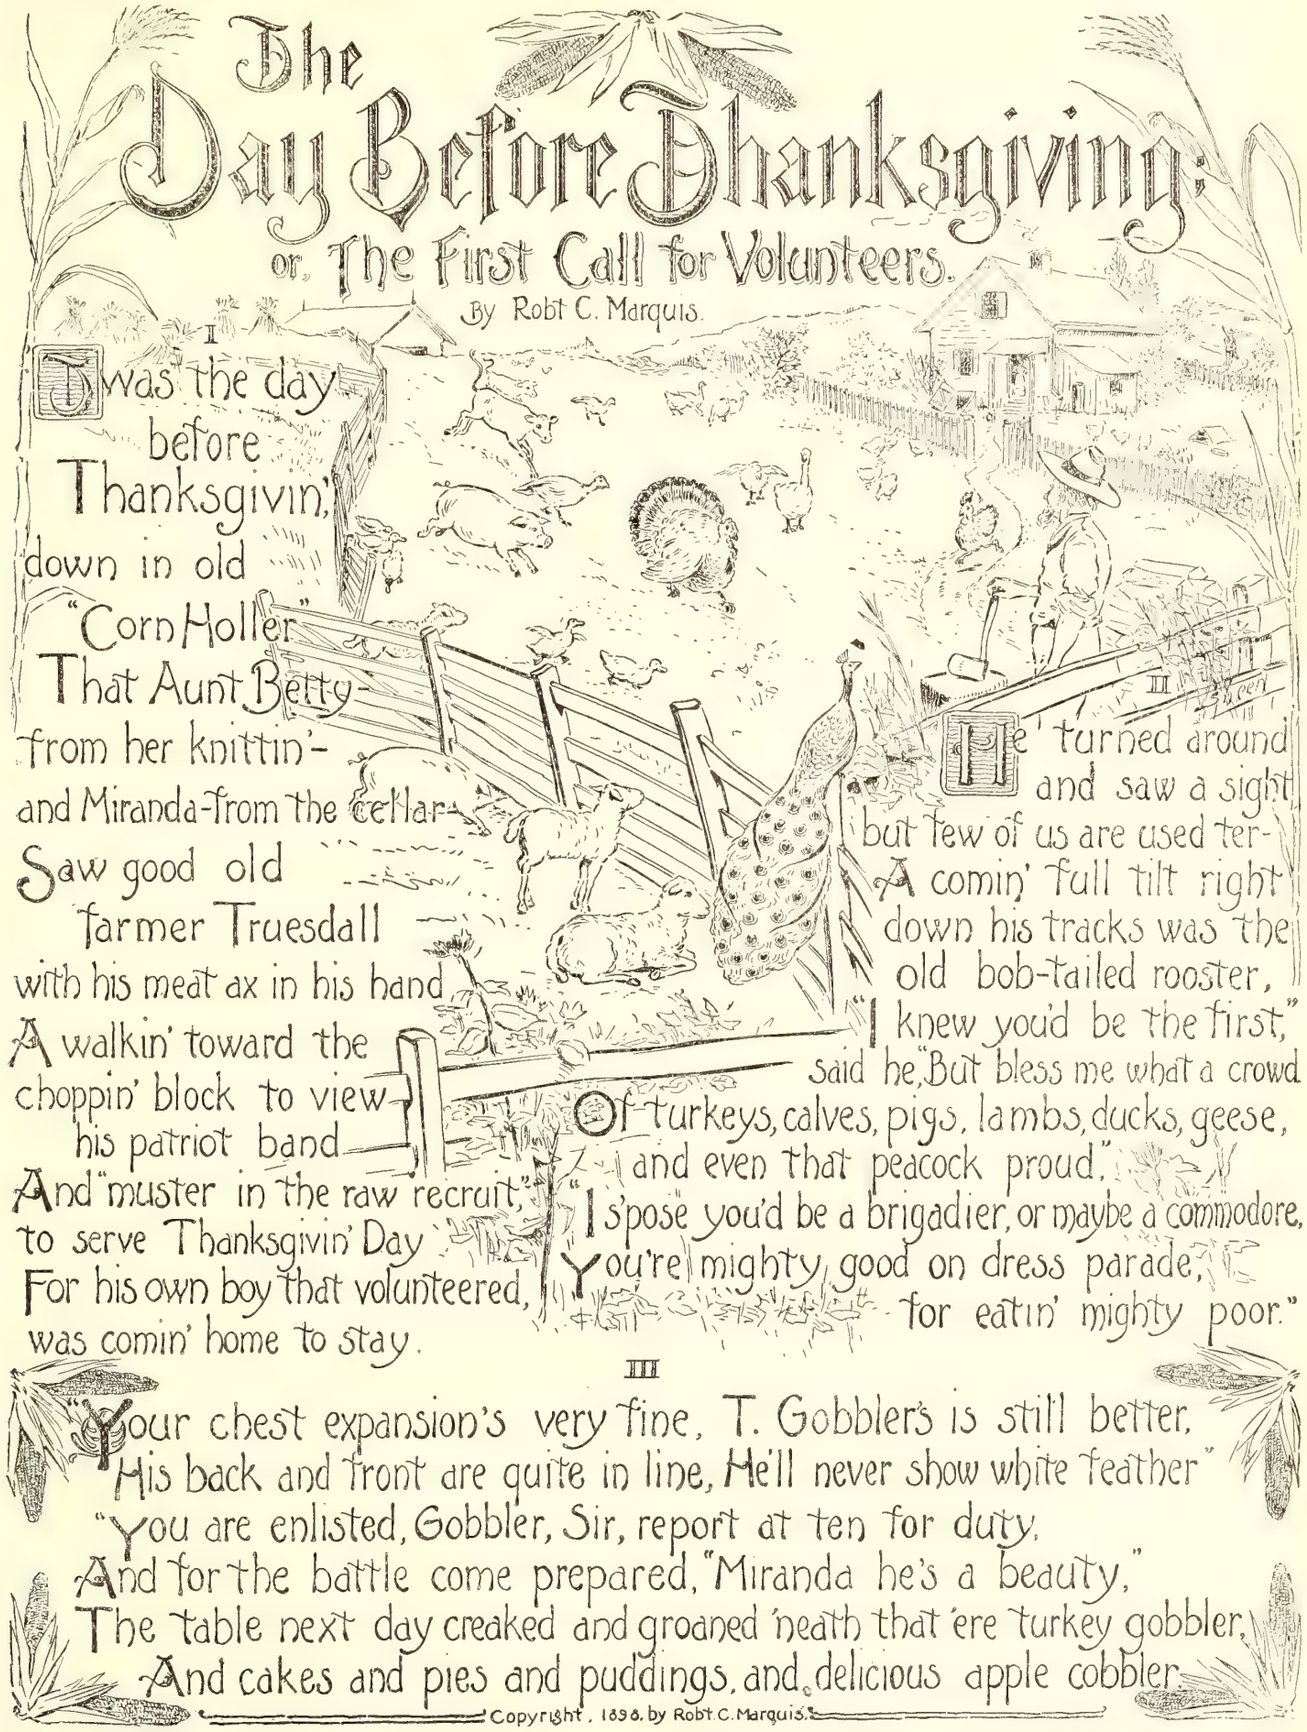
Among the comfortable, well-to-do farmers living in "Corn Holler" was Samuel Truesdall, known familiarly as "Uncle Sam." His comfortable one-story house, with its cellar and a kitchen which had been added to the south side to meet the growing demands of the family, sat perched on the sloping hillside, surrounded by a picket fence and overlooking the farm and a good section of the valley. Samuel Truesdall's father had migrated from Kentucky to Missouri while the state was yet young and the country new, and had been attracted to this valley by the fertility of its soil, by the luxuriant forests of splendid trees that crowned the hills, and by a never-failing spring of pure water which gushed from the hillside. The elder Truesdall had long since been gathered to his fathers, and Samuel had fallen heir to the old homestead.

Twenty-five years had elapsed since Samuel Truesdall had led to his homestead his young bride, Elizabeth Langston, the daughter of a neighboring farmer. They had attended the same country school, where they had spelled together in the spelling matches, and had sung together in the old-fashioned singing schools of those early days. They had met at house-raisings and corn-huskings, when the men would come together to help each other, and the women to visit and quilt and perhaps to gossip in a harmless way. In addition to these opportunities for a mutual acquaintance and love-making, Samuel and Elizabeth had attended Sunday-school and church in the country meeting house, located in a grove not far from the spring above mentioned. In this plain church building some plain, honest country people met to worship God and to hear a plain man preach the simple gospel. The church was sometimes spoken of as a "Campbellite Church," in those rude times, but the people who worshiped there called themselves Christians, or Disciples of Christ. The elder Truesdall had brought with him from Kentucky the principles of the Reformation, which he had heard urged there by such men as Barton W. Stone, John A. Gano, John T. Johnson and others, and had become the leader in the church at "Corn Holler." Here Samuel and Elizabeth often went together, and here in their youthful years, each had confessed faith in Jesus Christ and had taken Him as Savior, Pattern and Guide.

Under these conditions it is not strange that their lives ran closer together until they were united in holy wedlock. By the aid of this simple faith they had led a peaceful, happy life, content with their lot, loving their neighbors and being loved and respected by them. Two children had blessed their home, a son and a daughter. The eldest was a daughter, Miranda, and she was still with them and was teaching the neighboring school. George Truesdall, the junior member of the family, though only in his twentieth year, had enlisted in the army when the first call for volunteers in the war with Spain had been made. The regiment to which he had belonged had been encamped at Chickamauga for sometime, but word had been received from George that the regiment was being discharged, and that he expected to return home for Thanksgiving.

It was no wonder that the Truesdall homestead was astir earlier than usual on the day preceding Thanksgiving. Aunt Betty's face assumed something of its old-time color as she said to her husband that morning, "Do you remember, dear, that tomorrow is the 25th anniversary of our marriage?"

"I reckon I have not forgotten that we were spliced on Thanksgiving Day," replied Uncle Samuel; "but really, I didn't think it had been so long ago as that."



"Well, it has," said Aunt Betty, "and besides that, you know George is coming home to-morrow from the war to stay with us."

Uncle Samuel was quiet for a moment, and his eyes were moist with tears as his memory ran back over the years since he had with pride led pretty Lizzie Langston to his home as his young bride. And then the thought that George, their only boy, their brave soldier boy, was coming home, filled his heart too full for utterance. After a moment's silence, however, he said: "Well wife, I reckon we have got a good deal to be thankful for, and if you and Miranda say so we'll have such a Thanksgiving dinner to-morrow as George has never seen."

Aunt Betty and Miranda readily acceded to the proposition and signified their willingness to do their part in welcoming George home with a royal feast, and making the silver wedding a memorable occasion.

It was agreed that Uncle Sam should invade the barnyard and slay a sufficient number of fowls, including a large turkey that had been saved and fattened for the occasion, to meet all the demands of the feast, and that Miranda should send word around to a few of the young people to come in and meet George and welcome him home. And so the day before Thanksgiving was a busy day in the Truesdall homestead. Aunt Betty and Miranda found all they could do in those numerous preparations which thrifty housekeepers know so well how to make for such an occasion. While the women were engaged with these preparations, Farmer Truesdall, having beheaded the turkey and chickens and prepared the wood for the fire, strolled into the woods near by, but recently glorious in their autumnal tints, and gathered leaves and boughs of sumach with which to decorate the house. This done, he moved uneasily about the place, and was seen to cast frequent glances up the road that ran over the hill to Grantville, the nearest railroad station.

George had written his father that as he was not certain of the train he would arrive on he would come home on the Jonesville stage that ran in connection with the train in carrying mail and passengers between these two points. About five o'clock in the afternoon the stage coach came in view over the hill, and all eyes were fastened upon it to see if George were among the passengers. They were not long in suspense, for they soon saw a white handkerchief waving from the stage, and they readily divined that it was the signal of their soldier boy, Sergeant George Truesdall. Before the stage driver had brought his coach to a full stop George sprang from his seat to embrace the family that had met him at the gate. He was clothed in his soldier's uniform, with three stripes on his arms which marked his rank of sergeant. His face was tanned, and he looked the picture of robust health and manliness as he greeted his father and mother and sister, who joyfully welcomed him home again. As they passed down the walk together George cast glances hither and thither at familiar objects and scenes, and remarked, "After all, there is no place like home, and no neighborhood that is quite equal to 'Corn Holler." No sooner had he passed into the house than he saw evidences that unusual preparations were being made for Thanksgiving. "Mother," said George, "it looks as if you and Miranda were expecting company."

"Yes, George," his mother replied, "we have been expecting you, and to-morrow, you know, is our wedding anniversary, and we have invited a few friends in to greet you and to help us celebrate our 'silver wedding.'"

"That will be splendid!" exclaimed George, "for I shall have the pleasure of meeting a number of my friends without the trouble of going to see them."

"Yes," said Miranda, "I thought you would be glad to see Myrtle, and so I took the liberty of inviting her along with some other young people."

"That was very kind of you, sister," replied George, and the additional color that came into his bronzed face betrayed a feel- that was something more than mere friendship.

"The fact is," said Miranda, "we felt under obligations to Myrtle, for we have really heard from you oftener through her than from letters we have received at home."

George entered a demurer at this implied charge of neglect in writing home, and his mother came to his defense by saying that she thought George had done very well, and that writing to Myrtle was almost the same as writing to the home folks, a statement which caused a laugh that still further heightened the color in George's face. To relieve himself from temporary embarrassment, George remarked that he believed he would go out into the barnyard and see the horses and look at the corn that had been gathered, the hay that had been ricked, and see what kind of a crop had been made in his absence.

His father laughingly observed that the hired hand which he had employed to assist him had proven even his superior as a farmer, and that the crops had been especially fine in "Corn Holler," and he accompanied his son on his tour of inspection over the place.

The horses neighed a welcome to George, as he patted them lovingly on their necks, and even the cows and the pigs and the fowls seemed to recognize the presence of a familiar friend.

George surveyed the full barns and other signs of material prosperity with a good deal of pleasure, and slyly remarked to his father, that he was glad to know that he was able to get along so well without his assistance, as he had thought a little of beginning life on his own account. While looking at some of the fat porkers and fowls, George remarked that if he had had some of them at Chickamauga during the encampment there they would have been highly appreciated. At this point the supper-bell called them in to the evening meal, and it was a happy group that gathered around the table, a reunited family once more. George told of his experience in the army, intermingled with which were frequent expressions of appreciation of his mother's cooking. Plans for the morrow were also discussed during and after supper until bedtime.

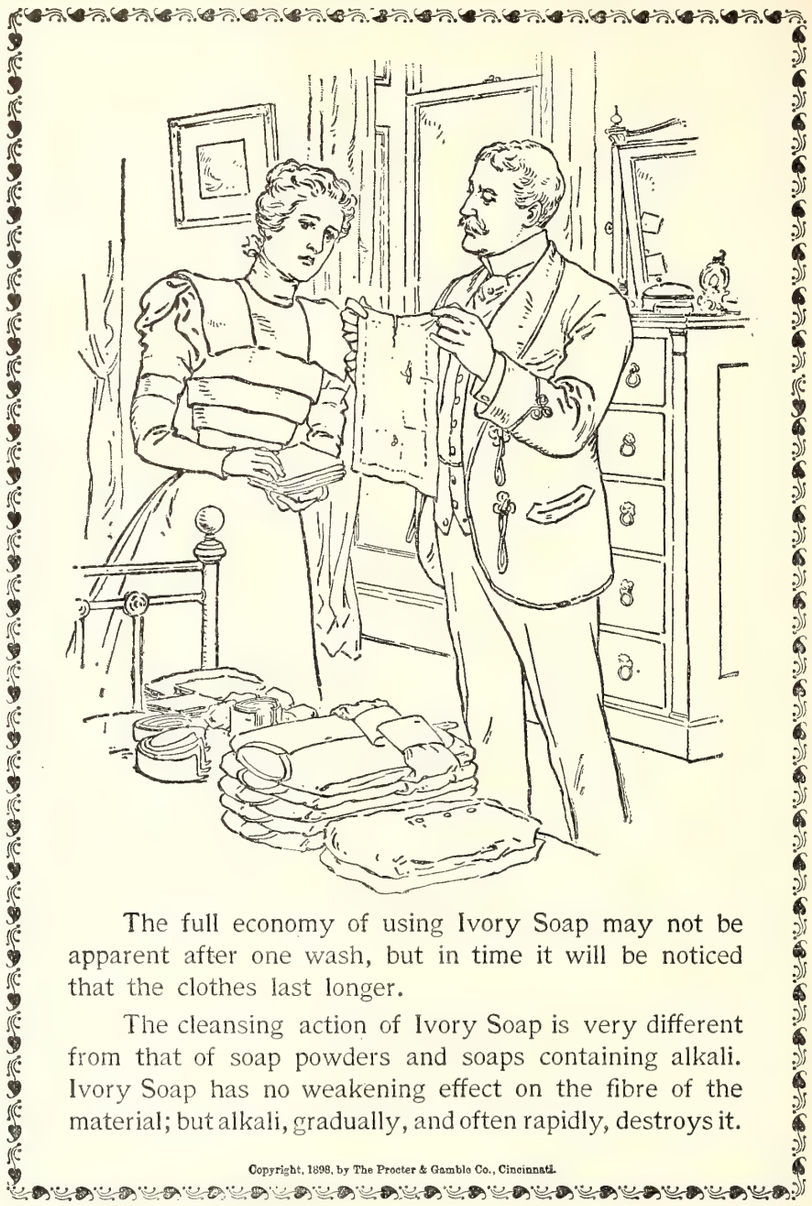
It was during this conversation that the father repeated George's remark in the barn as to his thinking of beginning life for himself, and said he supposed it was merely a joke, as George was too young to think of marrying.

Miranda said she knew there had been a good deal of correspondence going on between George and his sweetheart, but she did not think the crisis was very near at hand; "besides," she added, "George, you must remember that I am older than you and my turn comes first."

"As to that, Miranda," said George, "if you can afford to turn down a young man like that dude drummer from St. Louis, you must not hold me responsible for leaving you behind in single blessedness." They all laughed at that good-natured sally, and George, looking more soberly, proceeded: "Yes, I may as well say to you that I have been corresponding a good deal with Myrtle during my absence in the army, and while it has been our purpose for some time to marry, we had not thought of fixing the date so early until within the last few weeks. In thinking over my return home on Thanksgiving day, and remembering that it was father's and mother's 'silver wedding,' I wrote Myrtle, suggesting that it would be very nice if we should marry on the 25th anniversary of my father's and mother's marriage. She thought this was short notice, but finally yielded her objections, and so it was decided that we would have an informal wedding. I understand we are to have services to-morrow at the church, and Bro. Wright has been notified that at the close of the service he is expected to pronounce the words that will make us husband and wife."

At this announcement, to which the family listened with open-eyed wonder, there were exclamtions of surprise, and Miranda went so far as to say that she thought he was "real mean" in not letting them know beforehand.

In explanation George said it was their purpose at first to give them a complete surprise, not letting any one but the minister know it until the close of the service, when the announcement would be made; but on reflection they had decided to let their families know the evening before in order that they may have on the "wedding garments."



Miranda replied, pettishly, that she had no "wedding garments," and she didn't know that she would attend the wedding; but said it in such a way as to mean that nothing could keep her away.

Uncle Sammy looked thoughtfully into the fire and said nothing.

Aunt Betty observed, with a sigh, "Of course, George, we hoped to have you with us a good while yet, but then you will not be going far away, and I can only hope that you and Myrtle may live as happily together as your father and I have these twenty-five years."

There was unusual tenderness and emotion in Uncle Sam's prayer that night before they retired.

At eleven o'clock the next day the whole neighborhood had gathered at the "Corn Holler" country church for the Thanksgiving service. A number of soldier boys had returned home, and it was noised around that there would be a sort of reunion of these and a good patriotic discourse by Elder Wright. After some special music Bro. Wright preached a very earnest discourse, in which he pointed out the reasons for thanksgiving, dwelling particularly upon the manifestations of divine favor during the late war with Spain, and upon the fact that a number of our own young men who responded to their country's call had returned safely to their homes. A song followed the sermon, during which the congregation arose. At the close the preacher asked the people to be seated, and said he had a very pleasant duty to perform before pronouncing the benediction. "One of our young friends," he remarked, "who left our community at the call of his country, has returned home and has decided to signalize his entrance once more upon the duties of civil life by forming a partnership for life with one of our esteemed young ladies in the neighborhood. Both of them are known to you all, and are esteemed by you all as most worthy members of this congregation." The closest attention was now given, and every eye was riveted upon the preacher. "The parties I refer to," the preacher went on to say, "are Mr. George Truesdall and Miss Myrtle Amesbury." At this announcement there was an audible expression of surprise and of gratification in the audience. The young couple were asked to come forward, and standing in front of the pulpit the preacher, in a few solemn words, pronounced them husband and wife, closing with an earnest prayer and benediction.

The full economy of using Ivory Soap may not be apparent after one wash, but in time it will be noticed that the clothes last longer.

The cleansing action of Ivory Soap is very different from that of soap powders and soaps containing alkali. Ivory Soap has no weakening effect on the fibre of the material; but alkali, gradually, and often rapidly, destroys it.

There was an immediate rush to the front of the church, and greetings and congratulations to the happy pair were continued for some time. Aunt Betty, who had been among the first to extend her greetings, finally remarked that it was time they were hastening home, as the Thanksgiving dinner, which had been put in charge of a special cook for the day, would be in readiness for them. Elder Wright, and the Amesburys, and a few of the soldier boys, and a number of other neighbors, some on horseback and some in wagons, made their way to Farmer Truesdall's to partake of a bounteous repast which was to serve the double purpose of a Thanksgiving dinner and a wedding feast.

The table had been lengthened out for the occasion, and it was a merry party that gathered around it to partake of its bounties. Many were the sallies of wit and bright repartee back and forth while they were discussing the dinner, and the unanimous opinion was that no better Thanksgiving dinner had ever been spread in "Corn Holler" than this one, and that no happier party had ever gathered than that which had assembled at Farmer Truesdall's on Thanksgiving day to welcome home the soldier boy and to celebrate Uncle Sam's and Aunt Betty's "silver wedding" and the marriage of Sargeant Truesdall and Myrtle Amesbury.

The Battle of the Heart.

BY GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

'Tis not alone on the fields of war
That battles have been won.
God knows what battles rage afar
From sound of shell or gun!

The soldier bears amid the dead
His brave and manly part;
The soldier's wife must wage with dread
The battle of the heart.

He offers life and feels it just
His loyalty to prove;
She offers what a woman must—
The treasure of her love.

By day he marches to the scene
Where havoc may be wrought;
By night she follows, close and keen,
The silent march of thought.

The wilderness is far less drear
Than that her faith must cross.
Ah, death is less a thing to fear
Than loneliness and loss!

While glory gilds the path he treads
Her way is dark with fears,
For every drop of blood he sheds
She sheds a thousand tears!

But God who watches with the brave,
Wherever they may be,
To cheer and soothe if not to save,
Whether by land or sea—

Is with the patient heart which fights
Its weary war with woe,
As well as with the hand which smites
The legions of the foe.

Honor to him whose feet must roam
To bear a soldier's part!
Honor to her who fights at home
The battle of the heart!

God's Promises.

WILL H. DIXON.

Tho' the grass of the field may wither away,
And the earth's brightest flowers may crumble to dust,
And tho' all things on earth are passing away,
In God's blessed promises still may we trust.

O'er the week of all time His Word stands sublime.
Tho' its truthfulness many foes may assail,
Yet His Word shall stand fast tho' all may combine;
His blessed promises never can fail.

Our First Thanksgiving.

BY ALICE CURTIS MOYER.

"The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast,
And the woods against a stormy sky
Their giant branches tossed;
And the heavy night hung dark
The hills and waters o'er,
When a band of exiles moored their bark
On the wild New England shore."

'Twas the following spring, 277 years ago—the gloomiest period in American history. Half the little "band of exiles" had died, among them being John Carver, their governor, and Rose Standish, the beautiful young wife of Capt. Standish, afterwards the wooer of Priscilla as told by Longfellow.

The winter had been one of intense suffering, and the spring had brought but little relief. But, undaunted, these Pilgrims, though weak and gaunt from hunger, cleared fields and planted corn, using every endeavor to make better the future. The graves of loved ones were included in the fields, that the Indians, of whom they lived in constant fear, might not discover how many of their number had succumed.

Upon a certain morning of this desolate spring a sweet-faced Puritan maid stood in a cabin doorway, shading her eyes with her hand. Presently, espying a familiar form in the distance, she walked down the path in its direction. Seeing who it was that had come out to meet him, handsome John Chenoweth hastened forward and laid at the feet of the maiden a young deer—the spoils of his hunt.

"See how favored I have been, my love," said he, "though I went a long way. But why so sad? Do the mother and little sister still hunger? Did not the boy return shortly after we left—three days ago—with the clams and lobsters we procured while the tide was out? And yesterday, I sent you some birds; while to-day I return with as fine venison as the Plymouth regions can boast. Cheer up, my Agatha! As long as John Chenoweth is in possession of his two strong arms, a willing spirit and a warm heart that beats but for you, my loved one, you need have no fear." And he bared his head, taking in his own, the hand of the maiden before him.

"None realize more than I that what you say is true, John," replied she. "What should we have done during the long, hard winter but for you? My loved ones, however, will hunger no more; sufferings cannot now molest them."

"Then they are—"

"Yes; they passed peacefully away near the midnight hour of your first day of absence. The little one first, dear mother soon following. Last eve at sunset they were laid away just inside your field."

"My poor Agatha!"

"Nay, John! Do not pity me, unless because I could not go with them. Let us rather rejoice that they, at least, are out of sorrow's reach."

"I do rejoice for them, love. My regret is in your loneliness; but I cannot sorrow because you were not with them. I do so long, selfishly perhaps, to keep my Agatha on earth. My constant prayer throughout all has been that you might be spared. But I do not wonder that you do not care to live. These hardships are hard even for strong men to bear; so what must it be for women and tender little ones. If I could but shield you from it all!"

And heedless of the fact that they were in sight of the cabins, the Puritan maid was folded in the arms of her lover; and despite her belief that all great joy was sinful and must be attoned for, Agatha laid her head on John's broad shoulder, saying:

"Forgive me if I spoke repiningly. It was only becouse of the great emptiness that seemed to come to me when I kissed dear mother's lips. Feeling their marble coldness, I realized that nevermore in this world would they utter my name; nevermore speak gentle words of sympathy and counsel. Far be it from me to shrink from any hardship. Did we not come here for conscience sake? With the shelter of your love I am content with my life on earth; and concerning the life to come I trust in God, the Father of all."

"Thank you, dear one. You say well. Rest assured, there are better times ahead. If faith and patience do not forsake us, neither will we be forsaken of God."

The deer was again placed upon the shoulder of the hunter, and side by side the lover went up the path, when suddenly they became aware that something unusual was going on—something exciting.

Hurrying forward, they soon joined their neighbors and became as excited as they, for Samoset had spoken his greeting of "Welcome" in English, and with the help of Squanto,* who acted as intrepreter, the Pilgrims were made to understand that a band of the dreaded Indians had come to make them a friendly visit. They were heartily received by the colonists, so devoutly thankful were they that their red neighbors had come in peace.

They had but little to offer them, and scant indeed would have been the fare, had not the Indians contributed to the feast by going into the wood and killing a number of deer.

It cannot be doubted that the fathers and mothers of this great republic were glad to join in what was not only the first Thanksgiving, but also the first American barbecue.

There were no religious observances, but there were games and pastimes. The feast lasted about a week and the "sad-faced Puritan women" and the squaws did the cooking. The treaty made with Massasoit, the chief, lasted for fifty years.

We have no authentic history for it, but doubtless John Chenoweth offered his deer as his part of the feast, and we can imagine with what zeal he joined in the games with the Indians, while his sweetheart, putting aside her grief, no doubt assisted with the cooking, for they had little time to grieve—had these earnest, sober-minded Pilgrims—and we have every reason to believe that the marriage solemnized on the last day of the feast had, for its contracting parties, John Chenoweth and Agatha Manning.

The influence of this people has been felt in every state. "Trusting to God to shape their destinies," resolving to brave all danger and any hardship, they had come to seek a home in the wilderness for the sake of conscience.

Two years after this "first Thanksgiving," the first religious Thanksgiving was held in the month of July. There had been a long drouth and nine hours of fasting and prayer was ordered. While they prayed, rain fell, and fasting gave place to thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving, however, was a long time being established as a holiday. For a long time its date was uncertain and neither did it always come on Thursday. Finally, however, there was a succession of good crops and the people wanted to give thanks; therefore, the fall of the year came to be Thanksgiving time, and then November came to be the month.

And thus it is that our national home holiday came about—growing out of small beginnings. The first Thanksgiving proclamation was issued in 1667, and now we all hasten to obey them, for we always have something to be thankful for. This is our great home-gathering holiday. Men will travel many miles to be with their families on that day. It is a time for family reunion; a time for both smiles and tears. It is the embodiment of the national idea, that "God is good" and "his mercey endureth forever."

"Yes: you will find it laid down in the first verse of the fifteenth chapter of Proverbs: 'A soft answer turneth away wrath.' It is the best system of self-defense of which I know."—Journal and Messenger.

A great many foolish blunders are laid at the door of the negro preacher, many of them imaginary. The following is good enough to be true. It is said that an old colored man in reading a well-known hymn which contained the line, "Judge not the Lord by feeble sense," mistook "sense" for "saints," and gave this odd version, "Judge not the Lord by feeble saints." What a pity that people will judge the Lord by feeble saints! To what misconception and unhappy feelings it leads.—The Evangel.

A rich landlord once cruelly oppressed a poor widow. Her son, a little boy of eight years, witnessed it. He afterwards became a painter, and painted a life-likeness of the dark scene. Years afterwards he placed it where the man saw it. He turned pale, trembled in every joint, and offered a large sum to purchase it, that he might put it out of sight. Thus there is an invisible painter drawing on the canvas of the soul a life-likeness reflecting correctly all the passion, and actions of our spiritual history on earth. Eternity will reveal them to every man. We must meet our earth-life again, whether it has been good or evil.—Christian Leader.

A Circuit of the Globe

BY A. M'LEAN.

The pictures of all the foreign missionaries of the Christian Church, their homes and places of worship are among the illustrations. The author gives an account of what he saw, whom he saw, the many countries visited, the habits, customs, and peculiarities of the nations through which he passed. The book is written in a most fascinating manner, enabling the reader to feel as though he had made the trip with the writer. The author set out from Cincinnati, Ohio, crossing the American continent to San Francisco, then across the Pacific Ocean to Japan, stopping at Honolulu, then to China, India, Australia, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, European countries to London, across the Atlantic to America and then home. The book gives the social, political and religious phases of the many nations visited by the author.

CONDUCTED BY
J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

How it Began.

That evening George Weston came into his yard with a discontented expression, and although his football lay right in his path he did not stop to give it a kick. The neighbor's cat was on the fence, but George didn't scare her up the tree. The truth was, he was a discouraged boy. It was Saturday, and he had been playing from early morning; there had been ten games of marbles, then a long game of "town ball," which had changed to "scrub," and at last degenerated into "tippy-up," there had been a band in town, and a free exhibition on a rope, stretched across Main Street, from the housetops. In the afternoon he had played "fox and hound" till his legs began to ache. So now George Weston was a discontented boy, because he was too tired to play longer. His spirit was willing, but his legs were weak.

His sister was sitting on the porch. "You hear those boys?" said George, dropping upon the steps, as a shout came from the distance. "They are going to play 'By-down.' Asked me to play. But I've got the legache. I wish I was my legs!" he added scornfully. "I'd show 'em about giving out just when there was going to be fun!"

Jennie langhed, "Well, since you are not your legs," she said, "and since your legs want to rest, why not join the Advacce Society?"

"What's that?" George asked.

"I have just been reading about it in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST," replidd his sister. "There are five things you make up your mind to do, and that makes you a member."

"What good does it do to be a member?" returned George.

"That's where the fun comes in. But it does you a lot of good, besides the fun. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has just started a department for boys and girls, and the members of the Advance Society are to write for it on some subject given by the person who conducts it. And they are going to be such subjects as we are interested in, something children like to read about. And we will all talk in the column, just as if we were in a room together."

"Yes, I know that kind," interrupted George. "It's a column where the big people preach at us. Now, there's the Family Cultivator, and it has a Young Folks' Department. Well, I sometimes find pretty interesting reading in other parts of the paper. But I run from that Young Folks' Department as if it had the diphtheria! Why, the writers of it don't understand children, nor their ways. They think you've got to explain everything to them, and use little, soft words!"

"But this new department I was telling you about, is all different," said Jennie. "The boys and girls are to help to get it up, and we wil feel that its success depends on us. Here is the first general subject we to write on: 'The Funniest Thing that Ever Happened.' "

George laughed, "That sounds pretty lively for a children's column," he said, "I thought they always tried to make you solemn and sit around on benches! Why, there might be fun in that, after all."

"Of coursa there is. And I know something I am going to write about. The time Aunt Lizzie—"

"Oh, that time with the rat-trap," interrupted George, laughing. "That was funny! Why, Jennie, I believe I'll join that society. I never expected to hear of a children's column that would amuse me! What are those five things you have to do, to join?"

"Make up your mind to read a verse of the Bible every day."

"Well, I do that anyway," said George. "They do that in the Christian Endeavor, you know."

"Memorize a quotation from some famous author once a week."

"That's easy. Go ahead!"

"Read thirty lines of poetry a week."

"Don't like poetry," said George.

"I do," said Jennie.

"But that don't make me like it any better than I did before," observed her brother.

"But, George, how much poetry have you read?"

"Never read it," said George virtuously.

"Then how can you tell whether you like it or not. Just think how many of our great men have loved poetry, and how our wisest writers have written it. Even the novelists try their hands at it once in a while. Dickens wrote 'The Ivy Green,' and Thackeray, and Scott, and Stevenson—why you can't afford to dislike poetry when our greatest men have loved it! The fact is, it is the fashion to say, 'I don't like poetry,' nowadays. But I always think it's pretty hard on the people that say so. It doesn't hurt poetry!"

"Well, all right," cried George, I can stand it. It won't take but a few minutes to get over thirty lines—and, as you say, I don't know much about the stuff. But people don't talk poetry, so I never could see any sense in reading it. Suppose I were to say to you—

"Now, Jennie, dear, I'm getting hungry;

"Get me a piece of ham and—and—and"—George began to laugh because he couldn't finish the rhyme. "I see I need poetry," he said, "go on!"

"And you must make up your mind to read five pages of history every week, and not in a schoolbook, either."

George whistled, "Five pages! Well, that isn't very much. I wish we had a vestpocket edition of some historian, the pages about two inches square. But I know I ought to read history. I told the teacher the other day that Chinese Gordon was the great New York editor. But she said I had mixed him up with James Gordon Bennett. I'm always mixing up facts. They are in a perfect mess in my brain, that's a fact! Now for the last thing!"

"Have a blank book, and write down what book you read in, and how much you read. It's a kind of a secretary book."

"That's fun!" cried George, rising. "Let's go and hunt up a blank book, and begin right now. But I wonder if we couldn't get some of the boys and girls to join? Then we could meet together once a week, and have a regular jolly time."

But I will have to wait until next week to tell about the way George and Jennie started their society. In the meantime, if my readers like the Advance Society idea, write to me, telling me they will join, and at the same time send me the funniest story they can write for this department.

THE TWO PATHS.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The Book of Proverbs is the national anthology of Israel. It is a collection of short, gem-like sayings, drawn from the experience of every-day life, and gathered into a book made up of widely diverse elements. The statements of the book are to the effect that it contains material from different periods, and the indications are clear that the proverbs gathered represent sayings coming from all classes of people through long periods of time. The process of proverb-making is common to all nations. Greek and Latin proverbs, Chinese and Indian proverbs, English proverbs, especially such as are found in the old ballads, and American proverbs in great variety are familiar to us. Such sayings as, "Honesty is the best policy," "It takes a thief to catch a thief," "A rolling stone gathers no moss" and "Its an ill wind that blows nobody good," are representatives of a great number of aphorisms, in which much sound experience has been packed into very few words. No one person made all these. People do not sit down, think hard and write proverbs. Rather such gems of wisdom as are found in brief form in all languages grow out of the thought and experience of all ranks and occupations. Sometimes a man comes to be noted for his sayings some of which live after him. Such a man was Benjamin Franklin. His "Poor Richard's Almanac" contained so many such sayings that to this day he is known as one whose utterances were likely to be terse and notable. When we come upon a good proverb we are accustomed to attribute it to him without knowing surely that he said it, but with a confidence that no one was more likely to utter it than he. Thus he is the common denominator for American proverbs.

Similar was Solomon's relation to the proverbs of Israel. He was known to have observed closely, to have been possessed of great practical sagacity and to have composed many sonnets and wise sayings (1 Kings 4:29-34). Collections of proverbs bearing his name circulated in the early period of the kingdom. To these additions were made, especially during the period of literary activity in the reign of Hezekiah, comprising proverbs that were found in common use at the time, and were therefore believed to be of Solomonic origin (Prov. 25:1). Other collections or fragments of collections came into circulation probably later, such as the oracle of Agur, the son of Jekah (Prov. 30:1) the words of King Lamuel (Prov. 31:1) and the anonymous acrostic in praise of the model woman (Prov. 31:1-31). It is probable that the man or circle of men who gathered all this material into our collection added chapters 1-9 as an introduction, dealing with the nature of wisdom and folly respectively, personifying them under the figure of two women, the one inviting to the choice of the good, the other soliciting to the pursuit of evil.

To the sages of Israel the man who followed good was a wise man, because goodness is in itself a possession richer than all one can obtain, and it brings every other real blessing. On the other hand, evil is of itself unprofitable when viewed from any rational ground. The bad man is not only a sinner—he is a fool. Perhaps this is the strongest appeal that can be made to some natures. There are people to whom it would be of no consequence if you could persuade them that they were doing wrong, but who would be very much disquieted by the thought that they were acting oddly, or foolishly, or in bad form. It is this class to which the wise men made their strongest appeal. "Do not be ill-mannered, do not do things that are in poor taste—be respectable." The man who does evil breaks all these rules of good society. One may object that this is not the highest appeal to make to people, but the teacher of ethics frequently finds it quite effective.

The common form of teaching in these first nine chapters of the Proverbs is paternal. They might fittingly be named "counsels of any father to any son." In the present lesson the contrast between the two ways of living is shown. This expression is itself a figure of speech, which has become common in all languages and serves to illustrate the truth that nearly all our phrases used to describe abstract ethical and spiritual truth are taken from some physical action or process. The prophets spoke of the return of Israel from Babylon upon the highway or road which God would construct for them through the desert. But only the righteous could travel by that path (Isa. 35), and so "the way of the righteous" (Psa. 1:6) came to be spoken of as descriptive no longer of an actual road, but of a method of life. This language is frequent in the New Testament. In John's preaching "the way" was the course of action marked out by the coming Messiah, and for this the Forerunner prepared, like a herald clearing the street before a king (Mk. 1:2). Hence in the apostolic days the favorite term for Christianity was "the way" (Acts 9:2; 22:4; 24:14). It has become so common in our speech that we easily forget that it is taken from the action of a traveler journeying upon a highway, where the choice between diverging paths is necessary and frequent. In the lesson the figure is constantly employed. The father has guided the son in the way of wisdom, has led him in paths that are straight. He goes, sometimes he runs. In one path he has difficulties and stumbles, in the other his progress is rapid. One path he is to enter, the other he must avoid. Our path grows broader and more attractive to the end, like the increasing light of morning to the glory of noon; the other path is dark and forbidding, and one is sure to stumble and fall in it.

It will be noticed that this description of the two paths seems in striking contrast to that of the Savior (Mk. 7:13-14), who advises his disciples to choose the narrow and difficult path rather than the one that is broad, easy and most frequented. But Jesus refers to the external aspects of the two paths, the wise men to their real character, as proved by experience. With Jesus we shall easily see that the road to evil is at first sight the more attractive; but with the sages we know that the other is the road affording real satisfaction.

The temperance application of the lesson is obvious. There is no father worth the name who would not counsel his son to avoid the habit of drinking any intoxicant as he would avoid serpents. Even fathers who are drinkers, and perhaps especially such, would warn their sons away from the awful results of such a practice. It brings one into the company of men whose whole purpose in life is depraved and vile. This is far more true to-day than it was then. At that time the people used fruit in great quantities, and its juice, fresh and unfermented, was a common article of drink. The older wine was also used and men often became drunken, but there was no class of people who made a business of seducing young men to drink, as do the saloonkeepers of the present day. Our quicker and more nervous life has made the ravages of drink far more terrible than in the slow and quiet East. And thus our drink problem of to-day is a hundredfold more complicated than was that of the writers of Proverbs. If they had cause to warn against such danger, how much more have we! If in an age when the greatest danger from serving drink consisted in the liability to occasional overindulgence, fathers had cause to take serious thought regarding the disaster and folly of drinking; then in our day, when ten thousand temptations wait at every turn, where our young men have to run the gauntlet of solicitation, not only from the organized representatives of the traffic, backed by the state, and from companions who have gone a step into self-destruction without being quite conscious of it, and without intending to do wrong, how much more have we! Not till the time when patriotism, regard for public welfare, the reign of conscience in politics and the supremacy of righteousness to every other interest shall arrive can we hope to be free from the curse of strong drink. But the struggle will go on, the field will be conquered slowly, new victories will be added to those already won and the newer generation will be taught self-respect and the love of God and purity as no other has been. Already the sky brightens along the horizon, and the signs of promise hang like the banners of God against the black-breasted night.

*Sunday-school lesson for Nov. 27, 1898—Temperance (Prov. 4:10-19). Golden Text—My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not (Prov. 1:10). Lesson Outline—1. Fatherly words (10-12); 2. Advice and warning (13-17); 3. The two paths (18, 19).

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

No book contains more of wisdom for daily conduct than the Book of Proverbs; it was taught to children as the most valuable part of the Bible a century ago; Mr. Compbell was more familiar with it than with any other part of the Scriptures; it is not out of date yet. Those who know should teach what they have learned by experience; and happy is the child who learns from the life-lessons of his father. The rewards of right living are not alone in the future life, but here and now; an honest, self-respecting, clean and temperate man lives longer, is happier and brings a blessing on all he meets. It is worth everything to a child to be started in the right path by the faithful instructions of good parents and teachers. The advice and counsel of those we can trust are of greater value than all possessions. It is a terrible thought that some of our fellow human beings live by getting other people to do wrong; whose whole trade tends to bring misery to the world. In so far as we do what causes others to sin, are we not as bad as they? A life that seeks to follow the will of God grows happier all the time. If we are not happy, is it not because there is something wrong with us?

Christian Endeavor.

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR NOV. 27.

GREAT REFORMS THAT NEED OUR HELP.

There is no business in the world requiring so much patience as the reforming business. The mills of God grind slowly, but the reformers want them to grind fast. Theo. Parker said, "The trouble is that God is not in a hurry, and I am, and the defect of most reformers is that they get in too big a hurry." Nevertheless, if we consent to be patient and let our reforms grow gradually we may be sure they will grow. Christian Endeavorers can do a great deal for the reform of current abuses. Christian Endeavorers can influence the whole church, and if the church would rise up in its power it could run this country. Some of the reforms to which we should give our attention may be mentioned.

Nearest at hand of all, perhaps, is dishonesty in commercial transactions. A merchant declares he is going to have a sweep-out or sale. Perhaps he puts a row of brooms up over his front window to indicate clearance; then he doubles the price on everything and sells out to "bargain hunters." And we Christians encourage this kind of thing by running after "Cheap John" trade. A little two-year-old girl recently made believe that she was reading the newspaper, and they all heard her saying, "bargains, bargains." Children are wonderful imitators. All this running after the bargains is sure to corrupt merchants. If we want an article let us pay an honest price for it or do without.

Another reform could be carried on by Christian people in municipal affairs. In a great many cases, especially in smaller towns, a little agitation would correct many abuses. Our laws are openly violated, saloons run after hours and other public resorts of the worst character are permitted in violation of the law and nobody does anything. In very many towns if some one honest Christian Endeavorer were to undertake the agitation he could clean things out. Is your good citizenship committee awake?

There are reforms needed in the relation of employer and employe. Labor reforms are needed, moreover, almost as much in the interest of the employer as that of the employe. Poor Illinois! How it reaches out its bleeding hands to all of us and calls for reform. Men, members in our churches, too, are working over hours, some of them fifteen hours out of twenty-four, are scarcely permitted to see their families, and are absolutely prohibited from entering their churches; and here, too, perhaps, a few words in some public print, or a little private effort by some Christian Endeavorer might inaugurate reform. If our young people once determine to grapple with such questions of social life much may gradually be accomplished.

And what shall be said of the liquor reform? The necessity of it is plainly evident on all hands; how to accomplish it, is the gravest difficulty, what steps should be taken, what beginning should be made, is puzzling many an honest, thinking man. Some great organized attempts have been made, which have proved complete failures, and what to do next, the temperance forces seem, at present, unable to determine. Since the third party movement has proved a failure, much as the third party movement proved a failure in abolition days, it seems very much as if we should turn our attention, as was done in that very emergency, to one of the great parties. Does not history repeat itself in reforms as in other matters? And is it not possible that if the Christian Endeavorers should say to the political world, "Whichever of the two great parties will first adopt a prohibition plank, we will vote for," might not the thing be accomplished? Ah, but we say that is turning a religious society into a political power. So be it; it is for a religious end. In the Breckenridge campaign, in Kentucky, every religious organization in the community was turned, for the time being, into a political organization. If ever we are to accomplish moral reforms we must begin in an organized and business manner, and then not be too impatient of results, but be willing to wait for God's own good time.

Our Authority for Missions.

W. J. Lhamon, Director.

The introductory chapter to the second yearbook on missions places especial emphasis on the risen Christ and his commission. This emphasis may well be redoubled in the present article. It is impossible to overstate the authority of Jesus in this beneficent work of seeking and saving the lost. If the primary meaning of the word missionary is "one sent," Jesus fulfilled that meaning wholly, for he is the one who is sent by the Father's love, that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." The authority for missions rests, therefore, not alone in the commission of the Savior, though that would have been abundantly sufficient for all who seek to obey him. But it rests in the very being of the Savior himself; he is the primal Christian missionary; his life is a missionary incarnation; his death is the pleading love of the missionary martyr; his resurrection is the assertion in miraculous form of his missionary triumph over sin and loss and death, and his commission is the logical and inevitable outcome of his whole career. There is no incongruity between the preaching and praying and dying Christ on the one hand and the risen and commanding Christ on the other. The commission is not an afterthought. All that it expresses Jesus from the first intended. The commission is the sublime conclusion and climax of a life that was sublime and climacteric. In it there is summed up the whole meaning of the Savior's presence on earth, and the whole force of his heavenly career in human form.

All the meaning of Christ's life, therefore, is enfolded in his commission, and is being unfolded age by age in the missions that are truly his. The presentation of Christ as Christ, by whomsoever, to whomsoever, whensoever, wheresoever and by whatsoever means that are Christly is a part of this unfolding.

To neglect, to refuse or to ignore this work is to stand in an attitude foreign to if not antagonistic to Christ. Such an attitude contradicts the profession of one's faith in Christ. Fundamentally, the confession of Jesus means the assumption of a missionary career. Baptism into Christ means baptism into the purposes of his life, and baptism into his purposes is baptism into his commission, and into his world-wide mission, and into all his missions. Every intelligently baptized Disciple arises from the water a missionary and is bound by all the sacredness of his baptismal vows to fulfill the commission according to his capabilities and opportunities. Otherwise, we cry, "Lord, Lord," and do not the thing he says.

Missionary societies are Christly expedients for the accomplishment of our bounden mission. They are Christly because they are brotherly, sisterly, simple, practical and directed toward the supreme purpose of Christ's own life. For the same reasons they are scriptural. In the light of Christ's life, under the constraint of his love, in keeping with his commission, the Bethany C. E. readers are invited to study, during their second year's course, the missionary societies and fields and forces of their own people. Step by step with the progress of the study may there come accessions of interest in and enthusiasm for the work, and may many and many a reader rise to the conviction that his life in Christ rises to the conviction that his life in Christ rises to completion only as he identifies his purposes in life with the purpose of Christ.

The Health of the Hair

is indicated by its condition. When the natural secretions decrease; when the hair becomes dry, splits at the ends and comes out in combing; when the gloss disappears and the hair becomes gray or faded, the ill health of the hair is indicated. The success of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is due to the fact that it restores the hair-producing organs to their natural vigor. It encourages and promotes the secretions of the hair follicles, and thus gray or faded hair regains its original color, new growth begins, and lost lustre is restored.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for fifteen years. It causes the hair to keep its natural color and is a positive cure for baldness." — T. H. WEYANT, Weyant, Pa.

MAGAZINES.

The November ReligiousReview of Reviews is a very spiritual number and will not fail to particularly interest ministers. The contributed articles this month are from the pens of gifted and singularly successful writers, and the departments are rich in spiritual food. Published monthly. American Tract Society Building, New York.

The initial number of the Ledger Monthly comes to us in an autumn cover of very great beauty. A wistful, dreamy, beautiful woman looks out of a network of leaves in the brilliant colors of the October landscape. It is a symbolical picture of the American autumn, characteristic in color, form and expression. Rarely has anything more beautiful appeared in the popular art of to-day.

The Atlantic Monitor is the name of a new monthly eight-page journal published at Harper, Kan.

The Peace Commission in Paris is described and illustrated in the November Magazine number of the Outlook by a staff correspondent in Paris. Jacob A. Riis, the author of "How the Other Half Lives," contributes a graphic article concerning the "New York Police Department." Edward Everest Hale gives in this issue the eleventh installment of his "James Russell Lowell and His Friends," which will be concluded in the December magazine issue. Paul Bourget is the author of a story entitled "Antigone," which portrays a lofty personality. Among the illustrated articles in this number are a picturesque account of a visit to the country of Sitting Bull, by Rosa T. Shelton, and an article by Dr. Amory H. Bradford on Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," with special reference to a beautiful new edition soon to be published, from which some remarkable illustrations are reproduced.

ARTZ.

Mr. Edwin Artz, of Augusta, Ill., died at his daughter's in Plattsburg, Mo., on the 30th of October, 1898, while on a visit there. He was born in Shipenburg, Penn., Dec. 24, 1837. Married to Miss Mary Helen Dixson in 1863. To them were born eight children, one of whom is dead. He and his wife were baptized by the writer in March, 1870, soon after he was chosen superintendent of the Sunday-school, which place he filled for over 28 years. His wife dying he married Miss Mary Helen Waldeck, who with his children mourn his departure. He filled in a large measure what is meant by father, husband, neighbor and Christian. At his home in Augusta, Ill., and in the presence of many friends, the funeral services were conducted by the undersigned on the 2nd of November. E. J. LAMPTON.

CRANE.

J. B. Crane, the honored subject of this sketch, was born at Mentz, Cayuga County, N. Y., September 21, 1822. He lived at the place of his birth until he was 18 years of age. He received a thorough education at Auburn, N. Y. When but 14 years of age he united with the church, and from that time on devoted the whole of his life to the cause of Christ. This he has accomplished with an eloquent tongue and a consecrated pen. He was an earnest, able and powerful preacher. He had deep convictions of truth, and yet held the truth in love for all his brethren in Christ. He kept abreast of the times and ready to aid in any movement to further the cause of his Savior. He was posted on all subjects and acquainted with many fields of investigation. He was liberal almost to a fault, and none ever asked a favor but it was granted. As a preacher his thought was rich, chaste and scriptural. Because of the natural bent of his mind he took delight in the profounder themes of our religion, treating them both from a philosophical and a scriptural point of view. He could soar to the heights of the noblest thoughts or descend to dig about the roots of any system of truth. He was well acquainted with the different systems of theology. He knew their limits and formative principles. He knew where they touched and where they diverged. He had clear convictions as to which was in accordance with the Holy Scriptures. He was learned in the different sciences. He took delight in the study of them all. From these wider fields of physical science he gathered a rich store of illustration and allusion which gave great wealth of resource when he came to speak or to write. He loved the natural sciences, and delighted to discuss the conflicting systems of metaphysics and ethics. No man had wider learning in these tracts of thought. He took hold of phrenology and mastered it as a branch of metaphysics. He found time to become a skillful physician. He took in both the alopathic and homæopathic systems, and could practice in either or combine in one treatment the good in both. He loved to use his pen. The last years of his life he spent in quiet and retirement preparing several books for publication, into which he has gathered the cream of his learning. It is to be hoped that they will soon be in the hands of the public, that all may have the benefit of these mature labors. He was a true friend. He never failed those whom he loved, whether in his own home, which was enriched and beautified by his love, or in the community. No one could say that Dr. Crane ever tendered his friendship and then acted unworthy of the highest friendship. His wife, with whom he had spent more than 50 happy years, mourns a great loss. A daughter and son, whose affection cheered him, abide on this side while he has crossed over. A grandson, upon whom his heart was centered, in young manhood remains to follow him as he followed Christ. The church has sustained a great loss in the death of this soldier of the cross.

A. A. COCKE, D. D.

Waynesboro, Va., Nov. 3rd, 1898.

MAC EL'REY.

In their home, Ninth Street, near Trainer, Deleware County, Pennsylvania, November 4, 1898, Emma T., wife of Dr. Joseph H. Mac El'Rey, entered into immortality. She said: "There is no death. Death is but transition." Her life and character composed her only proper eulogy.

PAGGETT.

Hiram Paggett died August 22, 1898. He was born April 4, 1804, near Livermore, Maine. In 1818 he with his parents moved to Ohio. In 1829 he was married to Jane Simons. In 1850 he with his family moved to Iowa, where the remainder of his life was spent. To the couple were born six sons and three daughters, his wife and five children having preceded him to the better land. He early gave his life to Christ, and was an elder in the church for more than 50 years; has been a reader and subscriber to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from the time of the first publication. He was a grand man. None knew him but to love him, and an association with him was to make one better. None knew this better than did his grandchildren and great grandchildren who early learned to reverence so saintly a person. KATE UPDIKE.

FOR YOU

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common-sense way, that is, by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

Children's Rally Day for America.

Here are some of the responses made to the call for Children's Rally for America:

Every superintendent, who seeks the best interests of his Sunday-school, will not fail to observe "Children's Rally Day for America," and take the best collection possible. The idea of thanksgiving and love of country unite naturally at this time, and rightly presented will draw large numbers, and there is no better way to utilize the enthusiasm awakened than to get all to give liberally to save America for Christ. I would observe this day for the school's sake if I had no interest in Home Missions. But this is an effort for missions not made last year, and let it not be feeble, but one that will count toward the $100,000 that must be raised for our Home Mission work this year.—A. M. HARVOUT, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Our Sunday-school will observe Children's Day for Home Missions. Please send to my address by return mail fifty copies of "Children's Rally for America."—J. E. J. WHITSLAR, Evansville, Ind.

I was glad to notice the plan for a "Children's Rally Day for America." I am on a committee for the Harvest Concert, and should like helps and suggestions. — MRS. NEWTON KNOW, Worcester, Mass.

Here came a call for the "Exercise" before the sample reached them: Have you any special exercise for Home Mission Rally Day in November? — H. E. HOWARD, Springfield, Mass.

Please send me twenty copies of programs for Thanksgiving Children's Day. Our school will observe the Rally Day.—J. H. HAZELRIGG, New Castle, Ind.

Please send me such suggestions and helps as you can to assist in the observance of Children's Rally Day for America.—W. A. SNIFF, Ardmore, I. T.

Your sample copy of the Home Missionary was received. Please send me two dozen copies.—MRS. L. O. KNIPP, Piqua, Ohio.

Your special issue of the American Home Missionary was received by our school, and we have decided to-day to observe the Rally.—J. W. GUY, Waupun, Pa.

Will you be kind enough to send us the "American Home Missionary," as I am sure it will greatly aid us in our Rally Day for Home Missions.—MRS. S. E. RIGGLE, Washington, Pa.

G. W. Muckley writes us that the Sunday-schools in Missouri are falling into line with great enthusiasm for Children's Rally Day for America.

We would like to have programs and necessary materials for Children's Thanksgiving Sunday.—CONRAD WOLF, Kokomo, Ind.

Our school will observe Rally Day in behalf of Home Missions, November 20th. Yours for a liberal collection. — CHARLES O. BENTON, Boxby, Ind.

Please send me seventy-five copies of Children's Rally for America. We have decided to use it.—W. H. WILSON, Prairie Depot, Ohio.

Please send us "Children's Rally for America." Our school will have the exercise. —W. Y. ALLEN, Elizabethtown, Ky.

Direct Route Between THE East and West.

Passengers going to any point East or West, and desiring a quick and comfortable trip, should take the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway. It is the only line operating its own through trains between

ST. LOUIS, SPRINGFIELD,
PANA, VINCENNES,
LOUISVILLE,
CINCINNATI,
and NEW YORK,

—VIA—

WASHINGTON, D. C., BALTIMORE and PHILADELPHIA.

It also has the enviable reputation for speed, comfort and safety, and the regularity of its trains is proverbial with the traveling public. The traveler over the B. & O. is permitted to catch glimpses of the greatest scenery in America. Riding in solidly vestibuled palace trains, you see a photographer's paradise, the sombre Allegheny Mountains, the beautiful Shenandoah River, the historic Potomac, and the Valleys of the Virginias.

The "Royal Blue Service" consists of the most magnificently furnished Pullman drawing-room sleepers, and luxuriously appointed dining cars operated by this company. Meals are served a la carte west of Grafton, and table d hote east of that point. The coaches are all lighted with Pintsch gas, and have the latest conveniences, including the most comfortably designed smoking apartments and lavatories. All trains on this line connect in the Union Depots with those for points in above-named territory.

The B. & O. S. W. is a favorite route with the large commercial buyers when traveling between New York and the West.

Publishers' Notes.

We will be glad to send samples of all Sunday-school supplies to any superintendents who have not been using our Sunday-school literature. We believe it the most complete of any now offered, as it is adapted for use for all ages in the Sunday-school, from the primary class to the old folks' class. If not using our supplies, examine them before placing your order for the coming year. Address the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo.

If your Sunday-school expects to greet Christmas with good cheer by rendering an appropriate concert, we would suggest that you send for our new Christmas exercise, "The Wonderful Child." This is the latest concert prepared by W. W. Dowling. It embraces songs, Scripture quotations and poetical recitations. The concert is not difficult to learn, and the average Sunday-school can render it in an acceptable manner.

The price is 5 cents per copy or 50 cents per dozen, postpaid.

Among the many books now appearing upon the subject of teaching it is both interesting and significant to find one devoted to the greatest teacher of all—"Jesus as a Teacher," by B. A. Hinsdale. Prof. Hinsdale is well fitted by training, experience and sympathy to write upon this subject. His broad knowledge of Jewish institutions and customs has enabled him to throw about his subject a charm and interest not usually found in books on teaching. The book is full of practical suggestions for the schoolroom work of to-day.—The Inland Educator, Terre Haute, Ind.

"Jesus as a Teacher" is a book of 330 pages, neatly bound in cloth, and the price is $1.25.

The Christian Lesson Commentary on the International Bible Studies for the year 1899, by W. W. Dowling, is fresh from the press. Besides the original matter it contains thoughts gathered from a large field of the best scholarship of the world, making it the cream of the best commentators. The Sunday-school teacher that will carefully study this work will be prepared to appear before his class as an instructor. We will be glad to mail sample pages of this commentary to any desiring to examine them. The book contains nearly 400 pages, and the price is $1.00 per copy, postpaid.

The Mormon—Christian War.

Bro. Chas. F. Richardson, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Ogden, Utah, writes:

Any way I can help you, will be glad to do it. I shall speak of you and your work and tracts in church papers. Keep your courage up; our sympathy and prayers are yours.

Bro. R. has no mean reputation as a "Mormon fighter" himself. He knows what it is to battle with a close organization within the shadow of its head temple and endowment house. A word of cheer is refreshing. I am certainly, as Bro. Garrison and others will testify, getting a free expression from "the other side," of what by no means could be called "sympathy or prayers" with or for me or my work. This I expected and expect. It is but a proof, and a good one, of the good work I am trying to do.

The following is the most *cents*ible communication I have received for a long time:

R. B. NEAL.—Dear Sir: Enclosed find $5.00 to help carry on your well begun work.

A UTAH SISTER.

That's all I know about it except that the $5.00 came in just when badly needed. To give some idea of the expense necessary to carry on this work I use the following letter, just received, as a text:

BRO. NEAL:—There are from two to four Mormon elders in each county in this state, and I wish to help expose their false teaching. They held a conference in Tallahutchie County in August, near where I was holding a meeting. There were forty elders in attendance. Some of them tramped one hundred and fifty miles to get there. . . . . .

I am glad you are doing so much to expose their system. Hope that God will bless your efforts. A. H. SMITH.

Denmark, Miss.

I was truly glad to get a letter on this from "a Smith." Lately I have been absorbed with the "Smith family" who gave this system to the world and who defend it.

I could only send this brother fifteen cents' worth of tracts. He ought to have a thousand to scatter. An average of 1,000 tracts to each county in the state of Mississippi would be small compared to the number Mormons scatter. Their elders are bound to leave a tract in every house. Put cost of tracts, at even one-half cent each for printing and postage, allow 1,000 for each county and multiply tracts and cost by number of counties in the state. This will give some idea of the money needed to wage a war as it should be fought. Would cost hundreds of dollars to tractize thoroughly each state. A tract ought to be put in the tracks of every Mormon elder.

I have the MS. of three more new and needed tracts ready to hand to a publisher, but lack funds. These tracts have been tested, or will be, by such men as F. D. Power, Russell Errett and Prof. I. B. Grubbs and others before sent out. I want, need, and must have, partners in this work. Fifty dollars now will put out the tract in good shape and large numbers. Bro. Power wrote this prediction over its front: "The author will soon be able to report to civilization in the immortal words of Bill Anthony, 'The ship is blown up and is sinking.'" What brother or sister or church will bear all or any part of the expense of this tract, now past due? I stand in hope if I sink in despair. R. B. NEAL.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The work of the Spanish-American peace commissions in Paris is rapidly coming to a finish, in spite of the strenuous efforts which the Spanish representatives have made to avoid or postpone the inevitable. There has been much quibbling, and many futile attempts to import side issues into thr discussion of the Philippine question. The delay has doubtless been prompted, not by any hope of winning concessions from our administration, but by the hope of exciting European sympathy and interference, if possible, and the desire to have it known, both by the Spanish people and by Spain's creditors, that no point had been yielded without resistance. The definite demand made by the American commissioners includes the cession of the entire Philippine group to the United States, in compensation for which Spain is to be reimbursed for her expenditures on internal improvements in the islands. The Spanish protest to this demand is based on the phraseology of the protocol, which says nothing as to the possession of the Philippines, but only leaves the disposition of them to be arranged by the joint commission. The distinction between the two terms is subtle. The administration thinks that it is fictitious. The diplomatic correspondence which led up to the protocol shows that there was a shrewd attempt on the part of the Spanish representatives to leave some such loophole, but it also shows that this design was detected and frustrated.

The text of the Spanish reply to the explicit demands of our commissioners has not yet been made public, but evidently it was not an acceptance. Negotiations were suspended for a week while the government at Madrid was being consulted and the reply was being framed. Judge Day and his colleagues are now at work on an equally elaborate reply to the reply, and public expectation will be disappointed if this does not demand an immediate and final answer, and demand it in such a tone as will indicate that further delay will be dangerous. If correctly represented, Judge Day's reports to the President, although brief and not couched in strong terms, indicate a belief that Spain will yield as soon as further delay is seen to be impossible. She would be insane to take any other course. The suggestion of arbitration is not pertinent at this juncture, though an appeal for it might appear plausible. Arbitration is an excellent substitute for war, but even the most peaceable of nations would not care to admit it as the last resort of a defeated enemy. Spain relied on force as long as she had any force to rely on, and her sudden conversion at this point to the sweet reasonableness of arbitration would savor somewhat of deathbed repentance. Saying nothing about the question whether or not we need the Philippines, or whether or not the Philippines need us, the obvious fact is that Spain is out of it to stay.

Kaiser Wilhelm's pilgrimage is about at an end. Every one will breathe a little easier when he is safely back in his own empire, for unquestionably it was a rather reckless procedure for him to leave the affairs of state just at this time to go rambling off through Syria. It would have been very awkward if anything had happened to him, and yet just now is the time when things are happening to princes and potentates with appalling frequency. The whole journey had a decidedly stage-y effect. A Protestant pilgrimage, under the patronage and protection of a Mohammedan monarch, and inaugurated with the approval of the Pope, must necessarily contain enough incongruities to make it picturesque. But William rendered it bizarre by the free exercise of his natural talent for attitudinizing in comic opera fashion. And for this reason, too, it will be a relief to know that it is all over and he is back at his capital. Much comment was aroused by the semi-official announcement that the return from Malta would be by way of Spain. Although it was well understood that the Kaiser would make his visit incognito, and although it was authoritatively stated that the only reason for choosing this route was the fear that the Empress' health might suffer from a too sudden transition from the climate of Palestine to that of Germany at this season, yet the public insisted on seeing in the plan an expression of sympathy with Spain and hostility to the United States. In view of this unanimous interpretation of the visit, and especially in view of the protests which came from the highest sources in his own government, the Emperor has abandoned this part of the plan and will return direct to Germany.

The powers of Europe are not swift in concerted action, but sometimes they bring something to pass in the course of time. Two years ago the Government of Crete seemed to demand immediate readjustment. Little Grece instantly interposed, and did her best. The world looked on with breathless interest, but the powers were not excited. A languid step or two, to prevent Turkey from reaping too rich a harvest from her victory, was the extent of their activity. Crete did not seem to have gained much out of it all, and gradually, with the rise of new crises and complications in other quarters, Crete dropped out of the consciousness of the world. We had virtually forgotten the existence of that island with her grievances. But the wheels have been turning all the while. The evacuation of Crete by the Turkish forces has been proceeding slowly, but on Tuesday of last week the troop ship sailed carrying the last Turkish soldiers away from the island. Prince George of Greece is now on the way to Crete to take charge of affairs as the high commissioner of the powers. The autonomy of Crete, under the supervision of the powers of Europe, thereby becomes a fact.

Every new public utterance of the British political leaders gives new evidence of the desire of that government for a cordial understanding with the United States and the satisfaction which it derives from the fact that the European powers in their plans and forecasts are beginning to link the names of Great Britain and the United States as two powers which may confidentally be expected to act in harmony with each other and to play into each each other's hands as against the rest of the world. That this is the current belief in regard to our relations with England, there can be no doubt. This is the interpretation which the world places upon our policy of expansion. Lord Salisbury's speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet touched upon that topic, and Joseph Chamberlain's speech last week at the National Liberal Unionists' Conference was even more definite. In regard also to the relations between England and France, Mr. Chamberlain's speech was more explicit than the somewhat vague and disappointing utterance of the premier. The occupation of Fashoda is only one of a number of unfriendly acts which France has been committing during the past ten years, wherever and whenever opportunity offered. As another act of the same sort and even more obviously malicious in its intent, we mention the ever-increasing demands of France for concessions to their Newfoundland fisheries—demands which, in Mr. Chamberlain's judgment are made solely with a view to embarrassing British policy in that quarter since the French interests there are a vanishing quantity. In view of this disposition on the part of France, Great Britain's rigid insistence upon her exclusive rights in the Nile Valley are expected to have a salutary effect. Mr. Chamberlain's remarks disclose a chronic state of unfriendliness between France and England, in his opinion at least, which is likely at any time to become acute. The Fashoda incident may be settled by the permanent withdrawal of the French expedition, but this was only one incident in a series, and another occasion for friction may easily arise.

Meanwhile, Major Marchand is starting south again from Cairo for Fashoda. It is announced that his return does not signify a resumption of the military occupation of the post, but that it is preliminary to an exploring expedition which Major Marchand will conduct in the region of some of the little-known tributaries of the Upper Nile. The original plan, of which Marchand's occupation of Fashoda formed a part, involved two military expeditions which were to meet at that point. One was to start in the French possessions in the Congo region and travel northeast to Fashoda, securing control of the territory passed over; this is the part which was accomplished by Major Marchand. The other was to start at the French station on the Coast of the Gulf of Aden and move northwest to Fashoda. The success of the two expeditions would have completed the chain of French influence across Africa from east to west and would thereby have foiled the British plan of long standing, to secure an unbroken line of possessions through the center of the continent from north to south. But the second of the two French expeditions was not successfully carried through. The plan failed and Major Marchand was left unsupported in an advanced position where he could have been at the mercy of the Dervishes, had not the timely victory of Gen. Kitchener removed that source of danger. The British victory in the Soudan, therefore, probably saved the French expedition from annihilation, but at the same time destroyed any lingering hope for its success. Major Marchand is now returning up the Nile to Fashoda, whence it is believed that he will proceed with his exploring expedition southeast to the French station on the Gulf of Aden; that is, he will follow roughly, in a reverse direction, the line of march laid out for the second military expedition, which should have joined him at Fashoda.

The latest word from the peace commissioners at Paris is that the Americans have informed the Spaniards that the United States must have the entire Philippine group of islands, and for a treaty cession of the same the United States will pay $20,000,000 to Spain and throw the islands open to the commerce of the world. Spain has been given until the 28th of the present month to accept these terms and the opinion seems to still prevail at Washington that she will accept without further delay. ——At this writing a terrible blizzard is raging throughout the entire northwestern quarter of the United States. In Kansas, Nebraska and Montana it is exceedingly severe. The storm broke upon this city on Monday afternoon and by Tuesday morning we had a genuine introduction to winter. The storm extends as far south as Texas, where freezing weather and fierce winds are reported.——The Trans-Mississippi Good Roads and Public Improvement Association of Missouri convened in this city Monday afternoon and will be in session two days. Every congressional district was well represented. About 350 delegates were present, representing pretty much all the busy occupations of life. The most important business transacted was the recommendation of new legislation and amendments to the Constitution, authorizing the levying of additional taxes for road improvement purposes.

EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE.

We have already published a call for a conference on the subject of education, to be held at Moberly, beginning at three o'clock, Tuesday, Dec. 6. The circumstances under which this conference is called and the condition of our educational interests in the state make it a matter of very great importance that there be a good general representation at this meeting. It is important, not only to insure the doing of the right things, but to prevent any unwise action which might prove detrimental to the very cause it is intended to serve. What should be done? What can be done?

We can at least recognize the facts as they exist, and guide our course accordingly. To be more specific, here are some facts that must be faced:

1. We have such institutions in the state as Christian University, at Canton, Central Christian College, at Albany, the Orphan Schools at Camden and Fulton, and Christian College and the Missouri Bible College, at Columbia. Each one of these institutions feels the need of assistance, and is seeking to secure such financial aid as it can from the brotherhood of the state, particularly from that part of the state in which it is located.

2. No one of these institutions receives or has any right to hope for the unanimous support of the brotherhood of the state. The part of the state in which each of these schools is located would protest against subordinating its own interests to those of another institution situated in a different part of the state. Northeast Missouri, for instance, would repudiate any action of any conference that advised the cessation of all efforts on the part of the friends of Christian University to promote its endowment until Central Christian College was adequately endowed. The other institutions of the state would do the same thing under the same circumstances, and each of them, we believe, would be justified in such action. No one institution among us commands the co-operation of the entire brotherhood of the state nor is regarded by the brotherhood as having a first claim on its support. While the Bible College at Columbia, finds its supporters scattered throughout the state and is not limited to any locality, yet there are many brethren in the state who recognize the prior claims of some other institution, and who would not be coerced into supporting it by any resolution which an educational conference might pass.

3. There is not the slightest probability of the concentration of the entire brotherhood of the state in an effort to establish a new institution, in a different location, leaving uncared for the institutions that already exist. But, granted the consent, the means would not be forthcoming for its adequate equipment and endowment.

Now these are facts, stubborn facts, which it would be very unwise to ignore. What policy do they indicate? The answer seems very clear to us. There is but one thing which the educational conference at Moberly can do. When it has learned the condition and needs of these various schools, it may approve, or *im*prove, if it can, any plan which any of these institutions may have devised for the increase of its endowment, or for its better equipment extend such advice as may seem wise to the various schools, and commend them to the brotherhood of the state. It may, perhaps, in addition to this, appoint an educational board for the state to exercise a general advisory influence over these various educational interests, through which these several institutions may bring their claims before the brotherhood of the state.

Any attempt, as indicated by the resolution passed by the last conference, to select one or two institutions on which to concentrate the support of the entire brotherhood of the state, and to neglect all other institutions, would be futile. Such a resolution, if passed, would be a "dead letter," except that it would serve to stir up antagonisms that need rather to be allayed. Speaking from the point of view of our entire educational interests in the state, we hope that no such action will be taken.

A DIVINE MISSION—WHAT?

III.—UNITY.

We have already characterized the early part of the present century as a period of intense sectarian strife and of most pronounced denominationalism. The emphasis laid upon the denominational peculiarities was such as to excite the most bitter antagonism between the religious parties. In this condition of things mutual co-operation was out of the question. The characteristic of brotherly love, which was so marked a feature of the early Church, had been well-nigh obliterated by sectarian animosities. It is scarcely necessary now to point out how contrary all this was and is to the express teaching of Christ and his apostles.

Imagine the effect of this state of feeling in communities where various religious bodies were struggling for the supremacy, and even in families which were often divided by religious differences. Not unfrequently husbands and wives belonging to different denominations were not permitted to sit together at the Lord's Table. Parents and children were divided often in the same way. An attempt on the part of Thomas Campbell, soon after his arrival in the New World, to gather scattered members of different branches of the Presbyterian Church in communion service in Western Pennsylvania led to his arraignment before the Presbyterian Synod for this irregularity. Indeed, it was this fact, in connection with the great need of closer religious sympathy and co-operation, that opened the eyes of of Thomas and Alexander Campbell to the evils of division.

We have also referred to the fact that in the early part of the present century infidelity was rampant, especially among the more intelligent class of people. Is this fact to be wondered at in view of the type of Christianity which was presented to the world at that time? Nothing could be more distasteful to a man of culture and breadth of sympathy than the narrow bigotry that characterized the religious thought and practice of the times. It was a constant stumblingblock in the way of people who wanted to be religious and did not know what church to join, and who did not desire to incur the displeasure and even animosity of his neighbors by entering any one of the religious parties. It is not to be expected that the human mind in its normal condition can be greatly interested in the class of questions which were discussed so much during that period.

In view of this condition of things and its fatal results upon missionary activity and the influence of the Church upon the social and political life of the time, it is not difficult to see, both in the light of the New Testament teaching and from the state of the Church, that unity must constitute a primary and fundamental principle in any program of reform which would meet the need of the age. If we are at all authorized in interpreting God's purposes in the light of history and of his revealed will, we are surely justified in saying that one of God's purposes in the raising up of this religious reformation was to call attention to the evils of divisions and to sound the note of unity among the divided people of God.

This it did in no uncertain tones. The Declaration and Address issued in 1809 deals very largely with the evils of a divided Church, and points out what its author believed to be the only remedy for these divisions. It claimed that these divisions were not only unscriptural and antiscriptural, but that they were anti-natural, dividing asunder those who by the ties of a common spiritual kinship should be united. It claimed that the Church was "intentionally and constitutionally one," and consequently that any rupture of this unity was a violation of its constitution or organic law, and that the Church could never fulfill its mission in its divided condition, and that it must return to the organic law of its being and to its original unity in Christ before it could hope to enter upon an era of universal triumph.

It can readily be understood that this radical view, as it seemed at the time, excited great opposition. Religious people generally had come to accept denominationalism as the normal condition of the Church. That it would be possible for Christians to put away their divisions and their uncharitable contentions and live together in peace seemed to them utopian if not sacrilegious. Many specious arguments were resorted to to justify the existing divisions. It was said that if the Church were one we should have religious despotism; but this was, as was pointed out at the time, to mistake aggregation and ecclesiastical consolidation for unity. The primitive churches were one in their faith and ordinances, and yet there was no ecclesiasticism to threaten or curtail their liberty. Again it was said, "We cannot all see alike; men are differently constituted, mentally and temperamentally, and will always differ." To this it was replied that men differed in opinion, taste and temperament just as much in the early church as they do now, and yet, in spite of this difference, and in spite of bitter prejudices between Jew and Gentile, the Church was one in Christ, and that it is not necessary for men to all see alike on every question in order to be brethren and live together in peace; that Christian love makes it possible for people of various tastes and temperaments to dwell together in unity.

What has been the result of these nine decades of agitation on the subject of union? In the first place there has been a very large abatement of party feeling and sectarian strife. Members of different religious bodies now freely recognize each other as Christians, and, with few exceptions, can sit down together at the Lord's Table and express their common faith in a common Lord without fear of ecclesiastical interference with their right so to do. In the second place the evils of division and the desirability of a closer union are freely recognized and expressed by Christians of all religious bodies. As a result of this there has come to be very little emphasis placed on purely speculative opinions and beliefs, which make up the warp and woof of denominational distinctions, while there is decidedly more emphasis on vital and fundamental truth. Again, the multiplication of interdenominational organizations, in which Christians of different names and creeds work together harmoniously for the advancement of the kingdom of God, is an index of the growth of sentiment and unity and a prophecy of future triumph. The various religious bodies are co-operating in many ways, as in evangelical alliances, Y. M. C. A. organizations, Y. P. S. C. E. Society, international and interdenominational Sunday-school work, and in other ways for the advancement of the common cause of Christianity.

Are we not justified, in the light of the developments of the present century, and in the light of the express teaching of the New Testament, in understanding that one of God's purposes in our religious movement was to promote the cause of Christian unity? This is not saying, of course, that the change that has come over the religious world on the subject of unity is due entirely to the plea which we have made for unity; but that plea has certainly been an important factor, and the fact that there have been other factors working to the same end only goes to confirm the view that in urging our plea for unity we are working in harmony with the divine purpose.

COLORADO NOTES.

These notes are written in Colorado Springs. This place is about seventy-five miles south of Denver. It has a population of probably 25,000. Colorado College is located here. It has good buildings, a full faculty, well trained, and an endowment of about a quarter of a million of dollars. The library building would be an ornament to any city. The number of volumes in the library—which is called "the Coburn;" from the name of the gentleman who gave the building—is 27,000. There are as many students in Colorado College as can be accommodated. There is not an open saloon in this town. There is a clause in each title deed forbidding the use of the ground as a saloon site. Those who give tone to the town are generally New England people. Colorado Springs is a little Boston, located at the foot of Pike's Peak. The Young Men's Christian Association has a membership of almost 1,200. "The Yoke Fellow's Band" has been organized for Bible study. The general secretary, Mr. T. P. Day, says that if young men can be interested in the study of the Bible almost everything that is needed in the formation of character will follow. The acting pastor of the Christian Church will have charge of "The Worker's Training Class." Some of the topics to be studied are "Evidences of the Existence of God," "Necessity for a Revelation from God," "The Inspiration of the Bible," "The Theme of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation," "The Value of the Bible," "The Divisions of the Bible," "The Books of the Bible and Their Writers," "The Problem of Jesus: Who is He?" "The Nature of Christianity," etc.

The Presbyterian Church is the strongest body of Christians in Colorado Springs. The mayor of the city is a member of that church and an active Christian man. It is said he was elected to his office by the Christian Endeavorers. There is a strong Baptist Church here. This week—Nov. 13 19—the Association of Baptist Churches in the state of Colorado is in session here. The First Methodist Church is preparing to build a $60,000 house. The Christian Church in Colorado Springs has a standing with the strongest and the best. There is excellent material in it. A class of thirty has been organized for the systematic study of missions. The text-books are the Bible and McLean's and Lhamon's handbooks. The class has already learned that the Bible is the missionary handbook. The Old Testament contains a foregleam of world-wide missions. The four gospels give an accouut of the life and work of the Prince of foreign missionaries—Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of God. The Book of Acts is a record of the missionary activity of the disciples of Jesus during the first century of the Christian era. The epistles in the New Testament are letters written by missionaries to mission churches. The book of Revelation contains a prophetic account of the ultimate success of world-wide missions.

There is a fine Unitarian Church here. I is a center of culture—literary, musical social. The pastor meets with the evangelical ministers in their Monday morning conference. There are two Episcopal Churches in Colorado Springs. The rectors attend the weekly meetings of the pastors There is the utmost freedom of thought an speech, with entire good feeling. This is free country.

The South End Christian Church has become a mission of the First Christian Church. There are about sixty members W. T. Hunt was the preacher. He preache now in Craig, Colorado. He is a good man —full also of the Holy Spirit and of faith. His presence and that of his wife will be a blessing in any community. J. P. Lucas is pastor of the Christian Church in Colorado City. This place is four or five miles west of Colorado Springs, with which it is connected by steam and electricity. I is familiarly and locally known as "Old Town." Colorado City was in existence some years previous to the founding of Colorado Springs. It is one of the oldest if not the oldest town in the state. For a number of years Bro. Lucas was pastor in Colorado Springs. The beautiful house of worship in which the Disciples meet in this place is a monument to his ability. It was erected during his pastorate. He is held in affectionate remembrance here. There is a neat little house of worship in Colorado City and a church organization of probably seventy-five members.

The Board of the Colorado Christian Missionary Convention met in Denver Thursday, Nov. 10. The meeting was held in the office of B. O. Aylesworth, pastor of the Central Christian Church. Miss Lois A. White and G. W. Muckley were present, representing the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the Board of Church Extension. The Christian Woman's Board has aided the work of evangelization in Colorado for a number of years. What they have done is appreciated. There are no warmer friends of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions on earth than are to be found in Colorado. The president and corresponding secretary of the Colorado Christian Woman's Board are, ex-officio, members of the Board of the Colorado Christian Missionary Convention. And they are members—not merely figure-heads. The board determined to employ a state evangelist. There are about forty congregations of the Christian Church in the state, and possibly four thousand members. There are, however, not more than a dozen self-supporting congregations. At least 28 or 30 are in need of financial assistance. The Christian Woman's Board, in Indianapolis, will be asked to render aid. It is expected that they will do so. The Board of Church Extension has put about $7,000 in Colorado. The secretary recently spent a Lord's day morning in Colorado Springs. The Church Extension Fund, as a result, was increased more than five hundred dollars.

The annual meeting of the Christian Missionary Convention was held in Pueblo, Nov. 1-6. R. B. Preston is pastor of the Pueblo Christian Church. He is a good man, has a good wife and is doing an excellent work in Pueblo. He has been there about a year. Before he began to preach Bro. Preston was a lawyer and a business man. This experience increased his effectiveness in the pastorate. Among other good results of his work in Pueblo he has put the congregation in the way of paying a debt contracted a number of years ago. The hospitality of Pueblo was more than satisfactory to those who were at the convention.

The attendance was not large. There were less than one hundred delegates. The spirit was pre-eminently Christian. There is a fine body of preachers in Colorado. The ministers' meeting occupied one day. Grant K. Lewis, of the Highlands church, in Denver, was present. His address possessed superior merit. B. O. Aylesworth delivered an address that was a literary gem. He discussed a phase of the problem of union among Christians. All of the addresses possessed merit. They were of a high order. This remark ought also to be made concerning the addresses deliverek during the sessions of the missionary convention proper. The readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may have the pleasure ere long of reading one or two of them.

There is heroism on the part of those who represent the Master in the destitute regions of Colorado equal to the heroism of which we read displayed in heathen lands. There were times when there was not a dry eye in the Pueblo convention during the recital of experiences by mission workers. Miss White and Mr. Muckley attended this convention and added to its interest and value.

The meeting will be held next year in Denver, with the South Broadway congregation—the church of which S. B. Moore is pastor. B. O. Aylesworth was elected president of the convention; Leonard G. Thompson, Denver, is the corresponding secretary. B. B. T.

Editor's Easy Chair.

There is danger, we judge, from some indications, that we may rely too much, this Jubilee Year, upon noise and the clatter of machinery, and externalisms generally, rather than upon the presence and the power of God working in us and through us to accomplish the results which He desires. It is as true now as it was in the olden time that "not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit" that the work of the Lord must be carried on. The real thing that should concern us, this Jubilee Year, is not $100,000 for Home Missions, or $150,000 for Foreign Missions, or 100,000 additions to the church. These would be desirable results, but they are secondary. The great aim during the present year, the completion of a half century of organized missionary work, should be the putting of ourselves and of all our resources at the service of the Lord; or, in other words, the consecration of our entire membership with all their gifts and resources to the advancement of the kingdom of God. It is a propitious time for ascertaining our spiritual needs, our shortcomings, our failures, and seeking to supply these needs and correct these faults. If we can only put ourselves in right relations with God and offer ourselves and our substance to Him to be used for the extension of His reign among men, the matter of missionary offerings and additions to the church will take care of themselves—not without our effort, of course, but the effort will be spontaneous and effective. We cannot begin on the outside and succeed. If we are to make any distinct advance in our missionary, educational and benevolent work, it must be as the result of an equally distinct advance in the spiritual condition of our churches, if the gain is to be permanent.

It would be a great mistake to lay chief emphasis upon the size of the next convention, and make it appear that the great object was to get 10,000 delegates present. It will not be difficult to do that, but we may do it and accomplish little by it. The thing to be sought for and aimed at is a convention of men and women who shall come together ready to offer themselves and their all in the service of God and humanity. Let there be a gathering of men and women coming together in this spirit, with hearts aglow with love to God and man and indwelt by the Spirit of God, and whether the convention numbers 1,000 or 10,000, it will be a remarkable convention, because of the power of God resting upon it. It is well enough, perhaps, to have some one in each city designated to organize delegations for the convention, but it is infinitely more important that some one in each church shall be stirred up by the Lord to stir up the congregation to more spiritual and unselfish living as the essential preparation for a victorious advance along all the lines of our work. Better 1,000 delegates animated by the Spirit of God, and gathering in humility to hear His word of command, and prepared to obey, than 10,000 or even 20,000 animated by motives less holy and unselfish. The lesson taught us in Gideon's victory has its application in our own time. This is not saying anything against organization, but it is a warning against relying upon that as the main thing.

If, as the result of the churches getting closer to God, putting away all unworldly methods and motives and ambitions, and seeking the glory of God and the salvation of men, 100,000 should be added to the Lord, it will indeed be a matter of rejoicing, both on earth and in heaven; and there can be no question but that this number and many more would be added if the church would purify itself of whatever displeases the Lord, and should both preach and practice the gospel of divine love for the redemption of man. But to add half-converted, worldly minded, prayerless members to the half-converted and unconsecrated membership we now have would be no gain. What God needs to accomplish His great purposes on earth is, not numbers, but quality. He can take one consecrated soul and fill it with His Spirit and truth and love, and shake a whole continent with it. The great question we ought to face this Jubilee Year is, "Are we fit instruments to be used of God for the furtherance and ultimate success of so high and holy a plea as the restoration of the unity, the faith, the life and the victorious power of the Apostolic Church?" And the great task is, to put ourselves in readiness to be used for the accomplishment of His gracious purposes on earth. Then may we expect to see the banner of Christ exalted and his cause advancing by leaps and bounds.

And then, too, may we not hope that the spirit of boasting over numbers and growth and wealth and power and influence will be far from every one who speaks or writes during this Jubilee Year? Let us rather be filled with the spirit of humility which characterized our Lord, and, recognizing our own imperfections, and how far short we have come of accomplishing all that we might have accomplished had we been more faithful to our trust, let us in meekness seek to help one another and to win others from the dominion of Satan and from the allurements of the world, to give themselves unto loving service to Him who gave himself up for us. So shall we best represent to the world the Master whom we serve, and so shall we best recommend to thoughtful people everywhere the beauty and simplicity and divine character of the cause we plead. Again, let us say that we could adopt no better motto for the coming year than that to which we have referred: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

The most favorable signs we could ask for, prophesying a great Jubilee Convention in '99, would be largely increased attendance on the prayer-meetings, and more earnest praying by those who attend, the rearing up of family altars which have been allowed to fall into ruin, more earnest, heart-searching preaching, from our pulpits, probing into the very core of the spiritual life, healing of church feuds, payment of back salaries to preachers and all other debts, a continuous spirit of revival in the churches, the growth of Sunday-schools, renewed interest in Bible study, more genuine consecration in the Endeavor Societies and a general attitude of expectancy of great blessings from God and the planning of large things for God. When you see these signs know ye that the day of triumph draws near.

Questions and Answers.

Should a brother insist on retaining an office in the church when a very considerable number feel very bitter about his doing so? Suppose, further, that a very considerable number of his friends insist that he shall stay in office. S. T. L.

This question implies a state of things that ought not to exist in a Christian congregation, but which, unfortunately, does exist at times in many churches. There are so many considerations that enter into a proper answer to this question that each official in the church must decide what is his duty under all the circumstances. As a general proposition it may be said that when a considerable number of a congregation "feel very bitter" against one's remaining in office, it would be better for him to resign. In that case he should labor zealously with his friends, who insist that he "shall stay" in office, to convince them that it is better for him to make whatever personal sacrifice may be involved in the resignation than to be the occasion of strife in the church. We should say that unless the principle involved in the difference between those who oppose and those who favor his remaining in office is a very vital one, and he stands as the representative of that principle, it would be better for him to resign. Whenever a resignation is likely to promote the peace and unity of a congregation it should be forthcoming. If it should mean the triumph of a factious element, who have not the good of the church at heart, then the question assumes a different aspect, and the brother must act according to his best understanding of what will promote the welfare of the church, sinking his own individual interests out of sight.

The same authority that exists for observing it on any Lord's day would be sufficient for observing it every Lord's day. It is likely, according to the earliest church history—the Acts of the Apostles—that the first disciples observed this institution daily, for a while, or at least more frequently than every Lord's day. Later on, however, when the regular order of worship seems to have become established, it was undoubtedly the custom of the early churches to observe the Lord's Supper on each first day of the week. In Acts 20:7 it is said: "And upon the first day of the week, when they were gathered together to break bread Paul discoursed with them, intending to depart on the morrow." This very clearly indicates that it was the custom at Troas for the church to gather upon that day to break bread, and what was the custom at Troas was probably the custom in all the other early churches. The profane history of the time also furnishes corroborative proof of this custom. There does not seem to have been a positive command of Jesus in reference to the frequency of observing this institution. "As oft as you do this, do it in remembrance of me," were his words, but the example of the early church, which no doubt followed apostolic direction, cannot be overlooked in considering this question. In addition to these considerations, the fact that the Lord's Supper sets forth the central truth of Christianity and furnishes the most feasible and practical method of calling the attention of the people to this vital truth, and of enlisting them in public worship, would seem to argue the practical utility of its observance as part of the regular Lord's day worship.

Hour of Prayer.

THE LIGHT OF THE GENTILES.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Nov. 30, 1898).

And nations shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.—Isa. 60: 3.

So spake the great prophet of the Old Testament at a time of great national darkness. It is the glory of faith that in the hour of deepest adversity it is able to sing the note of future triumph. To the eye of mere sense or unbelief there was nothing that looked encouraging in the condition of the Jewish people at the time these words were spoken. Whether we consider them as uttered before the captivity or afterward, the condition was not such as to inspire the great hope expressed in this prophecy apart from faith in God's purpose. This great prophet had caught a vision of God's purpose in history, and especially in the history of his chosen people. He saw that God was working out his plans for the redemption of the race through his nation. Understanding this, he was able to foretell a brighter future for the cause of righteousness and for humanity.

To understand these words of the prophet we must identify, as they were identified in the prophet's mind, the faithful remnant of God's chosen people with that enlargement of the kingdom of God and of his righteousness which should come through Christ, the Messiah of the Jews. God's redemptive purpose is seen unfolding itself in the history of the Jewish people. This prophet foresees the time when God's chosen people, that is, the representatives of his cause and of his righteousness on earth, instead of being shrouded in darkness, oppressed, taken captive by the nations, shall be in the place of power and influence. "Nations shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. Lift up thine eyes round about, and see; they all gather themselves together, they come to thee; thy sons shall come from far and thy daughters shall be carried in the arms. Then thou shalt see and be lightened, and thine heart shall tremble and be enlarged; because the abundance of the sea shall be turned unto thee, the wealth of the nations shall come unto thee" (vs. 3-5).

This is a magnificent future for this despised and persecuted people. From obscurity and captivity and persecution and darkness they are to come into power and glory and wealth. The secret of this wonderful change is stated thus: "The Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee" (v. 2). What do we see to-day as we lift up our eyes and look round about us? The Christian nations are the leading powers of earth. The most powerful nations are those whose people possess the purest faith and offer the purest worship, and honor most Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah, the Son of God. Is it not true that the Protestant nations are to-day the leading nations of the world? Take the Anglo-Saxon nations and peoples and consider their position and influence at the present time, and see a literal fulfillment of the prophecy. Is it not true that the United States and Great Britain may be said to hold in their power, very largely, under God, the future of the nations? In proportion as the glory of the Lord shall be seen upon them shall they become still more powerful in the years to come. Well will it be for these nations if they recognize the fact stated by the prophet, "For the name of the Lord thy God and for the Holy One of Israel," this power has come upon them.

There is a principle involved in this prophecy which may be universally applied. What matters it if some particular cause which we represent is weak in numbers and influence, and unpopular, provided it be a right cause? The Spirit that was in Isaiah is saying to us, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." It bids us take heart and hope in the darkest hours of misfortune and defeat, because—

"Right is right since God is God,
And right the day will win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

Apply it to the cause of temperance and the suppression of the liquor traffic. Is this a right cause? If so, the nations must ultimately accept it. The reign of time-serving politicians is only transient. Truth at last comes out victor. So with every other moral, social and religious reform. If they represent God's thought and are in harmony with God's purpose they will ultimately win, and the glory of the Lord shall rest upon them.

We need, sometimes, in our moments of despondency, when we feel discouraged with ourselves and with our progress, to comfort our own hearts with this truth. Darkness will give place to light, defeat to victory. Only let us be sure that we are right with God, and we can trust the future.

This prophecy of Isaiah is being progressively fulfilled. It is not yet completed. There are yet grander triumphs to crown the kingdom of God and the cause of righteousness. Christ is to be the light of all the nations, and their laws, constitutions, customs, and their entire civilization must be molded by the teaching and spirit of the Christ of prophecy and of history. We are coworkers with God in the fulfillment of this blessed prophecy. We labor in the assurance of certain triumph.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, we thank Thee for the light which Thou hast shed upon the nations through the coming of Thy Son, our Savior, Jesus of Nazareth. We thank Thee that with His birth and life a new light has arisen upon the world, even the Sun of Righteousness with healing in His wings. We rejoice that the light of His life is shining more and more into the dark places of the earth, dispelling superstition and fear, and disseminating joy and gladness and hope. May we who receive this light be faithful in disseminating it, that we may hasten the time when the whole earth shall be illuminated with Thy truth and shall rejoice in the light of Thy countenance, through Jesus Christ our Savior and Redeemer. Amen!

Our Budget.

—The Lord hath done great things for us.

—We of all people should praise the Lord for his goodness.

—Our thanksgiving should be expressed in deed as well as in word.

—The Chattanooga Convention motto for 1899 is being taken up with enthusiasm all along the ine.

—Our churches will make the greatest effort in their history during the coming year to go forward in every good work, especially in the evangelistic and missionary departments.

—Our readers must not forget our call for a few hundred dollars to assist Bro. Randall in securing a printing press and some type for his work in Jamaica. Up to this time only one brother has responded, but we take it that there must be a number of those who would be willing to make a small investment in the dissemination of gospel light on the Island of Jamaica. We hope our C. W. B. M. sisters especially will interest themselves in this matter and stir up the brethren.

—We desire to call special attention to the C. W. B. M. articles in this paper in the interest of C. W. B. M. Day, the first Sunday in December, which is now at hand. These are carefully written articles and in the interest of one of the most active and influential missionary agencies among the Disciples of Christ.

—As all of our readers are interested in the temperance work, the abstract of Mrs. Hunt's address before the National W. C. T. U. Convention, recently held at St. Paul, Minn., which appears in this paper, will be appreciated.

—The best way to inform yourself of the splendid record of our Church Extension work is to send to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., Kansas City, Mo., for a copy of the October-December issue of Business in Christianity. No magazine of equal size could well contain more information on a given subject than does this one on Church Extension and its tenth annual report.

—The American Christian Missionary Convention, at Chattanooga, fixed the third Lord's day of December (or the first Lord's day that the church may select thereafter if they can not do it on the day) as the time for taking the offerings for Ministerial Relief. Every church and preacher ought to make a Christmas gift to the veteran and disabled preachers and their wives.

—W. D. Humphrey, of Piedmont, Mo., writes us that he recently lost a son, a young man of 23 years, by typhoid fever. He now has but one of a family of four children left to him in his old age and feels greatly oppressed by this sorrow. But we pray that he may find that comfort which a loving Father in heaven can give only at such a time.

—Do not forget that the third Lord's day in December is the time for offerings to the Fund for Ministerial Relief. Every preacher and every church should remember this time and not neglect this offering. If any facts or information are needed concerning this work drop a postal card to D. R. Lucas, Indianapolis, Ind., and the matter wanted will be promptly forwarded to you.

—Valparaiso Day of the Chicago Ministerial Association of the Christian Church "was a great day," according to the program sent to us. There were two sessions, or practically an all-day meeting, with splendid addresses and devotional and social variations. John L. Brandt, of Valparaiso, Ind., is president of the Association.

—At our preachers' meeting in this office, on last Monday morning, the preachers listened to a very earnest address by F. O. Fannon, the pastor of the First Christian Church, of this city, on "How to Reach Young Men." In this address Bro. Fannon made a strong appeal for stronger religious influence in the home, which is evidently one of the great necessities of the hour.

—In a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a clipping from the Cumberland Presbyterian, with suitable comments, in regard to an elder in the Presbyterian Church, Ushigome, Tokyo, who was expelled for teaching immersion for baptism. The clipping is correct. It may add to its interest for the readers to know further particulars. The elder's name is Miyazaki San. He is the leading Christian poet of Japan, and is turning his attention to the translation of Christian hymns into Japanese. He is author of a popular work similar to Irving's Sketch Book and other works of merit. Last spring he was baptized by Bro. H. H. Gray, and at once openly taught his people his new convictions. He defended his case before the Presbyterian tribunals and boldly gave reasons for his faith. Eight months have passed. He may now be seen every Lord's day leading the singing and frequently preaching in the Christian Church of Koishikawa, Tokio, where he is now an elder and a zealous worker. He is the Japanese editor of our new paper, the Bible Way, and finds not a little comfort in reading and writing about Thomas Campbell.

FRANK H. MARSHALL.

—The following "new game law," is credited to the Georgetown (Ky.) News. If it should appear too "game" to our readers it must be remembered that it comes from a "game" state. And yet one of our Missouri agents sends it to us, as if she thought it worthy of universal application:

Book agents may be killed from October 1 to September 1; spring poets from March 1 to June 1; scandal mongers, April 1 to February 1; umbrella borrowers, August 1 to November 1, and from February 1 to May 1, while every man who accepts a paper two years, but when the bill is presented says, "I never ordered it," may be killed on sight without reserve or relief from valuation or appraisement laws, and buried face downward, without benefit of clergy.

Secular journals may have readers who act in that way, but does any one suppose that subscribers to a religious paper would be capable of such a subterfuge? Perish the thought!

—I have a bit of rare good news which I would like to share with you and the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Mrs. A. M. Atkinson yesterday gave us one thousand dollars toward the English Bible Chair Endowment Fund. Was not that a beautiful gift for a worker in the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to make in this our silver anniversary year? We are thankful and happy for it, and hope it may inspire others whom God has made stewards of his riches to do likewise.

HELEN E. MOSES.

This is indeed "good news," and we congratulate our sisters on this liberal gift to one of the most important if not the most important branch of their work. It is like Sister A. to appreciate and help such a work in this generous way.

—Last week we stated that St. Louis had a curfew ordinance, but we now find that such is not the case. The Mayor vetoed the bill, and the city lawmakers refused to pass it over the veto. The bill had been so strongly supported by the city council before it went to the Mayor that we expected it to become a law, and so stated. The chief reason assigned by the Mayor for the veto of the bill was that it interfered with personal liberty, which if fully interpreted doubtless means, to the Mayor, interference with the saloons' opportunities to secure and educate customers for its traffic.

—In our reference to the Missionary Intelligencer for November last week we stated its information covered "the entire work of the Disciples of Christ in the foreign field." We should have added, done through our Foreign Missionary Society. The C. W. B. M. is doing a grand work in India and elsewhere, and a full account of their work may be had in the recent number of the Missionary Tidings. The C. W. B. M. Day, the first Lord's day in December, is at hand, and inasmuch as they have undertaken to greatly enlarge their offerings for 1899, we trust that the day will be more generally observed than ever before. To this end we call special attention to the excellent articles on their work in this paper.

—Number four, Vol. five of Northfield Echoes contains the addresses delivered at the Northfield Conference, Northfield, Mass., last summer. The two chief speakers were Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and Rev. C. H. C. MacGregor, both of London, England. Their addresses are upon living questions and highly charged with spiritual energy. There are other addresses in this magazine also of great value. D. L. Moody's "Problems of Church Work" are especially interesting and practical. The article consists of Dr. Moody's replies to practical questions on church management and church work. No preacher would regret the cost of this book nor the time to read it.

—The list of persons who have killed themselves because they have been ruined by rum is a long one, and the list of those who have killed themselves by rum is much longer. Every day persons who have spent all their money in buying rum hang themselves, or make way with themselves by other methods; every day such persons are taken to the insane asylum, almhouses and prisons; every day they are discharged from situations; every day they receive wounds without cause; every day their wives and children, in some cases their husbands and children, are made wretched by the spectacle of their drunkenness. Nevertheless, the people of the United States look with favor upon the saloon, because they are shortsighted enough to think that it keeps down taxes.—The New York Christian Advocate.

—The 39th annual meeting of the Provident Association, of this city, was held at the First Christian Church, Nov. 17th, at 8 P. M. Devotional exercises, select music, reports of officers and the election of the new board of directors made up the interesting program of the evening. The report of the general manager was especially interesting, and affords food for reflection. The following figures from his report will help to understand some of the conditions of metropolitan life and the scope of work done by an institution of this kind for the relief of distressed persons:

A summary of the statistical records shows that help in all departments and in various forms has been given to 14,202 different persons, 2,839 being homeless men, women and children, and has been given 68,211 times. Material relief in kind and amount was: Breadstuffs and groceries, 278,193 7-8 pounds; coal, 56,019 2-3 bushels; clothing, 12,928 pieces; shoes, 2,812 pairs; bedding, stoves and furniture, 481 articles; lodgings and meals supplied at the lodges for men and women and meals at the restaurant—lodging 6,077, and mea s 134,440, of which 115,089 were served at the restaurant, 11,700 in midday dinners given to workers in the laundry and sewing rooms and 7,740 earned by labor at the woodyard. In the department for the special relief of the sick poor, care has been given in 1,185 cases, in which there have been 4,128 visits by the nurse; the attendance of 152 physicians has been secured; medicines supplied 1,113 times and hospital treatment for 126 patients, and there have been furnished sick diet 1,795 times, and 1,701 pieces of clothing for the bed and person. The statistics of relief by work show work given to 4 278 different persons, in all 22,556 times, and amounting to 19,674 1-2 days, and the value of earnings $11,922.26.

An important statistic is the number of cases not helped. Of the applications made for aid, 856 were found on visitation not needing or not deserving it; 718 not found and presumably giving false addresses, and by the labor test refusing work, 275 heads of families and 273 homeless men, making the number of applicants thus detected as not entitled to aid 1,404. How extensively as well as how thoroughly the applicants are investigated is shown by the visits at the homes of applicants numbering 7,270, and 4,798 calls made by the drivers of delivery wagons, which in important respects serve the uses of revisits.

—"The Success of Missions, or the Lowest Classes have been Reached," is the title of a 20-page tract by F. M. Rains, of the Foreign Society. This tract is one section of an address by him before the Chattanooga Convention, and which was ordered published in tract form by the convention. A one-cent postage stamp will secure a copy of the tract. Address the author, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—The church is not the basis of truth in the sense that it is its originator, or first cause, but because it is truth's discoverer and interpreter. Truth is not to be made to order by a pope or a Mormon prophet, who conveniently possess themselves of a new decree or revelation as suits their developing purpose. The church cannot manufacture any truths any more than it can any souls ex nihilo; it cannot lay its hand upon any body of true doctrine and affirm: "This is my truth!" but rather must declare: "This is God's truth!" What the church can do is to discover the truth that already is, to bring that to light and to notice, and to apply it to the hearts and consciences of men.—The New York Observer.

—All who have read "On the Rock, or Truth Stranger than Fiction"—and who among the Disciples have not?—will be glad to see the face of its author, D. R. Dungan, which we present on our first page this week. Bro. Dungan is also the author of other popular works, such as "Modern Phases of Skepticism," "Rum, Ruin and the Remedy," "Hermeneutics," etc., and is a frequent contributor to our periodical literature. He has been connected with the Bible Departments of both Drake and Cotner Universities, and his familiarity with and knowledge of the Bible is hardly second to that of any man in our ranks. He is at present pastor of the Mt. Cabanne Church in this city, and is conducting a union Bible class in the Holland Building every Saturday afternoon, for the study of the lesson for the following day. This class, made up largely of business men of various denominations, who are teachers in the Sunday-school, is outgrowing its quarters and is developing fine interest. Bro. Dungan was born in Noble county, Ind., May 15, 1837, but has labored chiefly in the Northwest. He was twice honored with the chaplaincy of the Nebraska Legislature, and was once candidate for governor on the Prohibition ticket. He is still vigorous in mind and body and has the promise of several years of further usefulness.

—The article from J. H. Mac El'Rey which we publish elsewhere, furnishes the strongest proof of our willingness to "hear the other side," and to permit the freest expression of opinion on all living questions. Its defense of modern Spiritism will, we are sure, unsettle no one's faith in Christ, and it may call out a reply that will serve to clear away some of the mist that our correspondent throws upon the subject. Leaving to Mr. Lhamon's trenchant pen to point out the inconsequential reasoning of the article in question, we will only refer our readers to Hudson's recent work, "The Law of Psychical Phenomena," recently noticed in this paper, as a sufficient demonstration of the truth that the phenomena of modern Spiritism have no connection with the spirits of the departed.

The S. S., Endeavor and Prayer-meeting Departments.

In response to our note in a recent issue relative to the utility of the departments above named we have received the following additional responses:

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I want to speak for myself and my friends in favor of retaining the Christian Endeavor and Sunday-school columns as a feature of your paper. Nothing else could be more helpful, we think.

L. E. MURRAY.

Ladoga, Ind., Nov. 15, 1898.

J. H. GARRISON—Dear Brother: I am 75 years old to-day, have been a subscriber and reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ever since it was born, am an active worker in the Endeavor, Sunday-school and prayer-meeting, and I want all of these departments continued in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; they are a great help to me. Your brother in Christ,

J. Q. HOLMES.

South Haven, Kan., Nov. 14, 1898.

I notice in your paper an agitation concerning the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Departments. As one of the young people and for the sake of the young people I hope you will retain the Christian Endeavor Department. Not only is it of much help to us in our prayer-meetings, etc., but the very fact that such a paper as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST so recognizes our work is a source of much encouragement and inspiration. MINNIE BLAKE.

State Supt. of the C. E. of the Disciples of Christ for Colorado.

By all means continue "special departments" in CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST. Last week I read the entire article on the prayer-meeting topic, instead of making a speech myself. I have been in other prayer-meetings where I believe such procedure would be more edifying than what was offered. C. M. FILLMORE.

Peru, Ind., Nov. 17, 1898.

I want to say that I am heartily in favor of continuing the Bible-school and Endeavor departments. Oftentimes that is the only commentary some church members have on the lessons and, like of myself, heartily enjoy it.

MRS. J. E. HODGE.

Fulton, Mo.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I could perhaps get along without the C. E. and S. S. departments, as there is an abundance of literature on these topics, and yet I have read and enjoyed and have been profited by both these departments this year. But personally I could not well get on without the "Hour of Prayer." I do not always use it in our prayer-meetings, but I invariably read it and would feel seriously the loss of it if it were taken out. I fear that we are not as much given to a cultivation of the devotional as we should be. Let us have more of it. P. J. RICE.

Ft. Wayne, Ind., Nov. 18, 1898.

I write to record my vote for a continuance of the C. E. and B.-S. departments in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. While I take the best "annual" published, yet I always read with pleasure and profit Bro. Willett, and also Bro. Jenkins. But of the three departments, the C. E., B.-S. and Prayer-meeting. I think the Prayer the most valuable to the church The problem, how to get one of our religious papers in the home of each family in the church, with me is unsolved, but I am constantly working to that end. My work here is "noiseless and peaceful."

H. S. GILLIAM.

Hamilton, Mo.

As to the Sunday-school and Endeavor Departments, also the "The Hour of Prayer," I think that a criticism that would be just and applicable to some papers would not apply to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I have especially enjoyed "The Hour of Prayer," and during a part of the year we used these as our subjects for midweek meetings and we should have continued if more of our brethren had been receiving the paper. [How would it do to increase the list of our subscribers at that point?—EDITOR.] The other two subjects look all right to me, and I only remember of hearing one criticism, in the eighteen months I have been here, coming from a regular reader. I don't see that you could dispense with any of these and thereby add to the paper, so long as they maintain their present tone. I desire to thank you personally for the comfort Mrs. Burks and I have received from your pen in "The Hour of Prayer," "Lake Musings" and "The Easy Chair." We have had some sad hours during this year.

Your brother,

W. W. BURKS.

Parsons, Kan., Nov. 11, 1898.

Value of a Church Paper.

Bro. R. H. Bateman preached one of the best sermons (a few weeks ago) on "Christian Literature" that I ever had the the pleasure of hearing, showing how important it is for every member of the Christian Church to have and read one or more of our church papers in order that they might know what the Christian Church was doing. Showing what a failure a a busines man would make if he did not post himself by reading up the journals of his profession. I wish that every member of the Christian Church who does not take a religious paper could have heard it. To-day he preached a splendid sermon on "What Does the Christian Church Stand For?" A good and appreciative audience. To-morrow Bro. B. commences a series of meetings for Bro. Ward, in Pasadena, and next Lord's day we expect a splendid sermon from Bro. H. E. Ward. A. H. THOMAS.

A MISSIONARY'S WIFE

Interesting Letter from India—A Long Summer Season.

The following letter is from the wife of an American Baptist missionary at Nowgong, Assam, India: "After living here for several years I found the climate was weakening me. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla every summer. This I found so beneficial that I now take one dose every morning for nine months in the year, that is, through the hot weather. My general health is excellent and my blood is in good condition. My weight does not vary more than one pound throughout the year. I find Hood's Sarsaparilla indispensable in the summer and recommend it for use in a debilitating climate." MRS P. H. MOORE.

The above letter is similar to thousands received and constantly coming in.

Hood's Pills cure nausea, indigestion, biliousness. Price 25c.

Divinity School At Columbia.

The action of the Christian Church two or three years ago in establishing a school of divinity at the University of Missouri was at the time widely commented upon, being regarded by many persons connected with other denominations as setting a precedent which would give trouble at sometime in the future. Any step looking toward the association of church with state has in this country always been regarded with extreme suspicion and the establishment of a school of divinity by one denomination, in an apparently close connection with a state institution, was considered by many persons as violative of the spirit if not of the letter of our educational laws. There has since come about an apparent change of public sentiment in this connection, as shown by a discussion in the Presbyterian Synod last week in session at Kansas City. The discussion sprang from the consideration of a report on "Care for Presbyterian Students at the State University." Dr. S. J. Niccolls presented the report of the committee. He stated that there were more Presbyterian students in the State University than in the ecclesiastical colleges, and that there were better facilities for education in the state colleges. He also said that there was no infidelity taught at Columbia, nor would there be. The committee believed that something should be done to bring the doctrine of the church before those students who would like to study it. The constitution does not allow the teaching of the Bible in the University, so the committee thought that something ought to be done to bring the idea of religion before the students at Columbia, because the committee affirmed that no education is complete without the teaching of the Bible. The committee adopted resolutions approving in general the project of establishing a Bible School in Columbia for the special purpose of furnishing biblical instructions to such students in the University as may desire it, and especially for those who belong to the Presbyterian Church. The Presbyterian Synod apparently takes the ground that it has as much right to establish a "Bible School" at the State University as any other body of Christians, and doubtless is in the right, for if one denomination is permitted to establish a school of divinity for Christian study at a state institution, all others must be permitted the same privilege, if they choose to exercise it.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

The "apparent change of public sentiment" brought about by the success of the Christian Church in Missouri in establishing Bible teaching at Columbia for the benefit of the students of the University is not the only instance of the kind in history. It is a way we have. Any measure that is manifestly right, wise and demanded by existing conditions always wins friends in the long run, no matter how much it is opposed at first. The idea that the separation of church and state would be violated by locating a Bible College near enough to a state university for the students to attend the lectures never had any foundation in fact. It is a measure of common prudence, public spirit and good, hard sense.

The St. Louis Advocate is quite right in saying that the Presbyterian Synod "has as much right to establish a Bible School at the State University as any other body of Christians."

To be sure they have, and we are glad they are showing the wisdom to exercise that right. We shall be surprised if our wide-awake, enterprising Methodist brethren do not soon avail themselves of the same privilege. We have no monopoly of the plan if we were the first to adopt it, and as we said on the occasion of opening the work there, "Let them all come—the more the better." We have no disposition to deprive our religious neighbors of the benefit of a good thing, even though they did oppose it in the beginning.

PERSONAL MENTION.

W. G. Loucks is in a protracted meeting at Bright, Ind.

E. J. Fenstermacher has become the successor to G. M. Goode at Lexington, Mo.

Charles Darsie, pastor of the church at Collinwood, O., tendered his resignation to the church there, Nov. 13.

John Treloar has received and accepted a call to the church at Huntingburgh, Ind., to the close of 1899.

J. S. Smith, of Ft. Recovery, O., a graduate of Hiram College, has accepted a call to preach for the church at Carrollton, Ill.

A number of our prominent preachers and others are arranging to go together on a tour to Egypt, Palestine and Europe. Going as a company will make it more pleasant as well as more economical. Write Bro. J. B. Sweeney, Waco, Tex., for itinerary and particulars.

The address of the president of the Missouri Ministerial Association, Clinton Lockhart, also president of Christian University, Canton, Mo., delivered at Carrollton, Mo., July 21, 1898, has been published in a pamphlet, for use by that Association. It is the first president's address of the Association and is worthy of this form for future use and preservation.

A farewell reception was tendered to H. C. Shipley by friends and members of the Christian Church in Carthage, S. D., Oct. 24, amid a Dakota snowstorm. Many were present and all had a good time. Bro. Shipley has accepted a call from the Christian Church in Jewell City, Kas.

H. A. Northcutt is now in a meeting with Geo. Coombs, at 6th and Prospect Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

A. M. Growden's meeting at Russellville has resulted in nine conversions up to date, besides others added otherwise. By invitation of the president of Bethel College (Baptist) he addressed the students of that institution on the 17th inst. He is open for engagements elsewhere to hold meetings or to locate as pastor of a congregation.

R. M. Messick has returned to Salem, Ore., where his family has been since his removal West some time ago. He has spent about 19 years of his life in ministerial work in the state of Missouri, laboring at Chillicothe, Trenton, Gallatin, Marshall, Carrollton, Higginsville, besides serving in the evangelistic field. He has the confidence and esteem of the brotherhood of Missouri, whose sentiments we only voice in commending him to the Christian love and confidence of the brethren in Washihgton, California and Oregon, or wherever he may desire to labor.

The resignation of J. S. Sweeney of Paris, Ky., closes one of the longest pastorates in our brotherhood, longer even than that of his brother, Z. T. Sweeney, at Columbus, Ind. Bro. J. S. Sweeney's health began to fail him last summer and it is, presumably, on this account that he resigns his work at Paris.

F. M. Kirkham has been ill since his arrival in San Francisco, but has recovered sufficiently to enter upon his work on the Pacific Christian.

J. C. Faulkender, of Joplin, Mo., writes that the church there is about closing arrangements for a preacher, and that further applications are unnecessary. This he says will also explain those applications received but not replied to.

Geo. F. Hall, pastor Christian Tabernacle, Decatur, Ill., recently delivered a lecture at Ft. Worth, Tex., being his second lecture trip to that city.

Joel Brown, field agent for the Christian Orphans' Home, called at this office last Monday. He seems to have been about the most successful agent in the field this fall in raising funds for the Orphans' Home. His heart is in the work and he is deeply in earnest in behalf of orphan children and their Home in this city.

Herbert L. Willett's address in Berlin, Germany, is Auhaltstrasse 15, until further notice.

The brethren and sisters of Cantrall, Ill., recently called at the parsonage unannounced, with liberal donations. U. N. Hieronymous is in his first pastorate and doing splendid work. Evangelist W. A. Meloan is expected to begin a revival about Dec. 1st.

J. D. Houston, of Georgetown, Ohio, would like to correspond with any church in need of a preacher for next year. He writes that he has been successful in evangelistic and pastoral work, is a graduate of the Bible College at Lexington, Ky., and has served some of our best churches.

Governor Tanner and the Miners.

DEAR EDITOR:—Let me say a word on the Virden strike through your columns.

Precedent and interpretation have long been so universally in favor of corporations and monopolies; authority has been so hard upon the people in case of differences (as witness the shooting at Hazelton, Penn.), that there is a fine justice in Gov. Tanner's brave stand for Virden strikers.

When an executive anticipates legislation in behalf of moral right and especially when it is the right of the masses, good people everywhere should see to it that their moral support makes up for possible lack of legal support.

Gen. Jackson paid two thousand dollars for the illegal arrest he made in New Orleans, but it helped to win him almost a bloodless victory, which victory closed the war of 1812. The nation has since voted his action "great." Posterity will so vote Gov. Tanner's defence of the "people whom the Lord loves." No rebuke, legal or personal, can take from this advanced step the honor of true patriotism. It must count, not only for the good of the Virden miners, but for the good of the poor colored men that were to supplant them—it must count for the good of all toilers throughout the lengte and breadth of the land. God strengthen the cause of the people!

EMMA E. PAGE.

Olympia, Wash., Oct. 31, 1898.

The foregoing is, as it seems to us, a misapprehension of the issue involved in the action of Gov. Tanner in his attempt to prevent the importation of miners from one state into another. We are wholly unable to appreciate the "fine justice" in the flagrant violation of the constitution which said action involves. There is no principle more clearly settled in our American policy than the freedom of laboring men to pass from one state to another in search of employment without let or hindrance from any governor or from any other source. We see nothing brave or heroic in Gov. Tanner's action. On the contrary, it seems to us he was "playing to the gallery" and seeking to make himself solid with the miners. We do not suppose that the poor colored men who, in seeking an opportunity to win bread for their families, were shot down at Virden, and the others who with them imperiled their lives, could be made to understand just how such action was in "defence of the people." They were a part of "the people," even though they were not in a condition to vote for Gov. Tanner. They were as much entitled to the protection of the law as the striking miners at Virden. They were seeking to exercise a right guaranteed by the constitution and laws of this land—a right which we all hold to be sacred. Gov. Tanner assumes the prerogative of denying to these men and to all others similarly situated the exercise of this right, and that without the semblance of law; and this attempt to override the constitution and trample upon the right of workingmen seeking employment under the protection of law our correspondent characterizes as an "advance step" to which must not be withheld "the honor of true patriotism." It will be a sad day for this country when the people come to regard such a step as entitled to either honor or respect. We can echo the prayer in the last sentence, "God strengthen the cause of the people!" and, we would add, "curtail the power of self-seeking and time-serving politicians, who do not scruple to violate law if they feel that they can thereby serve their personal interest."

Agents Wanted

We want an Agent in every town to secure subscribers to THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, to look after renewals and distribute advertising matter. We offer profitable employment for the Winter, also special rewards for good work. $1000 will be given to the Agent sending the largest list up to April 15 next; $500 to the next best worker, and so on—distributing $11,500 among 500 best Agents the coming season. Good pay is assured every Agent whether he or she secures one of the extra awards or not Educational Spirit at Canton.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON: — Referring to an editorial item in the last CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, permit me to say, the attitude of Christian University toward all the other colleges in the state is most amicable; and there is no disposition in the University or among those who represent its claims to antagonize anything that is good, or to dominate in the educational conference in the spirit of rivalry, sectionalism or unfairness. We regard this cause as too holy, and the interests of the whole brotherhood here involved as too sacred for the seizure of any undue advantages.

The large delegation sent from here to the last conference was simply indicative of the high appreciation of the work of the University held by those who know it best. It is expected that many from here will attend the next conference, but I know that it is the disposition of all to favor every worthy suggestion that may be made, and to oppose nothing for merely local gain.

In evidence of this I may cite the broad spirit of the resolution adopted at the last conference in laying out the work of the next meeting, that it "shall discuss and pass upon the propriety of endowing and establishing one or more colleges in the state."

Further proof of this willingness to be fair and liberal toward the interests of all is seen in the earnest effort made from this place to call out a full delegation from every part of the state. The simple desire here is to compass the greatest possible good to the cause for all time to come. CLINTON LOCKHART.

[If this spirit prevails in the Educational Conference all will be well.—EDITOR.]

"SPIRITISM OR WITCHCRAFT:" OTHER VIEWS.

JOSEPH H. MAC EL'REY

"The mortallest enemy unto knowledge, and that which hath done the greatest execution [injury] upon truth hath been a peremptory adhesion unto authority, or the establishing of our belief upon the dicta of antiquity.—Sir Thomas Browne.

"As there is no subject so fruitful of strife as the discussion of theological hypotheses, I have avoided as much as posible all bearings of original scientific inquiry upon religious opinions."—G. Gore, LL., D., F.R.S., 1378.

I regret having to say of all this—

"'Tis true, and pity 'tis, 'tis true."

Scientists have noted those stigmas upon the faces of heterodox and orthodox religionists alike, inflicted upon each other from times beyond which the religious histories of man runneth not.

Each sect has worn them with Fervid pride, transmitting them
As worthy trophies, ably won
On ardent, well-fought fields,
By valiant sire to champion son,
Who quarter to no comer yields.
Esprit de corps perpetuum
The sect must ever onward run.
Enthused by party zeal and full
Of words, rhapsodic, bold but weak,
He knowledge, reason, firm and cool,
With him to battle could not take.
A paper helmit, paper shield
And paper pavise he could wield.
Tricked out in these, to war he goes
'Gainst "ancient," midtime," "modern" foes.
"Spiritists," "witches," "sorcerers," sure
No Bible Christian can endure.
Hypnotists, psychists, seers to boot,
And what aught else "from the same root,"
"Like scallion, onion, cabbage, beet,"
Those "Christian Science healers" meet
As "cousins, kindred," on a level,
They all are children of the devil!

By "damning" very few of them "with faintest praise," Mr. Lhamon severely damns them all. He says, "Their aims, proposing to prove to us that the spirit lives after the body is gone, when they do not spring from mercenary motives are majestic." "But its efforts are not needed." This is remarkable language, and the conclusions drawn from it are more remarkable. If Spiritualism can and does prove what it proposes to do, why are the proofs not needed? Do the masses of the world implicitly believe that "the spirit lives after the body is gone?" But, if the masses do merely believe this, is verifiable proof of it now not desirable? What, whom, how can it hurt? Did it hurt when Jesus demonstrated it? Did it hurt the church? Did it hurt the priests? Every new thing has always hurt them. How can the priests demonstrate it now? Can Mr. Lhamon do it? By books? Can he demonstrate the books? In the nature of things can a book verify this? Tischendorf, the most celebrated evangelical man of this age, says in his "History of the Four Gospels," "The spirit of scepticism dominates this nineteenth century," etc.

"Spiritualist proof is not needed because Christ did his work without suspicion of mercenary taint." What connection can this allegation have with this question of the continuity of the spirit? Although not thinking of casting aspersion upon the character of "Christ," Jesus did proffer this world inducements for discipling with him. I think Mr. L. meant Jesus when he wrote it "Christ;" Jesus died, Christ did not die. Mr. L.'s knowledge of church history, past and present, should have admonished silence on matters of "mercenary taint" as a contrast against Spiritualists. Jesus commanded his hearers to give for benevolence tenths of all their possessions that they might be clean unto them. How implicitly do Jesus' disciples obey him in that item, even now? "Mercenary taint," indeed, one of the many stigmata upon the face of the despicable Spiritualists. It may be.

I am not defending or condemning per se. I am speaking from my sense of justice. Is not the whole church pockmarked and scarred all over by "mercenary taint?" Probably nine hundred and more in the thousand of those Mr. L. terms by the despicable names he would fasten upon them are pecuniarily poor people. But the benevolence of their public speakers will average as high as that of church preachers. Does Mr. L. know to the contrary? You know I might quote by the amount of the whole contents of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST every week, the language of complaint, beseechment, gloomy, warning and closely impending and irreparable death, blotting out and condign punishment from God on the church if she neglect to bestow out of her abundance. What the church so sorely needs is to keep in pace with the progress of the world, etc., etc.

Why "Spiritism" did not always, and now, phenomenalize in ways to suit Mr. Lhamon, and why he has had only roundabout and indifferent experience "with his grandmother trotting herself off to some utter stranger and then wait for him to hire that stranger to give him an introduction to her," as he intimates was done, I am not able to tell. "Mediums" have told me that the clergy are generally very "mercenary" with them. They think that is because they get so many little favors; they do not expect to pay like other people, etc. Then, too, Mr. L. may have played "Peck's-bad-boy" games on his grandmother, therefore she may have preferred to meet him on her dignity.

Mr. L. objects to "so much Spiritualist machinery for their purposes." The Pietists, Quakers, some Disciples of Christ and many outsiders of all churches do the same, of those who build costly houses and mortgage them and their costly machinery, and hire high-priced choirs and attractive preachers and do questionable things to raise money to float all this, and then say it is all done to draw people of influence there, you know, to interest them in the interests of religion, etc., and to worship God — Spirit, Kurios, Adoni, Elohim, Yahweh—in spirit and in truth, for God seeketh such to worship. Many do seriously object to these things, because they savor of the spirit of materialism and not of the God-spirit, and that they are destructive of the spiritualism that prevailed in the church in the apostolic times, and often when displays much like those among Spiritualists and Christian Science healers in these days, were of frequent occurrence.

The stock reply for this is that "the days of miracles are gone, but miracles can be proved by the Bible." That is very risky now. Mr. L. says, "When Christ [he meant Jesus] came back from the dead he needed no medium to help him into the presence of the disciples." Indeed! How does he know? Were not the disciples mediums? Were they not Spirit-inspired? What doos Mr. L. know about anything God or Jesus ever did without a medium? We are not discussing "the genera or species," but the fact of media. How does Mr. L. relate media if he makes any use of it in his salvation work? Does any spirit act without media? Without theory we could not have much philosophy. Mr. L. says, "It is neither fair nor honest to deny the phenomena to get rid of the theory." The preachers have done a vast amount of denying to get rid of both. Many of them now admit the facts and attempt to fit them to theories. They may find trouble and sorrow in fitting their theory of the Bible and the theory of the psychologists and the facts of spirit phenomena all into one.

Mr. Lhamon will, I think, now see his mistake in saying, "The Sybert Commission of the University of Pennsylvania made the most decisive report against Spiritualism ever given to the world." The secretary, Mr. Fullerton, of whom I have personal knowledge, was characteristically exact in his language. He said, "So far as it has shown itself before me, and I give no opinion beyond that, Spiritualism presents the melancholy spectacle of gross fraud perpetrated upon an uncritical portion of the community." There is no bias there. It is the verdict of facts—nothing more, nothing less.

No room or need for innuendo or insinuation without facts, which is the basest and last resort of a malicious, depraved person. The commission did not traverse beyond their case and make it a travesty. They had on their hands a company of persons claiming to be spirit mediums, who proved themselves to be, on no matter what grounds or causes, merely incompetents. Now on that basis alone—and that was sufficient—the work of the commissioner was carried to consummation. It was not a failure, because they reported what they found. They found incompetency in their mediums. Now it is the commonest thing to find in any incompetent professional the attempt to supplement incompetency by fraud in some kind of way. The commission found that and reported it. Their report did and meant no more. Many think they should have continued investigation with other mediums, and indefinitely, as many other companies of investigators have done. Prof. Robert Hare, of this university, investigated as an Atheist, and was convinced of the truth of spirit return and remained in that faith all his days. Sir William Crookes, the eminent scientist, said lately before the British Scientific Association, "I did not admire Spiritualism, but thought I would devote a few weeks to investigation of it. It lengthened into four or more years. I was then able to say as I say now, that I know the truth of spirit return."

The lists of eminent men who believe and know this are large, and are in every cultured country, in pulpits, universities, law, medicine, the sciences, governments, from England's Queen to our Lincoln, Rev. Canons Farrar, Wilberforce, W. Stainton, Moses-"Oxon," Editor Hall, London Art Journal, Editor Stead, Review of Reviews, Sir Alfred Tennyson, the Brownings, Longfellow, the Wesley family for generations, Geo. Whitefield, Adam Clarke, Bishops Emery, George, McKendrey, J. P. Newman, Bishop Thompson, Bishop Clarke. Space will not permit the hundreds of most eminent names of men and women I can give verifying the truth of spirit return, not "from the dead," but from the spirit state back to this.

To me the one question comprehending the whole is this: How could the continuity of the soul—the spirit, the person—ever have been known but by the return of the spirit? How could immortality ever have been known by the mortal without manifestation of that fact to him in this earth-life? Admitting this fact, the substance of the whole great fact is admitted. The intervening space being passable, the only remaining question is, How many may pass to and fro? All pass from the mortal side. If none return, why not? No answer can be given because there is none to answer back. Back from where? Is there a where? and no answer from it? Absurd. A writing purporting to be an answer is no proof if there can be no communication. Thus we trace to its death the absurdity of saying we know the fact of immortality when we deny the fact of spirit-manifestation of it. We keep to the question of fact. The question of how is independent. It may or may not be capable of solution. Let us not mix these questions too soon. If they are worth public examination they should have as thorough searching as possible. The truth can never hurt the truth. Anything else than truth is only for those most easily injured by it.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

W. T. HILTON.

Christian Endeavor stands for good citizenship. Here our young people find a broad field of usefulness. The need of activity in this department is urgent. The patriotism that this age demands at our hands is a civic rather than a military patriotism. We are cursed with three kinds of so-called patriots. The first is a patriot for revenue only. The second is the highly esteemed "good citizen," who is too busy with his private affairs to give any attention to civic duties; therefore he stays at home on election days and allows the "bosses" and their paymasters, the bar and whiskey ring, to dictate our legislation and the manner of executing our laws. The third is the partisan patriot. He is for party first, and country second. He delights to say that he never scratches the ticket. He will stand for the party nominees, though they be knaves and outlaws.

Now Christian Endeavor stands for a patriotism different from all these. The Christian Endeavor patriot says: "I am a citizen; I must perform the duties of citizenship. I have no right to neglect these obligations. My private interests must not interfere with them. I must act an unselfish part." As he drops his ballot in the box he says, "For my country and my God." While the partisan says, "I never scratch the ticket," the Christian Endeavor patriot says, "I always scratch it." Yes, Christian Endeavor is raising up a class of patriots that may very appropriately be called "ticket scratchers." They are good citizens in name and in fact. They do not neglect their duty; they do not permit party or selfish interests to turn them aside from doing what is for the highest good of their city, state or country.

Let Christian Endeavor train its members in good citizenship. It has undertaken no greater, grander, broader work than this.

Another open door for Christian Endeavor is the opportunity it has to foster unity among the people of God. I know that Christian unity is not a part of the Christian Endeavor idea. It stands for interdenominational fellowship rather than anti-denominational unity. This, however, should not deter us from giving sympathy and support to the movement. It does not ask for all that we plead for, but it is a step, and a very long one, in the right direction. The founders of Christian Endeavor built as well as they knew. They cut by the largest pattern they had. They sewed up the jacket and put it on, but already the young giant is beginning to burst out the seams. He is to be greater than those who gave him life. His fathers, with their religious training and environment, could not make a jacket larger than the one known as interdenominational fellowship. But, as the scientist would say, it was the nature of this youngster to evolve. As he grows he will embody principles greater than were ever dreamed of by those who gave him his start in life. We have seen this tendency of the Christian Endeavor movement, and for this reason it has found no great favor with us.

We want unity, organic unity. We believe that the spirit of unity is now in the air, and that it is taking possession of the hearts of men. We confidently look for the time when all the people of God shall be one. This unity may not come as we think it is going to come; perhaps not as we, seeing as we now do, would like to have it come. But we know that it will come. We have what we feel sure is the scriptural basis of Christian unity. One truth, however, we must learn: Fraternity must precede unity. Until we recognize in each other brethren we cannot be united, it matters not what basis of unity we may have. This very necessary truth Christian Endeavor is teaching us. While it stands for interdenominational fellowship, denominational walls are being broken down. Even now they are so low that we may look over and see that on the other side are those who love God. This, I say, is a necessary antecedent. The question is sometimes asked, Why not have wise and good men from all churches meet in council and decide upon some basis of unity? You had as well call a council of baboons to decide the question. It will never be settled in that way. We may formulate bases of unity, but we can never persuade or coax the people to accept our formulas. It cannot be done by legislation. Oneness among the people of God will be rather the result of growth. This truth gives Christian Endeavor its opportunity. It is a movement among young people of all denominations. It is bringing them into closer fellowship. They are learning the value of united effort in Christian work. They see the evils that grow out of division. Imperceptibly and unknown to themselves the desire for unicn grows upon them. Then, and not till then, will they be willing to consider the basis of unity.

These are some of the possibilities of Christian Endeavor. It represents the practical side of Christianity. It knows nothing about theology. Its mission is to teach us new methods in Christian activity. While it continues to do this it will be a growing force in the church. Its life depends upon its being up to date. If it becomes artificial and formal in its methods its influence will be at an end. Its course will have been run, and it will have to give place to some new movement.

We as a people have adopted it because it looks in the right direction. Its methods are practical, and it cares very little for metaphysical rubbish or theological jargon. Such a movement will always commend itself to us. While it does not ask for all that we ask for, it prepares the people to see the beauty and broadness of our great plea. As long as it continues to advocate the principles it now does and to do the great work it has done, it deserves and should receive our sympathy and our hearty approval.

CHRISTIANITY VERSUS CHURCHIANITY.

S. M. FOWLER.

More and more as the days go by am I impressed with the thought that we are making use of the word church never thought of in New Testament times. I can find no more evidence that Christ left what we call an organized church on earth, or that the apostles ever attempted such a thing, than that he or they gave us a systematic theology. He taught us great truths concerning God, his love and care of mankind, their condition and needs and destiny, exemplifying all he taught in his sinless, devoted life and victory over death, and told the disciples to tell it to the world.

The church was a confluence of homogeneous lives with a purpose, and left to the dictates of enlightened common sense to carry out that purpose. The measures they would adopt and the appointments they would make would necessarily be influenced by the habits of the people and apparent needs to be met, while a conformity of life to the divine image set before them was the mark ever in view to be gained.

A change in these measures and appointments with the expansion of thought and elevation of life would be as natural and necessary as the change in form from the blade to the full corn in the ear, or from the conduct of a struggling few for the acceptance of a divine principle to the application of that principle in a well-ordered community or a divinely regulated state.

Jesus' mission was to bring in the reign of God, or the kingdom of heaven, when the will of God would be done on earth as in heaven, done freely, done cheerfully, done by all and all the time. It was to be a growth, an unfolding, an ever-rising life. Hence Jesus forbade the backward look. The risen, glorified Christ, enthroned in the firmament of thought, was and is and ever will be an ideal above and before us to be reached. Christ in the heart, Christ in the home, Christ in the school and Christ in the state.

The first forms of the church work and life are no more adapted to its triumph and full developments than the swaddling bands of infancy to the full-grown man. Character is the end and not organization, and he who would cast out a devil in the name of Christ should never be shunned or forbidden. This contention about orders and ordinances, officers and their duties according to New Testament precedents, to me seems like shallow twaddle. There is only one changeless precedent in New Testament order and that is to adapt yourself to the work to be done now as best you can, with the light you have.

Christian churches or congregations of Christians are for mutual improvement, cooperation and helpfulness. And when certain things are agreed to and appointments made in the line of an end sought, that congregation is organized.

And whenever an organization is prompted by love of others and love of truth and good, sustained by benevolence and conducted in wisdom and justice to meet the needs of a brother and the approval of our Father, it is Christian, it is Christ's, and it is equally proper to call it Christ's congregation or church, church or congregation of Christ or Christian church or assembly, or Christian convention. Any such organization the Y. M. C. A., the W. C. T. U., the Y. P. S. C. E., or S. S., or a missionary society, is the church of Christ operating in this specified way. The different denominations as they came up were the best expression of the Spirit of Christ that the intelligence and spirit of the times would afford—not the best possible. That is yet before us. We will never reach it by looking back. John saw it away down the ages of apostasy through which the church has passed and is passing, after the beast and false prophet had dropped in the abyss, Babylon had sunk to rise no more and the New Jerusalem had descended from God out of heaven with its precious stone walls, pearly gates, tree of life, streets of gold, swept by the river of the water of life from the throne of God and the Lamb—when the tabernacle of God is with men and the Lamb its fadeless light.

Looking unto Jesus and reflecting upon all what we see in him is the whole of Christianity. The world knows him, the the devils know him, and seeing him knees will bow and tongues confess. More Christianity and less churchianity is the great need.

The Church and the World.

Called out from the world:—2 Cor. 6:14-18; Jno. 17: 9-11.
Hated by the world:—Jno. 15:18, 19.
Unconformed to the world:—Rom. 12:2.

NEW ENGLISH BOOKS.

The great wonder of the literary world in England this season is the extraordinary number of splendid books of travel newly issued. I propose in this letter to devote my space to some of these fresh literary revelations, seeing that I have been feasting my own mind on some of them and should like to impart to my American friends some of my impressions after the enjoyment.

"THE KINGDOM OF THE YELLOW ROBE."

This is the title of a singularly interesting book on that ever-interesting country, Siam. It is from the pen of Ernest Young, late of the Educational Department, Siam. It is replete with religious as well as social, historical and political information. There is not a more romantic country on earth than Siam. Its wonderful capital, Bangkok, is the Venice of the East. A voyage on its lovely river, the Meinam, is evidently a progress through a veritable fairyland. And this country is crammed with religious associations, all pagan, but all fanatic, eccentric and utterly different from any of the systems of spiritual life of other lands. Here is one more country which will have to be opened up by our own missionaries, when our great Foreign Missionary Society—for great it is truly becoming—shall have the resources to expand its operations to that extent. Siam is Buddhist, but yet its Buddhism is sui generis. The people have made their religious life as picturesque and original as they are themselve. They are a kindly, laughing, dolce non far niente race, loving ease and pleasure, but sparkling with intelligence and vivacity, and only needing Christ and his Word to render them one of the foremost nations of the great East. We had last year the King of Siam, Chululingkorn, here amongst us in England. He spoke English perfectly, and created astonishment by his complete comprehension of all that he saw and his lively interest in everything that was worth noticing. The most wonderful thing about Siam is perhaps its child-life. The boys are perfectly free and independent. They remain unclothed as long as they can be called little boys; they scamper along the roads, driving young bullocks, sit on the backs of tame buffaloes as they plough the rice-fields, steal bananas, climb trees for cocoanuts, smoke enormous cigarettes, paddle their own canoes, never bother their heads about getting home in time for meals, lie about in shady places to rest, never read books, do not know the inside of a school, and spend the whole day according to their own idea of amusement. Yet any of these children who are sent to school make very bright pupils. Only a mere handful as yet attend any kind of school, but those have to do so who desire to obtain government employment. They learn English with remarkable rapidity in a very few months, which is much more than a Frenchman or a German could do. On the head of each child is allowed to grow a little tuft of hair in the center of a shaven crown. At the age of about fourteen this is removed with extraordinary religious rites. The "shaving of the topnot" is one of the most curious religious ceremonies practiced in the world. Mr. Ernest Young devotes a long and interesting chapter to its description.

THE SHAVING OF THE TOPNOT.

The ceremony of tonsure is a very ancient one, and is found existing in many countries widely separated from each other. The priests of Isis, the Hindu Siva, the Roman Catholic monks, the old Peruvian brothers all practiced it. According to Hindu legend there lies under the tuft in the center of the crown, which is reverenced as the summit of the human body, a microscopic aperture, through which the human spirit finds entrance at birth and departs at death. When Ravana, one of the giant kings of Ceylon, once carelessly or caressingly laid the tip of his finger upon the hair of the beautiful Vedavatti, she turned to him in direst anger, declaring that after such an outrageous insult life was no longer possible to her, and that she would speedily cut off her abundant and outraged locks and then perish in the flames before him. In Siam from the earliest days the one tuft left after constant shaving is daily combed, twisted, oiled and tied in a knot. A jeweled pin stuck through it, or a small wreath of flowers encircling it, are its usual adornments. It is never shaved off till it is finally removed with great pomp and ritual which lasts three days, during which time the Buddhist priests have much to do with the boy or girl. On the memorable day when the operation is to begin a gilded image of Buddha is placed reverentially on an altar, surrounded with candles, incense sticks and flowers. Round this altar is formed a circle of hollowed vessels of gold and silver, with the mystic conchshell and the shears and scissors. Offerings of dainty food are placed on plates of plaited leaves, these being for the tutelary deities of the place. On a throne of white cloth, most curiously made, covered with curtains of gauze and gold, sits the young candidate to be bathed with holy water when the topnot has been removed. But first there is placed on the throne a nine-storied pagoda, of very frail but ornamental material, on the nine stages of which are sweetmeats that are supposed to be delicious to the god Ketu. Then begins a wonderful round of ceremonies, prayers, offerings and feastings of many friends and guests. Monks and priests come and go, gongs are ringing all the time and each of the three days closes with merriment and joy. When the topnot has been cut off all the hairs are subjected to a variety of extra rites, all of which are supposed to have to do with different gods, demons and spirits.

THE FAITH OF IDOLATERS.

Why have I thought it worth while to allude to these curious superstitions? Just because they illustrate the truth that no nation is without its system of faith. And in the East faith is the unseen, is endless. Therefore it is evident that there is in countries like Siam the most promising soil for the planting of the tree of the true faith. Here we have a wonderfully clever people, who believe in countless unrealities. Why not hasten to give them something worthy of their faculty of credence? They are an affectionate and loveable race, who will take the truth with kindly readiness when it is lovingly prociaimed to them. Of course, the numerous Buddhist priests would oppose what might injure their vested interests, but here is a land in which the young could be captured for Christ in mission schools. Siam has been two long neglected. Not much has beed attempted there by the great societies. Let us cast our eyes on that beautiful land and its wonderful opening for the gospel. If we do not evangelize it the French will Romanize it, for they are the paramount power in that great part of the country.

THE LAND THAT IS SHUT AGAINST THE GOSPEL.

To my mind the most interesting country in the world is Tibet, that heart of Asia, which is also sometimes called "the roof of the world." This is now the one and only land in the whole world absolutely closed against the gospel and the missionary for Christ. Encircled by huge mountain ramparts the Tibetans have hermetically shut every avenue against Western religious ideas. Here is the stronghold of Buddhism without a single missionary of the cross. Two books have been published this year which have fascinated the English reading public. The first was the thrilling account by Mr. Walter Savage Landor, of his fearful perils and atrocious treatment in Tibet. The other, only a few weeks ago, is Mr. Sven Heden's great new book on his wonderful journey towards Lhasa. About this extraordinary country you will some day be hearing from your own adventurous countryman, Mr. William Jameson Reid, who was interviewed in London in August. He arrived here from Boston on his way to Tibet, which he intends to penetrate from the western border of China. On Mr. Sven Heden's adventures I will not attemp to write, for I should be commencing to deal with a whole world of exciting travel. To us Christian people, however, there is a little book recently published in London, of far greater interest than those works of famous travelers which I have been describing. A work only costing eighteen pence, "Pioneering in Tibet," by Annie R. Taylor, tells that a young English missionary lady has made one of the most audacious and heroic attempts on record to penetrate this dark citadel of heathenism. This splendid Christian girl was filled with the desire to become a missionary at the early age of sixteen. For a time she worked in China, but she always felt that Tibet was to be the land of her adoption, and thither she eventually found her way. Miss Taylor went from Darjeeling into Sikkim, where for ten months she never saw a European. She lived in a hut near a Tibetan monostery and met with her faithful servant, Pontso, who has served her with such fidelity ever since. In September, 1892, she started on a remarkable journey. Over lofty mountains, amid snow and ice, through regions infested with brigands, facing hardships and dangers that would have quelled any but the stoutest heart, this heroine of the faith pressed on. "I went," she says, "in simple faith, believing that the Lord had called me." Her faith was rewarded, for in reading of her adventures, it seems as if she had led a charmed life. Robbed of her horses and goods, with several hairbreadth escapes from death, she yet succeeded in reaching within three days' ride of the capital, Lhasa, the furthest advance on to the forbidden ground hitherto attained by any European traveler. But her guide, a Chinaman, proved faithless, and going on ahead informed the officials of her coming. Consequently she was stopped by soldiers, who treated her respectfully, but assured her they would lose their lives if they allowed her to pass. Though turned back, her journey was not a fruitless one, for she was enabled to obtain a knowledge of the people, their land and their customs, which she could not in any other have secured. It is but a matter of time. When the central citadel of Asia's idolatry has once been captured for Jesus, then all the kingdoms of that mighty continent will become tributary to the Heavenly King. Will our churches of Christ send some of our noble young men and women to Tibet? How I should rejoice to see that day!

Fredericksburg (Virginia) Letter.

From an appeal through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, some weeks ago, some dollars were added to our building fund for the new Christian Church at Fredericksburg, Va. One letter comes from our Bro. G. L. Wharton, in far-away India, enclosing an order on A. McLean for an amount for Fredericksburg. This comes from the Foreign Field to our Home work. To day we received a letter from Bro. M. McDonald, of Palmyra, Mo., enclosing a $10 check, who says: "I noticed your appeal in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for money to build for our brethren a house of worship in the old and historic town of Fredericksburg. This is highly commendable in you and I hope your efforts may be attended with abundant success. My old home was near Fredericksburg, and although I have lived here for over 35 years I have a warm spot in my heart for the old state and her dear people, never to be effaced. I trust that of the many brethren who read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST quite a number have and others may see fit to answer your appeals."

The work was begun in this old historic town in 1832, sixty-six years ago, the present building being completed in 1833. For a few years prior to the Civil War the work grew and flourished and many of the best citizens of Fredericksburg endorsed the religious views of the then "Current Reformation." Such worthies as John Ferguson, J. G. Parrish, Jas. B. Goss, Peter Ainslie, Dr. Duvall, G. W. Abell, Silas Shelburne, Alexander Campbell and others were heard from the quaint old pulpit. And though the work here has long since gone to pieces—for more than thirty years not the sound of a Christian preacher's voice was heard from its pulpit—the memory of these great old men of pioneer days still remain with our town people. And our old building, plain, square-built, "squatty," dark and weather-beaten, battered and torn by shot and shell and the ravages of time, is yet held in some sort of respect and patriarchal veneration. Sight-seers to our town frequently call for the keys to "the old church," and both Northern and Southern visitors will drop a tear when they see the sad wreck of shot and shell, and remember the sixties when they were "tenting on the old came ground."

Brethren, this is our church home in the old historic city of Fredericksburg, Va. A real war relic, a souvenir of the Civil War that we have had on our hands since Dec. 1862 and that we are asking Uncle Sam to place in his list of "war claims." With whatsoever appearance it may now present, and with whatever title you may signify this ancient pile, you are on historic and sacred ground and should tread softly. The walls were laid in 1832, are still massive and contain many a once consecrated brick. In December, 1862, in the desperate battle of Fredericksburg, this old building stood right in the range of the Northern guns. For twelve hours of terrific bombardment a horrible deluge of leaden storm was poured upon the streets and houses of Fredericksburg.

The inhabitants fled for their lives from this terrible leaden storm that was beating their homes to pieces, and the town was left to the awful ravages of cruel war.

In "these scenes so awfully grand and terrible," on whose fields of battle more men have fallen than in any similar area in all the world, the old Fredericksburg Christian Church of 1833 met its doom. The building, besides being torn and and damaged by shot and shell, was, after the battles of Fredericksburg and the Wilderness, used as a hospital for Federal soldiers.

The large windows were torn out, the floors stained with blood, the benches made into coffins, the dead buried in the churchyard, the walls damaged, fences burned, stoves destroyed, the communion service carried off, and much other damage, together with the scattering of the membership, left the church completely disorganized. After several futile attempts to repair the building, the idea of its ever again being used as a house for the worship of God was totally abandoned, and for thirty-five years this "house of the Lord," was left unto its people desolate, the eyesore and common property of the town and a disgrace to the cause for which it was dedicated.

Come with me inside. You will find few changes. You are on the same blood-stained and uncarpeted floor, with some of the same benches on which dead soldiers lay. The walls are riddled with bullet holes from shot and shell that came through its broken panes. In one facing of the gallery may be seen two cannon ball holes. On the plain, square box pulpit rests the Bible that Campbell and other worthy pioneers read their lesson and text from sixty years ago; the plastering on the inside is giving way, and shows many ugly scars. An old-fashioned gallery runs two lengths of the building and the great plain windows have the upper sash boarded up. Not a stitch of carpeting on our floors, no chandeliers, no stained glass or ornament of any description, plain pitcher and glass for our communion service, no baptistery.

Brethren, this is a fine field; with a little money concentrated here a fine work could be done and our cause firmly established in this section of Virginia. The point is strategic. But we must build. We ought to have a good house of worship here. We could afford to put $5,000 here, for every dollar we put here will count in returns to the cause. If every brother Disciple who reads this article would send us one dollar we could build a splendid house of worship, and with a good church home a fine work can be done. The sacrifice you would make in sending us a dollar would not mean muck to you, but very much to the cause and our Virginia work. The Fredericksburg work was freely discussed at our late Virginia state convention. Our people generally feel the importance of the field and necessity of cultivating it, but recognize the fact that we ought and must have a better building. I am raising a building fund. Over half the amount I started out to raise has been subscrsbed and part paid in. Will you not emulate the example of Bro. McDonald and send us a donation? CEPHAS SHELBURNE.

Iowa Letter.

Not long after the death of President Schaffer, of the State University of Iowa, speculation as to his successor became rife. Among the names made prominent so far stands that of Chancellor W. B. Craig, of Drake University. He is an alumnus of that school, and would prove himself competent for the place and immensely popular with the students. I quote from a letter just in from an educator and church worker in Western Iowa: "Hurrah for Chancellor Craig for Pres. S. U. I.! This would honor the Chancellor, but I say, above all things else, Drake University to the front!" Others who have been honored by the people of Iowa in this informal list of nominees are Prof. Beardshear, of Ames Agricultural College; Mr. McLean, Dean of the Law Department, S. U. I., and Homer Seerley, of the State Normal School. Iowa feels proud of all four here mentioned, and wishes they could all be elected.

The Iowa contingent in the Minnesota State University is of interest to me on several counts. It is composed of three persons at least. There may be others of which I do not know. All these are members of our churches. No external church influences have contributed to their preferment. Personal merit and fitness for the work has elevated them. They were all schoolmates of mine some years ago. One of them is my own brother. To stand by a man from his cradle, to see him in the hands of Providence, serving now here, now there, and winning merited distinction, is always an inspitation. And when that man is your brother it means more yet. Another of this trio is a sister of Bruce Shepherd, Dean of the College of Letters in Drake, and the other is Willett Hayes, a brother of C. L. Hayes, of Eldora, Iowa. Prof. Hayes is well up in the Agricultural Department. Dr. G. D. Haggard has just taken classes in the Medical Department, and Miss Shepherd is an expert in another department.

In two hours more the polls will close and election day will have determined the fate of many men and not a few measures. It is interesting to an Iowa Prohibi ionist to note the expressions of Iowa and Western papers upon the prospects of Silas Swallow, of Pennsylvania, in his contest with Matthew Quay and the two machines he controls. Swallow made his reputation as a Prohibitionist. He is running now on that ticket, and is endorsed by the Good Government Club and other reform factions. It is amusing to see how hard some of our papers strive to make themselves and the people believe that Prohibition is not in it and that his victory, which is quite probable, will mean nothing for Prohibition. Nevertheless, his election would stand as a landmark in the history of the party. It would be an honor to his state, a blessing to the whole nation and an omen of a brighter political future.

Do extremes beget extremes? If so, may we not account for "temperance fanatics?" They may by begotten by extreme blindness of anti-Prohibitionists. In the November number of the Review of Reviews the editor glories in what Gen. Wood has done in administering the Government of Santiago. And we should all glory in the achievements of this distinguished physician and renowned soldier. He has reduced the death rate 75 per cent. The editor in listing the means used never says one word about one of the primary means to this and other good ends. Brig. Gen. Leonard Wood shut up the rumshops. Why did the editor mention many minor means and preserve silence on this?

In the October number of the same Review Dr. Carroll Denham writes at length upon the "Medical and Sanitary Aspects of the War." He contrasts the camp at Sibony, "where yellow fever was gaining with immense stride," with Camp McCalla at Guantanamo, where there was not a case. In accounting for this he uses this significant sentence: "As soon as they were in possession of the shore (of Guantanamo) every hut on the beach was burned (to destroy disease germs) and the heads were knocked out of all the casks of Spanish wine." Nothing is more cheering to a student of the times than the new attitude of the most eminent physicians and surgeons on the alcohol question. With an increasing number it is no longer allowed a place among remedial agents.

One of my classes in the Bible Department of Drake University—a class of nineteen—upon examination furnishes this interesting list of facts: They average eight years in the church; they can all repeat the so-called Lord's Prayer; all but one can repeat the Ten Commandments and have read the New Testament; two have read it ten times, one four times, three three times, five two times and two but one time; seven have read the whole of the Old Testament, and four times is the most for any one; three of the psalms is the most any one could repeat, and five were unable to repeat one; but five were able to repeat the love chapter in Paul's Corinthian Letters. This examination was taken without warning. Most of the class are first-year students. The same questions will be put and answered later in the year and results reported. Why not hear from other college classes along similar lines?

A corrected list of Iowa delegates to our National Conventions, Chattanooga, Tenn., is as follows: F. M. Drake, H. O. Breeden, W. W. Williams and daughter, Miss Jessie; S. T. Martin, B. H. Witmer, wife and daughter; A. F. Sanderson, G. T. Smith, Annette Newcomber, Miss Kampkee, of Cedar Rapids; Mrs. J. R. Davis and Mrs. C. S. Page, D. F. Givens and one whose name I have not learned—sixteen in all.

The battleship, Oregon, astonished the world by its long voyage from the Pacific to the Atlantic in time to assist in the sinking of Cervera's fleet. It is now going back to the Pacific and probably to Manila. And, what is more interesting to readers in my own state, the Iowa goes with it. A. M. HAGGARD.

Bethany.

"The History of Education among the Disciples" would be a fruitful theme for some gifted pen. Nor would it be wanting in some of the choicest elements of Christian heroism. It would have to relate how that Mr. Campbell, confronting as he did the tremendous possibilities that were opening up to a movement yet in its infancy, with prophetic vision saw that to successfully meet the future we must be an educated people; that with even the Bible in our hands, going forth to win the world away from sectism, we must make our appeal to the cultured thought of Christendom, as well as to unfold its pages to the simple in understanding; that our ministry, although humble and free from the spirit of priestcraft, must yet be able to stand before kings. Like Paul, while being all things to all men, they had to be the very best among the best of men, and how heroically Mr. Campbell arose to the situation and met the issue would be a part of the chronicle. Without means or resources for meeting this greater demand, except for his own masterful genius, back in the forest of a country then scarcely beyond the borders of civilization, he began to plant the enterprise that, under God, has been so efficient in molding and training the thought of our times.

The historian would have to relate how it was that he arose at four o'clock in the morning to build fires and to do the menial work of a janitor for his students; how, at six o'clock, the servant was transformed into the master, and the infant college met in the chapel for morning prayers; how, at eight o'clock, the work began in the recitation room, to continue for the remainder of the day; how that the president taught in every grade, in every kind, and in every variety and branch of knowledge, with the Bible above all and far in the forefront of all their work; how he reached out a helping hand to the poor boy that was willing to strive for an education and had not the means to acquire it, setting aside the profits of his publications to assist in this laudable work; how these boys, inspired by his own noble and indomitable spirit, "grasped the skirts of happy chance and grappled with their evil stars," growing in power and the accomplishments of higher training until they went forth to lead and compel the thought of their times.

But what might not the pen of the writer more say in relating the vicissitudes of this noble beginning as it advanced into the youth time and manhood of its larger life? It would be necessary to relate how this grand man, studying sixteen hours a day, busy as an editor, debater, preacher, professor, farmer and man of affairs, yet had to command enough time and means to build and endow a college; how at the age of sixty, after the first building had been destroyed by fire, he went to the heroic task of laying the foundation of a larger building and a more extended work; how he appealed to the generosity of a young people, mostly situated in the rural districts; how nobly the South responded to his call and of their substance generously helped in this enterprise; how that, when the war came and swept it all away, and Mr. Campbell, now in his decline, had sometime since passed the reins over to other hands; how that, hoping almost in the face of despair, Mr. Pendleton and his noble coworkers, who had so long stayed at the side of their leader, now came heroically to the rescue. The secret history of the struggles and self-denials of this period will perhaps never be written. These were not men to parade their deeds before the world. Standing as they did under the shadow of the influence of a great and masterful personality, they had no hope—much less the desire—to rival him, or even to fill his large station in this great work; they did their best and under the then discouraging circumstances it was the best that could have been done by any one. It would take many pages to relate how Mr. Pendleton struggled with the financial question, sacrificing his own means and struggling in ways only known to himself and his most intimate associates to keep the institution up to the measure of its past efficiency, and how nobly he succeeded amid much misunderstanding and unjust criticism; how Professor Loos taught the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French and German languages and literatures, while at the same time he filled the pulpit of the church on Sunday, was secretary of the faculty, attended and took part in most of the important conventions of our brotherhood, was always busy with his pen as an editor, besides being useful in many other ways in the great work for which Mr. Campbell had trained him. This, and much more of these and many other heroes of whom they are fair specimens, our historian would call up in review were he to be true to the history of education among the Disciples.

The results of these struggles and sacrifices we are now enjoying with scarcely a thought of the source from whence they came. After the war had swept away Bethany's endowment, and sectional feeling had played havoc with her patronage, situated as she was in the anomalous position of being neither on the one side nor on the other, and yet a part of both, it required the rarest kind of skill and forbearance to tide her over those troublous times. The noblest and best things are born of adversity, and this our educational work is no exception, nor indeed is the work of education anywhere.

Out of reverses, misfortunes, struggles, sacrifices and untold labors, Bethany has had a splendid progeny in all the walks of life, who have come up through great tribulation. As matters now stand, by one more comparatively easy effort on the part of our people, she could be placed in a safe and secure position for all future time, and it would only be an act of gratitude for us to attend to this at once, while on the other hand it would be the basest ingratitude for us to let her die after what she has accomplished for us. Bethany is the crown of Mr. Campbell's great work, the tree of his own planting, and she is the only visible monument to his memory. What she has done is only a specimen of what she is now doing, and a promise of what she is yet able to do in the future. Success to all other educational enterprises among us! Bethany has always rejoiced in their prosperity, and lent them her sons. We need them all, but most of all we still need the old pioneer—the Alma Mater of all of our educational institutions, Bethany College. J. L. DARSIE.

A Time for Enlargement.

A great painter, having put the dream of his soul upon canvas, called in his master and asked for his criticisms. "Wider!" was the master's exhortation—"Wider!"

The work of the C. W. B. M. embodies the dream of a great sisterhoood. It is beautiful with the beauty of self-sacrifice and warm with the coloring of love and sympathy. But our Master is not satisfied. Plainly he has written across the canvas, "Wider! Wider!"

The Woman's Board of Missions is entering upon its silver anniversary. The coming year should be marked by such enlargement as has been in no single year before. What are some of the ways in which the work should be widened?

The membership should be increased. The work of the society should be brought before the whole church and all of its women urged to active co-operation. Many need but to learn of the work to become joyful partakers in it.

New societies should be organized. This work must not be left altogether to organizers. Many churches are out of the way of organizers' visits altogether. How could any auxiliary more fittingly mark the anniversary year than by the organization of a society in in some neighboring church or mission?

Larger offerings should be made. We have talked for these many years about "our dues," and through the payment of these habits of systematic giving have been established. But we should be going on from grace to grace. None who have the means at command for larger giving should be satisfied with the minimum. Other boards look to these two avenues of increase—the enlistment of new contributors and the growth in the offerings of those heretofore enlisted. The C. W. B. M. has not depended too much upon the former, but it must depend more and more each year upon the latter. We are asked for "A Silver Offering for the Silver Anniversary." This offering should run up into the tens of thousands of dollars; indeed, we have reason to believe that it will. Shall it not mark the beginning of a new era in all our giving?

Missionary forces should be strengthened and new fields entered. It seems trite to say that success is costly, but there are still many who do not seem to realize the truth of the saying. Success must be followed up by new outlays, if it is to be held. Opportunities improved bring insistent opportunities.

There should be a more complete consecration to the work. Our service to Christ should cease to be an incident in our lives, and become life itself. The years of the past have failed to leave with us their full lesson unless they have taught us our own need as well as the need of the world.

C. W. B. M. Day is upon us. Shall it not be a time for enlargement?

JESSIE BROWN POUNDS.

The Sign of a New Era.

The poet Lowell says:

"At the birth of each new era, with a recognizing start, Nation wildly looks at nation, standing with mute lips apart."

Have we reached the dawn of such an era for the temperance cause? Three things indicate that we have.

The first is that the civilized nations of the earth are putting cause and effect together on the alcohol question as never before. In France, Switzerland and Belgium the increasing use of alcohol is recognized as the cause of a physical decline in stature that is filling those nations with alarm for their future. Close investigation is proving to the Kaiser that the beer drinking soldier has only about eighty per cent. of the endurance of the total abstainer, and economists are calling attention to the bad effects that increasing drink habits are having upon German industries. The young Czar of Russia, alarmed at the inroads which he sees alcohol making upon his army and people, is striving to stem the tide. Thoughtful Englishmen are saying that Britain's greatest enemy is alcohol. In our own country its effects upon our soldiers, in home camps and on the field, have been made sadly evident to the American people.

The second sign of the coming of a new era on the alcohol question is that the truth against alcohol is out. Everything that its advocates can say in its favor is controverted by the strongest scientific authorities of the world, who pronounce it a poison—the genius of degeneracy. Nothing can hide this truth from the people and their children whose heritage it is. Vain are the efforts to make the clock of the world move backward. Its great pendulum swings to the rythm of truth. In the fullness of time it strikes the death knell of error, and when that time comes no man can turn the hand back on the dial.

The third sign is that the per capita consumption of alcohol has begun to decline in this country, although its consumption is increasing in other nations. The New York Medical Record puts this decline during the last ten years at thirty per cent. Prior to that time there was a continual increase. During these years some of our prohibitory laws have been repealed, others have been weakened; less rather than more temperance platform work has been done, and more than four million people have come to us from foreign lands, bringing with them the alcoholic habits of the Old World. In the face of all these unfavorable conditions why has the per capita consumption of alcohol in this country decreased during this time, while previously it increased? Our English friends are doing as much church, society and band of hope work as we, and perhaps more, yet England's drink bill for 1897 ran up to $16,500,000 more than that of the preceding year.

The only new feature introduced into temance work in this country during the past ten years so generally as to touch all sections, and the only method of importance in which our temperance work differs from that of England, is that of temperance education in the public schools. It is this which is getting the truth to the people so generally as already to bear fruit. It is this which is laying the foundation for the intelligent sobriety of the future American. We would not for a moment question the value of other temperance efforts which have helped to secure these results, but the figures show that such efforts without temperance education were inadequate to produce this decline.

"Duty determines destiny," said President Mckinley in his Omaha speech. It is the legal duty of nearly all the school boards and teachers in this country to see that all pupils in all schools are taught the nature and effects of al-

HAVE YOU TRIED SWAMP-ROOT?

This Eminent Physician's Great Discovery Promptly Cures all Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid Troubles.

To Prove its Wonderf l Merits every St. Louis Christian-Evangelist Reader May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Free By Mail.

It is now conceded by eminent scientists that the most important organs of the whole body are the kidneys.

They filter your blood and work away night and day, whether you sleep or are awake.

People are apt to believe that kidney disease is a rather rare disease, but recent discoveries have proven that it is a most common trouble.

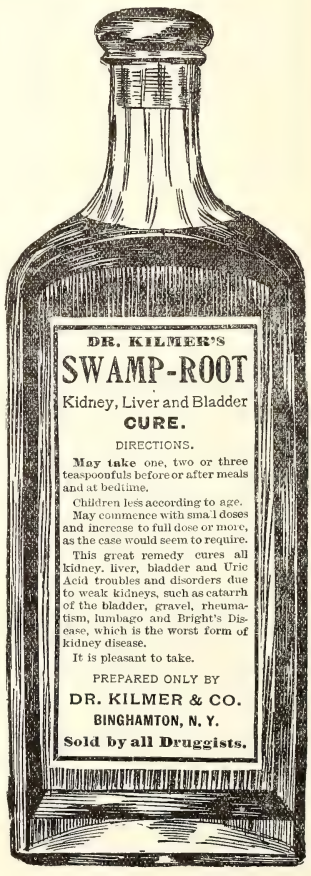
And the proof of this is that most diseases, perhaps 85 per cent., are caused in the beginning by disorders of the kidneys.

BECAUSE they fail to filter your blood.

You cannot be sick if your blood is pure—free from kidney poison and disease-breeding germs.

The treatment of some diseases may be delayed without danger, not so with kidney disease.

When your kidneys are not doing their work it will be manifested by pain or dull ache in the back, rheumatic pains, sciatica, sediment in urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up during the night, uric acid, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, sallow, unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, loss of energy and ambition.



If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed for twenty-four hours forms a sediment or settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp Root is a vegetable remedy, the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer (the eminent kidney and bladder specialist) and has truly wonderful restorative powers over the kidneys. It will be found by both men and women just what is needed in all cases of kidney, liver, bladder and uric acid troubles.

Swamp Root will set your whole system right.

The best proof of this is a trial, and nothing could be fairer than the offer to send a sample bottle of this great remedy and a book telling all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail to any address.

The great discovery, Swamp Root, is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to kindly mention the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending their addresses to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y.

If you are already convinced that Swamp Root is what you need, you can get the regular fifty-cent and one dollar bottles at the drug-stores.

coholic drinks, and other narcotics, together with other laws of health. The way in which that duty is performed during the next fifteen years will influence mightily the destiny of this nation.

New responsibilities have lately come to us as a people which we cannot shirk if we would. Unless I mistake the spirit of my countrymen, the motives which have led us on to this hour have been, not what we may gain for ourselves from Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines, but what we may be able to do for them as sharers of our civil and political liberties, our education, our freedom in religion and in the chance in life which is the American citizen's heritage. The liquor traffic represents unmitigated selfishness; it considers only what it can make for itself, without regard to the human ruin that follows every dollar of its gains. Its extension into our new possessions means the swift destruction of these peoples for whom our sons faced the Moloch of war.

The God of nations is calling us so to educate our people that this calamity may be averted from those for whom we are newly responsible, as we at the same time save our own children.

Report of the Educational Conference Held at Moberly, Mo., Nov. 1st, 1898.

In pursuance of a motion adopted at the Missouri Christian Convention at Nevada in September for an Educational Conference to be held at Moberly, Mo., Nov. 1, a number of brethren met at the Central Christian Church, Moberly, Mo., Tuesday, Nov. 1, at 2:30 P. M. Bro. T. P. Haley was selected as chairman and S. G. Clay secretary of the meeting.

Some time was consumed in arriving at an understanding whether this meeting was a meeting of the special committee appointed by the convention, or of the Conference provided for at the adoption of the report of committee on schools and education. Upon motion of President C. Lockhart it was resolved that this assembly regard itself the Educational Conference called by the Nevada Convention of the Christian churches of Missouri.

Upon motion the chairman appointed a committee of five on order of business to report at the evening session. The names of committee are as follows: O. C. Clay, G. W. Barnett, Z. Moore, G. A. Hoffmann, U. I. Quigley. Conference adjourned till 7:30 P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

At 7:30 the chairman called the Conference to order, and C. H. Winders led in prayer.

Committee on order of business made the following report:

Your committee begs leave to report:

1. That each of the schools represented be requested to present the present conditions and work of their institutions, and that as much as twenty minutes be allowed to each speaker if he so desires.

2. And that when this Conference adjourns, it be to meet in Moberly, Tuesday, Dec. 6, 1898, at 3 P. M.

3. That in the next Conference each congregation represented having less than 200 members shall be entitled to one vote; each having 200 and less than 500, two votes; each having 500 or more, three votes; each college two votes, and each Missouri preacher present one vote.

4. That the secretary of this Conference be instructed to notify the churches and preachers of the next Conference.

5. That this meeting elect a permanent chairman and secretary to properly work up the attendance of the next Conference.

O. C. CLAY, Chairman.

G. A. HOFFMANN, Sec. of Com.

The Conference then heard the following brethren make reports of their respective schools:

Clinton Lockhart, president Christian University, Canton, spoke of the advantages and financial condition of his college. Value of property, $50,000; endowment, $17,000; debt, nothing.

J. B. Jones, president Christian Orphan School, Fulton, stated the condition and advantages of his school.

Short speeches were made by the following brethren in behalf of various colleges: G. A. Hoffmann, for Bible College; Davis Errett, for a college of our own for young men; H. A. Denton, for the Orphan School at Fulton; F. O. Norton, favoring centralizing our energies upon some great university for the education of our young men, but not to the neglect of our Orphan School.

Col. W. H. Dulaney spoke of the necessity of immediate care for the Orphan School at Fulton.

J. W. Alexander made a strong plea for the school at Canton.

T. P. Haley said we are confronted by conditions of having various school interests and asked that we do all we can to meet the conditions as they are. Stated the purpose of this Conference not to center our influence upon any one institution.

O. C. Clay, Canton, offered the following resolution, which after some discussion was adopted:

Resolved, That when this Conference shall reconvene on Tuesday, December the 6th, next, at Moberly, as directed by the order adopted this evening, it shall consider and pass upon the propriety of establishing and endowing one school or more in this state by our great brotherhood; and, if favorably acted upon by this Conference, that an honest effort be made, then and there, to provide the ways and means to accomplish this great and desirable object. O. C. CLAY.

Upon motion of Davis Errett, J. W. Alexander, Gallatin, was elected permanent chairman of the Conference to be held in December. S. G. Clay elected secretary.

A committee of arrangements appointed consisting of D. H. Mounse, Moberly; R. B. Turner, Canton, and U. S. Quigley, Fulton.

It was moved and carried that the secretary have the minutes of this Conference published in our papers of the state.

Adjourned to meet in Moberly Tuesday, 3 P. M., Dec. 6.

T. P. HALEY, Chairman.

S. G. CLAY, Sec.

The public schools teach almost every known branch of study but the one most important branch of all. What does it profit your son if he has an intellect like a Newton, and a mentality an Admiral Crichton, if he have a weak and puny body and not the remotest idea of how to care for its health? A boy should be taught from the start that his health is his most precious endowment. Without health, all the talent all the genius, and all the ambition in the world are worthless. A boy should be taught that success in any walk of life that happiness, and life itself, are dependent upon his care of his health.

When a man feels that he is losing his health and vigor, when his cheeks no longer glow, his step is no longer elastic and the sparkle of health is no longer in his eyes, he should work less, rest more and resort to the right remedy to restore his bodily vigor. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a natural medicine—a scientific medicine. It does no violence to nature. It works with and not against nature. It promotes the natural processes of secretion and excretion. It imparts vitality and power to the whole system. It gives plumpness and color to the cheeks, sparkle to the eyes, steadiness to the nerves, strength to the muscles and the animation of health to the whole body. It makes the appetite keen and hearty. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and nerve-tonic and restorative. Medicine dealers sell it and have absolutely nothing else "just as good."

"I was afflicted with pimples and boils, and running sores on face and neck," writes Robert S. Wert, Esq., of No. 615 Galloway Ave., Columbus, Ohio. "I took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets,' and was cured."

Constipation is the commonest beginning and first cause of many serious diseases and it should always be treated with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets used in connection with the "Discovery." These are the most perfect natural laxatives and permanently cure.

Notes and News.

A neat frame church house, costing $1,500, was recently dedicated at Eagleville, Mo., by Morgan Morgans, assisted by W. D. Bryant. Also by M. S. Gillidett, Brethren Alderman and Moore, of Albany, Mo. Bro. Morgans and daughter followed the service with a protracted meeting. He and daughter had previously closed a good meeting with the new church at Mt. Moriah. The Harrison County convention will be held in the new church at Eagleville in February next.

Dedication.

Our new church was dedicated Oct. 30th, and we now possess one of the best houses of worship in Virginia. It is built of brick, a handsome structure on the outside, while the inside is an artistic blending of colors which is exceeding lovely. Cost, $8,400. Total value of property, about $9,050. G. F. Shields is our pastor. ADAH TORREY HENDERSON.

Texas Work.

Our little band here is prospering. Began three years ago with eight or nine members and now we number over 75. I am keeping this place and two other points. Have paid our preacher and contributed to the F. C. M. and the A. C. M. all they asked of us. Called, inaugurated and entertained the great camp-meeting last July, which resulted in the formation of "the Northwest Texas Christian Assotion," with Elder G. T. Thomas, of Young County, as evangelist. He is now here in a meeting. We have quite a number (to use Texas phraseology) "staked out" for gospel subjects, but can't tell the results. All this is done without a house of worship of our own in our associational work. We are quite "progressive." We have an annual Y. P. S. C. E. Their annual meeting, next July, will be held in Young County. Also an annual C. W. B. M. meeting, and report results at the same meeting. The receipts at our July meeting amounted to something over $500. We paid for our tent and preacher and singer and all other expenses incident to it, and came off out of debt, and are now hoping to do still larger things another year. Pray for us.

Church Celebration.

Lake City Church celebrated their second anniversary in their new and elegant house Nov. 12th and 13th. The feast and rejoicing in fellowship on Saturday and special program on Sunday. The year has been a most prosperous one, the reports showing the net gain to be over one hundred souls and the financial condition good. Two additions two weeks ago.

Note This.

I am trying to so announce the next conference to be held at Moberly, Tuesday, Dec. 6th, as to secure a large attendance from all parts of the state; and I hope every school and college in the state will send delegates to the conference.

In this connection I will call attention to railroad rates. The Western Passenger Association has granted one and one-thtrd fare on the certificate plan for the round trip, over all roads in the Association, upon the condition of 100 certificates for tickets costing more than 50 cents for regular fare one way. I will make a fuller announcement next week of this.

Del egates should send their names to D. H. Mounce, Moberly, Mo.

Hoping for a large attendance, I remain,

S. G. CLAY, Sec.

Red Oak.

The campaign has begun. God's Spirit is at work in the church. Bro. Brickert expects to commence a series of meetings soon. The congregations are increasing. Four accessions since last writing. Plans are being made for the advancement of the Lord's work here. Bro. Stark preached to us last Lord's day. Bro. Brickert has been delivering lectures at different places lately. Bro. Howard Furman has left for his home in Eldora; we are indeed sorry to lose so noble a young man. May God bless him, is our prayer. X. Y. Z.

The Cameron Church.

The cause at Cameron, Mo., moves gloriously onward under the efficient pastorate of Bro. S. J. White. The church is widening its influence, and how to do the most good is the one aim of all the plans discussed by our official board. During the past few months we have rearranged and much improved our galleries, put in a very convenient new baptistery, first-class new pipe organ, etc., spending in this way over $2,200. Our audiences are large and working forces in splendid condition. During our recent special meetings, conducted by Bro. White, there were 17 additions; 14 by conversion and two young men made the good confession at our regular services last Sunday evening. Present membership, 682. Good prospects for a continued ingathering.

WILL H. BROWN,
Clerk of Official Board.

Cameron, Mo., Nov. 15, 1898.

Clinton (Mo.) District.

It is composed of Jackson, Cass, Bates, Vernon, Barton, Cedar, St. Clair and Henry Counties. We have a strong, healthy brotherhood, which is amply able to do great work. I am sure that many are perfectly willing to aid in this work of the Lord. The place is Butler, Bates County, Mo. A splendid place for it. The time is Dec. 12, 13 and 14. This will be a good time. None are likely to be in a meeting. It commences Monday evening, Dec. 12th. We want and expect a great convention. Each church should at once appoint a delegate who will attend. There is an urgent demand that every preacher of the district be present. Don't fail. Bring some good business man from your congregation. Will not the preachers and superintendents announce the convention until all shall be impressed with it? Say—we want and expect you to come! You can assist in making this a success. Begin at once and keep at it until we have now a victory.

The following are the officers: Dr. B. E. Dawson, president; C. B. Lotspeich, treasurer; F. B. Elmore, evangelist; G. W. Webb, secretary.

The following are the committee on future work, and should report at convention: G. L. Bush, C. B. Lotspeich, J. H. Jones, A. C. McKeever, E. B. Woods, R. B. Coffey, W. B. Cochran. G. W. WEBB, Sec.

Milwaukee News.

The Milwaukee church, Wis., desires to announce to all who are interested that she has employed a pastor, my successor here, in the person of F. N. Calvin, of Waco, Texas, who will take up his work Dec. 1st. We account ourselves fortunate in securing the services of this eminent and successful man.

As for myself, I will continue to reside in Milwaukee and become state evangelist or state missionary. Wisconsin is enabled to undertake a vigorous work through her state board, by the assistance of our general boards, the A. C. M. S. and the C. W. B. M.

We fall into line and take up the new rally cry "100,000 souls for Christ in 1899." Wisconsin will have a joyous share in that glorious undertaking. C. G. MCNEILL,
State Evangelist.

Annual Report.

Last fall and winter the Lindenwood Church claimed my further effort soliciting balance. March, 1898, I began traveling and soliciting support for the Christian Orphans' Home. I traveled 16,000 miles in that behalf, closing my engagement Nov. 1, 1898. The brotherhood is ready for a wide, strong movement in charitable work; articulating all we have and wisely expanding till benevolent care of the aged and the little ones shall be as well done with our people as among any religious body in the land. This tender theme of pure religion should have a half day in the national assembly of the brotherhood to unfold the inner life of the churches. Such an annual report of all our systematic benevolences will strengthen the educational and missionary interests of the conventions. Nothing in manifold interests would stir the hearts of the 10,000 or more attending the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati next year than a full report and a most thrilling address on benevolences.

George Mueller's orphanages have cared for 10,000 of the wretched, needy ones. Dr. Barnardo has rescued in 31 years 30,000 homeless boys and girls. Some of the most prominent citizens in the West are the boys taken from New York City by Mr. Brace, through the Children's Aid Society. I could enlarge upon this one phase of benovolence through many columns. I hope the day will come soon when the prominent speakers in convention shall have more to say on benevolent institutions than either educational or missionary interests. The glory of the true Church of Christ is a sympathetic touch of a heartsome hand in its tender care of the aged and the orphan. My year's work has shown me the best side of our church life. I shall ever treasure the sweet memories of a year mingling with the best brethren and sisters of our brotherhood. God bless them all.

The first anniversary of the erection of the Lindenwood church was duly observed Nov. 6, at 2:30 P. M. Banks of potplants and flowers made the church charming. There was a deep gratitude expressed that the church is dedicated to God's service. Not a dollar of debt. It is the first church among us ever dedicated in St. Louis without soliciting a dollar.

I enter upon the pastorate of the Ellendale and Lindenwood churches. I am settled at Lindenwood to plead for South St. Louis and to work for our cause in so large a population.

W. B. YOUNG.

Lindenwood, St. Louis, Mo.

We learn that Bro. McClure, of Central College, Missouri, recently organized a church of 20 members at McFall, Mo., and that J. H. Coffey will preach for them one-fourth time. Other activities will be organized at the earliest opportunity.

What To Do.

I have not adopted the above caption to discuss Tolstoi's famous book. Although I have wandered far from home I am ever a Missourian, and therefore offer a few practical statements in answer to your question: "What ought the brotherhood in Missouri to undertake now to meet the educational demands that are made upon us?"

1. Let the "Educational Conference" be made a permanent institution, meeting about the same time the state convention meets, but distinct from the latter. "Agitate! agitate! agitate!" said a great Athenian. Talk does accomplish something. "In a multitude of counsel there is wisdom."

2. Undertake to advance the highest interests of every educational plant in the state. Every one, however small, is a center of Christian influence. Every one has a local patronage which others could not secure. Christian University is in a much more flourishing condition than it was when the Columbia College was organized. On the other hand, if the Disciples of Christ in Missouri let Christian University die, the precedent will be easily followed in regard to the Bible College.

3. While every "Christian" college in the state should be encouraged and given an "open field and a fair show," special emphasis now should be given the financial interests of our plants at Canton and Columbia.

4. Let us encourage the establishment of a number of small academies as feeders to our colleges. The Disciples of Christ need Christian colleges and academies far more than they need a great university. Let us speak the same things in love. United we stand, divided we fall. CHAS. A. YOUNG.

Enjoyed the Lecture.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Elder Isaac Selby, late of Melbourne, Australia, now of Covington, Ky., was with us one week and over two Lord's days and lectured upon the Christian evidences. Too much cannot be said for him. He is truly a remarkable man. If the churches of our brotherhood could only realize the great value of these lectures and what a literary and spiritual treat they would receive in hearing them, Bro. Selby would not get back to Australia for a long time.

MARSHALL HACKER,
Secretary of Official Board.

Columbus, Ind., Nov. 14, 1898.

Dedicated.

On Sunday, Oct. 30, the new, commodious and beautiful Christian Chapel at this place was formally dedicated to the worship of God. The assistance of the Church Extension Society enabled us to do this free of all other indebtedness. Bro. Wm. F. Cowden, Superintendent of Missions for the Northwest conducted the services. It was a high day for the little band of faithful Disciples here.

Yours in the faith,
J. V. CRAWFORD, Minister.

Enterprise, Ore., Nov. 11, 1898.

Wanted.

A home for the homeless. We desire to place three children (two girls and a boy, ages 11, 8 and 4 years) in Christian homes where they will receive proper care and education. A home in Clark or adjacent counties preferable. Communications may be addressed to Encourging Receipts.

Comparing the receipts for Foreign Missions for the first seventeen days in November with the corresponding time last year, shows the following:

Contributing Churches	1897	1898
Sunday-schools	3	10	Gain 7
Endeavor Societies	5	5
Individuals	6	7	Gain 1
Amount	15	53	Gain 38
	$406.90	$7,788.61	$7,381.71

This is a very encouraging gain in the receipts. Let us keep it up all through the year. Special attention is called to the increase in the number of indvidual offerings. Let the friends of the work send their personal offerings. There ought to be thousands of them before the March Offering.

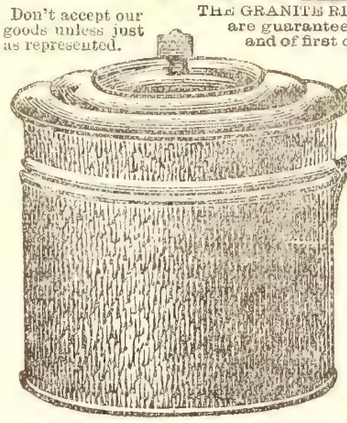
Hiram Jubilee Endowment.



We are receiving many letters of encouragement for our great Hiram endowment movement. Some say that it is bound to succeed, it cannot help it; and all express themselves as in hearty sympathy with the movement. We feel that it ought to be possible to endow a college that has made more than fifty years of honorable history, by a great popular movement. Hiram College has been placed upon a plane with the best institutions of our land, but to be held there it must have more endowment. Now is the time. Let this great brotherhood unite in one supreme effort to place this time-honored institution upon a solid financial basis on the occasion of its 50th anniversary. We will be happier for having accomplished such a work. It will be an inspiration to all our colleges, and will be a great uplift to our brotherhood in their aducational work. E. V. ZOLLARS.

[Since our list of names published we have received 240 additional names from President Zollars, which we have not the room to publish. We shall, however, keep our readers posted as to the growth of this list.—EDITOR.]

Jamaica Printing Press.

In response to our appeal for help to purchase a printing press for Bro. Randall to take back to Jamaica with him, we have so far received but two responses, as follows:

Randolph Cook, Metropolis, Ill.....$5.00
W. P. Keeler, Chicago, Ill..... 1.00

In making his remittance Bro. Keeler suggests that we call for a popular subscription of $1.00, to which he thinks a sufficient number would respond to make up the necessary amount, which, Bro. Randall writes, will be about $400, including the necessary type, etc. Let us, then, have a large number of $1.00 donations to this enterprise.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

Several copies of the minutes of the Nevada convention have been sent to each auxiliary. If the officers failed to receive them they should notify me at once.

The quarterly letters were sent out in time to be read at the November meetings, so that arrangements could be made for the observance C. W. B. M. Day. This is our one public service in the year, and the only opportunity that is given to the church membership to contribute to C. W. B. M. work. The church calendar gives us this day all over the United States. Let all observe it and take collections.

The Advisory Board met Nov. 3, in Kansas City, at the 11th and Locust St. Church. Sisters Richardson, Bradford, Day, Wilson and other auxiliary sisters received us as their guests and served a delightful repast in the church dining-room.

Sister Williams gave us a report of the Chattanooga Convention and an outline of the plan of work proposed for this year. It was the unanimous opinion of the board that the Missouri auxiliaries are well organized bodies, doing their work systematically and growing in knowledge and liberality. But it was also the opinion of the board that we ought to increase the number of auxiliaries and the membership.

Since the secretary is to be excused from field work she asks that a hundred dollars of her salary be paid for the work of organization. The board decided to do all in their power to increase the state fund so that we could employ an organizer for all of the time. The next question was a difficult one to decide—who will be the organizer? This woman must be able to present the work to any audience and to organize auxiliaries. She must attend district and county conventions, etc. There are many capable women in the Missouri C. W. B. M., but few are so situated that they can leave home at any time and remain in the field for weeks. We would be glad to receive letters from such sisters concerning future work.

Sisters Grant, Bantz, Spillman and Gilliam are able to do a grand work for Missouri if they could leave home for any great length of time. These sisters were all elected organizers and we hope they will undertake the work. Eastern Missouri will be the territory of Sisters Grant and Bantz. Western Missouri will belong to Sisters Spillman and Gilliam.

Last year Missouri secured 50 life memberships. This year we have set the mark for 50 new auxiliaries. VIRGINIA HEDGES.

Nov. 11, 1898.

PRESIDENT HALL, of Clark University, recently collected, with great labor, over seven thousand cases of fear in otherwise healthy children and adults, and carefully classified and examined them, and found results of the utmost practical importance to every parent, teacher and child, which he summarizes in an article of unusual value and interest, written expressly for the next volume of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION.

Gethsemane Gleanings.

One young lady was baptized at Gethsemane last Sunday. All departments of the work are striving to keep pace with the demands of the times. "The Needs of the Hour," "The Race Problem" and "America's Opportunity," are some of the themes I have lately discussed in Gethsemane's pulpit.

Prof. Woodson Wilson, Ph.D., LL.D., of Princeton University, recently delivered five lectures at Richmond College. It was my privilege to hear two of them. In the first he discussed "Weights and Balances of our Government," reviewing the judiciary, legislative and executive branches, showing that while they were intended to counterbalance each other, the actual effect was frequently the reverse. He expressed the idea that the Constitution of the United States is one of restraint rather than action. That De Tocqueville said no people except those educated in law could understand it, while Bogehot, the English writer, said anybody could understand it. He said the secret of an equipoise in government is that we are a thinking poeple, not influenced by passion. Upon the question of expansion he said: "We are to compete with Germany and Russia. We are the power of light, they are the power of darkness. We must triumph. I did not want this business to start; I had nothing to do with starting it. It has started; let us keep up with the procession. If some one is to have all this world, let it be us." In our municipal government he said that in every instance we have failed.

In the next lecture he spoke of the "Organization of Congress." He contended that while it was popularly supposed that Congress was a deliberative body, there was really but one man in it, and that man the speaker. That all business is done through the committees, and he appoints the committees. That the Senate is fast becoming the most popular rich man's club in the country. That the President is a man of vast importance in the beginning of his term, but when the offices are filled he becomes a mere figurehead. One would think from this brief resume that the Professor was a pessimist of the darkest dye, but on the contrary he is one of the most optimistic men I ever saw. He merely pointed out the weak places in our governmental machinery, but seemed to think there was no reason why the American people should apprehend danger.

L. M. Omer, for five years the beloved pastor of the Third Church, Richmond, resigned a short time ago, and S. R. Maxwell has taken the work there, beginning his labors last Lord's day.

J. J. Irvine, who died of appendicitis, had begun to entwine himself about the hearts of the Norfolk saints when death struck him down. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." ALFRED BRUNK.

Newmans, Va., Nov. 10, 1898.

The church at Clay Center, Kan., recently paid its debt of $300. It has been a debt of 10 years' standing. Much credit is due to Mrs. Wilkison, the wife of the pastor, Otha Wilkison, for raising this sum by personal solicitations, and she had the pleasure of burning the mortgage before the church, preceded by appropriate services.

Organizing for Work.

The Eureka College Ministerial Association at its first mesting of the present college year elected C. W. Marlow and A. R. Spicer to the respective offices of president, and secretary and treasurer. The executive committee outlined a series of lectures for the coming year, which will cover the "Purpose and Scope of the Fathers' Plea." Also a series on "Evangelistic and Pastoral Labors." The association unanimously approved the recommendation of the Chattanooga Convention looking to a movement "all along the line." They propose to arrange and conduct, during the holidays, "A Schoolhouse and Deserted Field Campaign." We are in hearty sympathy with the "all-along-the-line" movement and trust that our effort may be heard from when the roll is called at the Jubilee Convention.

A. R. SPICER, Sec. E. C. M. A.

Appeal to the Preachers.

The question of ministerial relief is one that appeals in a personal way to men who are devoting their lives to the preaching of the gospel. To them, in a great measure, is committed the honor and reputation of the church. "Like priest, like people," is an old proverb, and so far as the judgment of the world upon the church is concerned it is true. The world judges a church by the men who represent it in the pulpit. When the world looks on and sees an old preacher of the gospel in want and need on account of his devotion to the gospel, and his want is generally in proportion to his devotion to his work, they ask where is the boasted fellowship of his fellow-preachers, that they do not supply these wants? Their judgment in this case is so true that the thought is not a pleasing one. I need not make a long appeal to my preaching brethren, for the question resolves itself into a very simple problem. A preacher of the gospel who is disabled by reason of age, sickness or misfortnne must be taken care of and his needs supplied. All will accept this and the responsibility of supplying this need rests upon their fellow-workers in the gospel. Then the query comes, How shall it be done? "Let their children take care of them," says one. Very well, if the children are able to do so they will very cheerfully accept the responsibility. But if the children be poor, or there are no children, what then? "Let them go to the poorhouse," says another. All right; these servants of the Lord can afford to go to the poorhouse, but alas! can we afford to let them go there? Are we ready to accept the disgrace that this method entails? When the Presbyterian Church, with no more preachers than we have, expends as it has this year $170,000 to care for its aged and indigent preachers, will it be a credit to us to allow our disabled preachers to be supported by the state? No! no! this will not do. Then, what shall be done? Let us take care of them. Two dollars per year from every active preacher and an offering from every church will supply a fund sufficient to enable the Board of Ministerial Relief to properly care for all who need and deserve our help. Brethren, this is the only practical, wise, scriptural and honorable method of doing this work. My faith in the good sense and honor of my brethren is such that I have not a doubt but they will help us in this work and see that it is done.

D. R. LUCAS.

Talks To Preachers.

I. Do You Know that the "preached Word," when accompanied by the "printed page," is rendered doubly effective in causing men to believe unto eternal life through Jesus' name? Compare Mark 16:15 with John 20:30,31.

II. Do You Know that your presentation of "our plea" may be greatly strengthened and its cardinal truths become more firmly fixed in the mind of your hearers, if aided by a careful reading of our best literature?

III. Do You Know that the Christian Library contains the best literature of the brotherhood on "our plea," and on the various phases of "the Current Reformation?"

IV. Do You Know that the placing of "a Christian library in every Christian Church" would so increase the missionary interest and zeal of our people that the motto of the Chattanooga Convention, "One hundred thousand accessions in 1899," would be much more easily realized? Finally,

V. Do You Know that it would aid you spiritually, socially and financially to assist the founder as many leading pastors and evangelists are doing?

"If You Know These Things Happy Are You If You Do Them." For fuller particulars address the founder, S. J. PHILLIPS.

BABY'S Terrible ECZEMA

My baby suffered from terrible Eczema. Doctor and every remedy tried, to no account. He cried all the time and his face was like raw meat. I had to carry him on a pillow, and was fairly discouraged. I used half a box of CUTICURA (ointment) and CUTICURA SOAP, and in one week my baby was entirely cured. To-day his skin is as smooth as silk. Mrs. J. C. FREESE, 360 S. 1st st., Brooklyn, N.Y.

Evangelistic.

KENTUCKY.

Junction City, Nov. 15.—My meeting at Petersburg, Ky., closed last Thursday night with 51 additions. Two from the Baptists, one by statement, three reclaimed, and 45 baptized.—IRA M. BOSWELL.

Earlington, Nov. 15.—I have just closed a short meeting at Pembroke, Ky.; 12 were added. A new house of worship will be erected or the old greatly improved.—I. H. TEEL.

Council Grove, Nov. 19.—One made "the good confession" at a schoolhouse appointment Wednesday evening, the 16th inst., and is to be baptized here the 20th.—J. A. WALTERS.

MINNESOTA.

Olivia, Nov. 17.—Our meeting here, conducted by our state evangelists, C. M. McCurdy and T. A. Meredith, closed Sunday night Nov. 13. The audiences were not large, but attentive and orderly all through the meeting and the meeting closed with a fine interest and good feeling. There were no additions, but the meeting was a success nevertheless. Our evangelists are Christian gentlemen, preach and sing a pure gospel, hold up a high standard of Christian living and win many friends to the cause of pure and undefiled religion. We will yet gather sheaves for the Harvest Home from this sowing. God bless them in other fields.—DAVID HUSBAND.

Le Sueur, Nov. 18.—Our meeting closed here last night with a number of additions, the church put in good working order and a good work done. We begin at Sharon to-night.—GREGG AND SWEETMAN.

IOWA.

Winterset, Nov. 15.—Our meeting continues; 17 added to date.—LOWE AND LANDRUM.

Bedford, Nov. 14.—Meeting opened up here yesterday with crowded house and one confession at the evening service. Bro. Walters and the Bedford church know how to prepare for a good meeting.—R. A. OMER.

Newton, Nov. 15.—We are at work here for the Master; had one confession on 6th and one on 13th inst., husband and wife. I baptized them on the evening of the 13th. The husband was 60 years of age and the wife about the same. We are preparing for a union meeting in December to be followed by a meeting in our church in January. This people are most noble, pray for us.—J. C. HANNA.

Irwin, Nov. 18.—Our meeting here is a little over two weeks old. Nine additions to date, with others very near the kingdom. The spirituality and interest are all that could be desired, and we are hoping for encouraging results. Bro. Frank McVey, of Concordia, Kan., is one of the "sweet singers of Israel," and the large audiences each evening are delighted with his fine selections. Pray for us.—D. H. BAYS.

ARKANSAS.

Hot Springs.—Our Bible-school increased 25 members during last month; six additions to the church since we came, and all departments of work growing. We had Bro. E. C. Browning with us over two Lord's days. He did some splendid preaching. He is pushing Arkansas missions to the front all along the line.—T. N. KINCAID.

MICHIGAN.

Buchanan, Nov. 17.—Eighteen more added here last night; 16 of them were confessions. Meeting only one week old. Scoville and Scott are with us in spirit and power.—E. R. BLOCK, pastor.

Ionia, Nov. 19.—My second year with this church began Nov. 5. During the first year the church raised about $3,500 for all purposes. I preached 110 sermons, received 70 into the church and made over 1,000 calls. The fortieth anniversary of the organization of the church will be celebrated Jan. 24th, when some friend of Isaac Errett will deliver an address.—G. K. BERRY.

CALIFORNIA.

Glendora, Nov. 8. — June, one from the Methodists; July, two by letter; Aug. 7, one by confession; Sept. 4, four by letter; Sept. 18, eight by confession, one from the Methodists, one from the Catholics, one from the Adventist; Sept. 25, one from the Catholics; Oct. 2, one from the Episcopalians, one by confession; Oct. 9, one by confession; Oct. 16, one by confession. Total, 24 to Oct. 16. We began our work the middle of March. The Christian Endeavor has taken it upon itself to repaint our commodious church building, and our beautiful new parsonage is nearing completion.—L. SWINDLE.

Irvington, Nov. 17.—Our work at Acampo and Elliott is in a very prosperous condition. Daughter Mary was my singing evangelist in a few days' meeting we have just held at Clay. We had five confessions, the superintendent of the S. S. and others of the best people of the community. They will all take membership in the Elliott church. We baptized at the same time another most excellent young man from Elliott. The work goes forward. The town of Clay had a complete uplift.—J. DURHAM.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Nov. 14.—Fourteen additions at the North Park Church.—J. M. CANFIELD.

Morocco, Nov. 15.—One week ago last Lord's day there were 10 more baptisms. They were all received into the Christian Church at this place. We have secured the services of Bro. T. Z. Shuey and expect to hold our meeting in December, beginning with the first Lord's day.—R. L CARTWRIGHT.

St Joe, Nov. 14.—I have been engaged in revival meetings at this place just three weeks to-day. We have had large audiences, good interest and 20 by baptism up to date; three of them from the Lutheran Church. Considering the weak and divided condition of the church at the beginning of the services, and the opposition encountered from the denominations, we feel that God has abundantly crowned our labors with success.—H. CLARK, pastor.

Franklin, Nov. 18.—Five made the good confession at Christian Chapel, three of whom confessed their Savior at the water. One father was 74 years old.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

KANSAS.

Larned, Nov. 15.—Two confessions to this church. Interest fine. The writer will preach the union Thanksgiving service in the Presbyterian church.—C. H. HILTON.

Potwin, Nov. 14.—The church here is advancing all along the line. Two additions at regular services Nov. 14. We observed Forefathers' Day, taking a collection for Home Missions. Large numbers of young people attend our evening services.—K. W. WHITE.

Otha Wilkison, of Clay Center, assisted pastor Peter Slack in a three weeks' meeting at Agra, resulting in 40 additions, 39 baptisms. Meeting closed Nov. 13.

Fall River, Nov. 15.—For the past 10 or 12 days we have been enjoying a season of religious joy and refreshing. Bro. Daniel Trundle, of Eureka Springs, Ark., has been with us and by his labors has endeared himself to every heart. The central object in the meeting was to build up the church and cement all Christian hearts in fraternal love; in this effort our good brother was very successful. I have rarely if ever seen a better spirit pervade a meeting. We all feel that great good was accomplished. One good brother took membership with us.—W. BUTLER, pastor.

Halstead, Nov. 17.—I began a protracted meeting here last Saturday evening. We had three accessions last night. Prospects are encouraging. The meeting will continue indefinitely. Bro. J. J. McClain is pastor and is a faithful worker.—L. B. COGGINS.

TEXAS.

Terrell, Nov. 8.—Have just closed a meeting here with 32 additions. The audiences were large and attentive and we trust much good has been done. Bro. Jewell Howard, the pastor of this church, will enter Add Ran University the first of January This church will continue to pay his salary until the first of January and give him the time intervening that he may visit churches in the surrounding country of Add Ran and make arrangements to preach on Sundays. This was a noble act on the part of the Terrell Church.—B. B. SANDERS, Cor. Sec. Texas Mission Work.

ILLINOIS.

Closed at Hoopston, Nov. 7th with 10 added the last night; 118 in all. Buchanan, Mich., next.—SCOVILLE AND SCOTT.

Watseka, Nov. 14.—Another added here yesterday. One week ago Sunday Dr. Hardin, of Eureka College, delivered a most interesting address to this people on Higher Education. He is always a welcame visitor.—B. S. FERRALL.

Albion, Nov. 16.—Bro. F. S. Haltom of Sumner, recently held a meeting of 16 days' at West Village with 16 additions to the church; 14 baptisms, two by relation. The church is very greatly benefited.—MORRIS COLYER.

Gibson City, Nov. 14.—We have just closed a meeting of a month's continuance. B. S. Ferrall, pastor of the church in Watseka and a most efficient song leader and soloist assisted us. Twenty-five were added to the church. The church seems to be making fine progress.—W. W. SNIFF, minister.

Just closed a meeting at McVey with eight additions; six confessions and two by letter. I begin a meeting at Boston Chapel this week; I am regularly employed for all my time with the following congregations: Atwater half time, McVey and Boston Chapel half time. I am for the present located with the congregation at Atwater, Ill.—H. J. HOSTETLER.

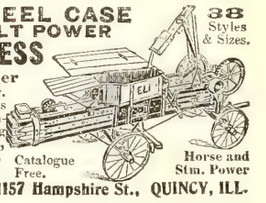
Henry, Nov. 13.—I am in a meeting here. Have preached one week. The three days' rain and snow storm last week nearly broke up our meeting. But worldly indifference and sectarian prejudice that abound here are worse than the bad weather. Expect to contine another week at least.—M. P. HAYDEN.

Elkhart, Nov. 19.—Meeting here goes on with big crowds and excellent attention. Thirteen added to date. Will baptize two leading Methodists to-night. We continue indefinitely.—ANTHONY AND HUNSAKER.

MISSOURI.

East Atchison, Nov. 15. — We have just closed a meeting here at Winthrop of three weeks' duration, with 11 added to this church; four by obedience, the rest by letter and restoration. On last Sunday we immersed three in the Missouri river; two of them were twin girls, and they were both immersed at the same time. We also organized a Y. P. S. C. E. of 28 members.—J. H. SPEER.

Kansas City, Nov. 14.—Closed an excellent meeting at our new mission, Ivanhoe, last Lord's day, with 29 additions, 19 of them being heads of families. Had more than a week of rain and snow, but the people were faithful. The outlook at this point is promising. Bro. Ernest Forbes, the efficient superintendent of the Sunday-school, and Mrs. Rose Settle took charge of the music and did it with credit. At the Local Union rally of the C. E. Societies of the city last night, the Vine Street C. E. Society carried off the banner. Six members the past week, one associate. Our audiences at East 15th Street are increasing each Lord's day. City missions are constantly growing in favor with the churches here.—FRANK L. BOWEN, city missionary.



Richmond, Nov. 17.—Just closed 12 days' meeting at Friendship church, near Richmond, with 32 additions; 24 confessions. The church feels strengthened in many ways.—R. L. WILSON.

Kearney, Nov. 16.—Our meeting starts off well. Six canfessions last night; 15 in all. House packed at every service and interest deepening. I go to Eureka, Kans., to dedicate their beautiful new house of worship on the fourth Lord's day in November. Correspondents will address me at 1048 Spruce St., Topeka, Kans.—D. D. BOYLE AND V. E. RIDENOUR, evangelists.

Civil Bend, Nov. 16.—We recently closed a very interesting meeting at Fair Haven, Harrison County, Mo.; five additions, three by confession and baptism and two by statement. We have just finished repairing our church building at Eagleville, Mo., and will be ready for the county meeting in February. We are now in a good meeting at Oak Ridge, Daviess County, and expect good results. Let us pray.—Z MITCHELL.

Cowgill, Nov. 19th.—We closed on the 15th at Princeton. Had fine interest and nine additions. This is a fine congregation, and our stay there was very pleasant. This church will ever occupy a warm place in our hearts. Bro. Hunter has been employed to take charge of the church.—MORGAN MORGANS AND DAUGHTER.

Higginsville.—Work here prosperous. One confession last Sunday night.—ANDREW SCOTT.

Literature.

THE MASTER'S BLESSEDS. By J. R. Miller, D.D. Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, Ill., publishers. Price, cloth, 182 pages, $1.00.

This book consists of a series of devotional chapters suggested by the beatitudes of Christ and cannot fail in its purpose of strengthening the inner man with its right supply of heavenly manna. After its reading the reader will have a greatly enlarged conception of the length, breadth, height and depth of the spiritual significance of the beatitudes and their better appreciation. The book itself is an ornament, and with its spiritual contents a gift that any friend of the Master would appreciate.

FRIENDSHIP. By Rev. Hugh Black, M. A. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, publishers. Price, $1.25.

In an introduction to this new book, the Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, D. D., says that Mr. Black "is now, we suppose, the most popular preacher in Scotland," and of the book, "It is full of good things winningly expressed; and though very simply written, is the result of real thought and experience. For young men especially this volume will be a golden possession, and it can hardly fail to affect their lives. Mr. Black says well that the subject of friendship is less thought of among us now than it was in the Old World." The book is handsomely printed in two colors, with original marginal and other decorations, by Mr. F. Berkeley Smith, while deckel-edge paper, and an elaborate cover design contribute further to the making of a gift book appropriate to all seasons and every occasion.

WAITING FOR THE KING, a poem by Richard Hayes McCartney. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, Ill., publishers. Price, cloth, 150 pages, 50 cents.

THE SOWER. By John G. Woolley. The Church Press, Chicago. 50 cents.

Every reader who believes independent political action necessary to destroy the saloon will find in this volume the author's strongest arguments for such a course. These arguments are arrayed with consummate skill, and the arts of the publishers have been strikingly displayed in bringing out clearly the strong points. Mr. Woolley's terse, epigrammatic and figurative style was never exhibited at a better advantage. It is printed on very heavy deckel-edged paper, bound in cloth of dark maroon, with gilt top and title frontispiece.

PERSONAL SKETCHES OF RECENT AUTHORS. By Hattie Tyng Griswold, author of Home Life of Great Authors, etc. Chicago, A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.

If one wishes to spend a few days very pleasantly in the association of some of the men and women who have made their names famous in the world of literature, and would like to get a little closer to them and see more of their inner life than can be found in their own works, he will be delighted with this recent volume. The men whose lives are portrayed in these personal sketches are Alfred Tennyson, Ernest Renan, Charles Darwin, Matthew Arnold, George Du Maurier, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, John Ruskin, Thomas Henry Huxley, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Robert Louis Stevenson, William Dean Howell, Louisa May Alcott, Lyeff Tolstoi, Rudyard Kipling, Christina Rosetta, Henry David Thoreau, Bayard Taylor ane James Matthew Barrie. Our readers will agree that here are some delightful men and women, and it only remains for us to add that the sketches are drawn with a clever hand, with enough characteristic quotations from the various authors to throw light on the features of their characters which are treated. It is exceedingly interesting to note the early influences and surroundings which have helped to make these men and women what they became. One fact impressed us deeply as we read the volume, and that is that a great majority of these famous people in their earlier years had to struggle with poverty, and to do their work under what seemed to be most unfavorable conditions. One feels, when reading such a volume, that he has come into closer sympathy and touch with these writers, and is better prepared to appreciate their writings. To all lovers of books and of literature this volume will be thrice welcome. We feel safe in prophesying for it a wide reading both in the Old World and in the New.

THIRTEEN CHAPTERS ON FIRST-DAY OBSERVANCES. By John M. VanKirk, LL.B. Christian Index Co., DesMoines, Iowa, publishers. Price, cloth, 220 pages, $1; paper cover, 75 cents.

As the title indicates this book is a collection of evidences in support of the first day of the week as the day to be sacredly observed by Christian people. The author has treated his subject largely from the polemical standpoint, and has clearly made out a good case. No time is wasted with arguments negating Seventh-day observance. Considerable pains has been given to the first or Lord's day in history. The book is in large type and conveniently arranged both for reading and reference. The introduction is by Granville Snell, Trenton, Mo. The book is for sale by the author at Kalona, Iowa.

MAGAZINES.

Dr. William Elliot Griffis has written for the Sunday-school Times of November 19 a scholarly resume of the present conditions in that far-off land, which gives one an excellent idea of the factors that enter into the problem, from a missionary point of view. The author's long residence in and study of the Far East fit him peculiarly to treat of this subject.

Richard Harding Davis' "In the Rifle-pits," in the Christmas Scribner's, is a vivid presentation of that little exploited period from July 2 to July 15 when the army waited and suffered in the trenches before Santiago. Mr. Davis' short story, growing out of his war experiences, will appear in the January Scribner's, and he will continue to contribute frequently to that magazine throughout the year 1899.

The Ladies' Home Journal is about to publish six new, distinct series of articles which will include not less than 400 photographs presenting one hundred of the prettiest country homes in America, one hundred of the prettiest gardens, seventy churches decorated for festal occasions of all kinds, some forty of the prettiest girls' rooms in this country, twenty-five floral porches and vineclad houses, and the story of the native wild flowers in America, told in seventy-five photographs.

BACON.

Byron Bacon, son of Dr. C. W. and Mrs. Cora Bacon, of Pawnee, O. T., was born Aug. 11, 1897, and died Oct. 23, 1898. Byron was a bright, happy little soul, and drew all hearts to him. His death brings sorrow indeed to the fond parents. Sister Bacon wonders how mothers who do not trust in Christ can endure such trouble. But she and the Doctor know in whom they have believed. Faith and hope sustain them while they "pass under the rod." A FRIEND.

BOONE.

Departed this life in Jefferson City, Mo., Nov. 6, 1898, Mrs. Lucy A. Boone (nee Daly), relict of the late Elder C. Boone, for many years a citizen of Fayette, Howard County, Mo., and later of Jefferson City, where he passed away Jan. 17, 1885, in the 73rd year of his age. William C. Boone was born in Shelby County, Ky., and his wife, Lucy A. Daly, was born in Nicholasville, Ky. They came with their parents in an early day to Missouri, and were married in Fayette, June 10, 1834, by his brother, Rev. Hampton L. Boone, then a Methodist minister, afterwards a prominent preacher in the Christian Church. William C. Boone and his wife became members of the church in Fayette, and were baptized by Eld. Thomas M. Allen, that prince and peerless preacher of pioneer days. Mr. Boone was a prosperous man, and for many years was connected with the old Missouri State Bank at Fayette. His house was the preachers' home, and right royally were they always entertained. In her old age nothing delighted Mrs. Boone more than to talk of the great meetings held in Fayette and the grand, good men who shared their hospitality. Mrs. Boone was a woman of fine intellect, remarkable conversational powers and charming personality. She was familiar with the Holy Scriptures. She had unfaltering faith in God, and an abiding trust in Jesus, in whom alone she trusted. Her life was, therefore, calm and serene in the midst of all the trials through which she passed. The end was peaceful. As a child falls to sleep in the arms of its mother, so closed she her eyes and fell asleep in Jesus.

"Rest, weary head,
Lie down to slumber in the peaceful tomb.
Light from above has broken through its gloom
Here in the place where once thy Savior lay,
Where he shall awake thee on a future day,
Like a tired child upon its mother's breast.
Rest, sweetly rest!"

She was the mother of 11 children, seven sons and four daughters. Of these, four sons and four daughters survive her. All these were at her bedside when she passed away, save one, and he arrived in time for the funeral. Mrs. Alfred M. Long, of Jefferson City; Mrs. John I. Sears, of Kansas City; Mrs. Kirtley, of Columbia, and Mrs. Thompson, of Belleville, Ill., are her daughters. Dr. W. C. Boone, of New York; Dan Boone, of St. Louis; John Boone, of Kansas City, and Howard Boone, of Montana, are her sons, and never had mother more devoted children. There are 30 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Her daughters are Christians and walking in the footsteps of their now sainted mother. May her sons be won to Christ by her loving example. The writer, aided by Bro. J. P. Pinkerton, conducted the funeral services in the Christian Church, in the presence of a large congregation of her friends and neighbors. "And I heard a voice saying unto me: Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. Yes, from hence they do rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." T. P. HALEY.

LOWREY.

Henry N. Lowrey was born in Talmage, Summit County, O., Sept. 13, 1812, and died at his late home, 155 Charles St., Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 27, 1898, at the age of 86 years, one month and 14 days. He spent 51 years of his life in his native state. He married Jane A. Brittain, April 2nd, 1835, who was his faithful companion for nearly 56 years. From youth Bro. Lowrey was religiously inclined and in early life became a member of the M. E. Church. On New Year's day of 1850 he and his wife were baptized by Elder A. B. Green, and united with the congregation of Disciples at Stow, O., where he remained an active member until he moved to Cascade, Mich., in 1863. He was a charter member of the church at Cascade, which was organized in 1865. He was the first elder in this congregation and filled the office well for 10 years. In 1975 he moved to Grand Rapids, and was one of the faithful ones who assisted in bringing about an organization of the church in this city, where he held his membership until removed by death. He was a faithful man of God, always ready to perform the duties assigned him, from the most menial service to the pulpit, which he filled acceptably many times. Bro. Lowrey spent four years in Washington, in government employ, during which time he attended the Vermont Avenue Church under the ministration of Bro. Power. Since the death of his wife in 1891 he has had a pleasant home with his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Baxter, where he lived till the death messenger came, and he sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. He leaves two daughters, one son, seven grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. By his own request the writer preached the funeral at his late home, which occured Oct. 29, 1898, attended by many relatives and friends who mourn, but not as those who have no hope. Bro. E. B. Widger, of Grand Rapids, assisted in the service. Now thanks be unto God, which always leadeth us in triumph in Christ. J. JAY FINLEY.

MIDDLETON.

Lee Middlelon was born in Kentucky and died at his home in Hannibal, Mo., Nov. 6, 1898, aged 67 years. For 25 years he was a member of the Christian Church. Sixteen of these years he enjoyed with this church. He was naturally of a cheerful disposition. Misfortunes and ill health troubled him in later years. He was a kind husband, an affectionate and thoughtful father and a generous friend. He sympathized with others in financial misfortune to a degree that made his own burden too heavy. Many warm friends will miss him from his place in the life of the city. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by the pastor, Geo. Buckner, at the Christian Church, Clarksville, Mo. The family of wife and five children will miss his counsel and cheer. Two brothers and several sisters remain to cherish his memory. LEVI MARSHALL.

SMITH.

On Friday, Oct. 21, there passed from earth the spirit of our brother, John O. Smith. Bro. Smith had passed his 90th year. He was born in 1808 in North Carolina. At the time of his death he was an elder of the Star Church. For 40 years he was an elder of the Lost Creek Church in Iowa. Funeral services were conducted by Bros. Garner and Fuller. Bro. N. A. McConnell, of Iowa, was expected to have conducted the services, but failed to get word in time. Bro. Smith was a good Christian, full of faith and of the Holy Spirit. G. W. GARNER.

THOMAS.

On October 30th, 1898, Mrs. J. B. Thomas, of Atwook, Kan., departed this life at the age of 74 years. She had been a reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and its predecessor for 25 years. She died in the faith in which she had so long and faithfully lived. E.

Woodland Message.

JOSEPHINE L. PEABODY.

I wandered through the woodland long;
I listened to the brooklet's song,
I paused beneath the sturdy oak.
I loved the silence all unbroke,
Save by the thrush's frequent trill.
I felt my soul within me thrill
With something never known before
It filled my heart and bubbled o'er.

I mused on nature's wondrous art
Until I felt within me start
The slumbering forces into life;
They rose in combat and in strife.
They seemed to grudge the short release;
They strove to snatch the hour of peace;
They wrestled there within my soul,
And each one strove to gain control.

Cried Unbelief, "And what are these?
That fragile flower, those sturdy trees,
This humble life, all have their day;
Their showers and sunshine then decay."
Then Doubt low whispered, "That seems so;
All nature is but clay, you know.
Those leaves of golden, green and red
Soon float on breezes brown and dead."

But Faith stepped forth to make her plea:
"Consider what these mean to thee.
They minister unto thy needs;
Through them thy Father intercedes."
And Hope called sweetly, "No frail flower
But has its little perfumed power,
Nor caught those leaves a gleam of gold
But they a loving message told."

Then Hate arose with livid face,
With words of scorn cursed all our race.
"Man holds unto his brother's lips
The deadly poison while he sips."
"Nay," answered Love, "Each human heart,
Must in its wee span do its part;
And heart to heart, and span to span,
Fulfill the Master Worker's plan.

"No hand so rough it cannot feel
A kindly touch in woe or weal,
Nor lips so stern they cannot smile.
No heart so hard, no soul so vile,
It can no gleam of pleasure gain
From dasied fields or falling rain.
Ne'er yet a man has passed his days
Without one sweet thought in his ways."

I listened to a mother bird
Chirp to her babes. With heart deep stirred
I plucked a flower that kissed my path,
Nor wondered at the brooklet's laugh
When stayed my hand its rapid flow.
God fashioned all this earth below.
Glad nature sings the song He taught.
MAN should rejoice in deed and thought.

PRAYER.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

O, come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord, our maker.—Psa. 95:6.

The class had met at Bro. Jones' for the weekly study of the lesson. The subject was Prayer. At the close of the lesson study we were invited to ask questions or to offer suggestions that might be helpful.

After a moment of silence, in which no one responded, Bro. Jones, who is our teacher, said:

"Let us make this a sort of 'experience meeting' after the fashion of our Methodist brethren; let us testify as to what the word prayer means to us, and give our understanding of some of the terms and phrases concerning it, such as 'Pray without ceasing,' 'All things whatsoever ye ask,' 'Pray for them which despitefully use you,' 'But when thou prayest enter into thy closet,' etc. Bro. B.," turning to one of the eldest members of the class, "let us hear from you first on one of these phases of the subject."

Bro. B. rose and stood so as to face the class; he said:

"My friends, one of the most forcible passages concerning prayer, at least one that seems so to me is, 'But when thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father which is in secret.' I do not take this as implying that there should be no prayer in pnblic—far from it—but it particularly emphasizes the need of private worship. Through prayer we maintain a personal relationship with our Heavenly Father. Daily communion with him is necessary to this relationship. I have made it a rule to rise a little earlier of mornings, rather than miss this quiet time of prayer; it helps so much to smooth out the wrinkles of the duties of the day; it strengthens me for the disappointments and worries and annoyances that do so often arise; it makes my sorrows lighter to tell God about them; it makes my joys greater to thank him for them; it helps me to love my friends and fellowbeings with a more Christlike love to ask that the Father's blessings may rest upon them. I want to urge upon you, my friends, this special need of the soul—this quiet hour of prayer and meditation—in this age of rush and unrest. Let us go to the Father in simple, childlike trust and listen for his voice in answer."

Bro. L. was the next to speak:

"I was made to think of this passage today: "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing ye shall receive,' because of a conversation I overheard between two little bootblacks. Said one: 'Las' night I prayed that the first man I shined shoes for this morning would give me a dollar.' Said the other: 'And did it come to pass?' and the first answered: 'No; I knew it wouldn't.' His faith was similar to the faith of the dear old sister who wished the mound in her front yard taken away, and decided to pray for its removal. After spending a few moments on her kuees she looked from her window, beheld the mound still there, and remarked resignedly: 'Just as I expected!' In both cases, however, there was a lack of understanding as well as of faith. God does hear and answer the prayer of the sincere, but we must approach the throne of grace intelligently. Of course, he may not always answer our prayers as we would like to have them answered, but rest assured he answers them in the way that is best for us. He will remove from our pathway mountains of difficulty and cast them into the sea Inability, where they cannot longer have power to hinder; he will make the crooked paths straight."

Sister H. now rose and said:

"One of the prayers that, it seems to me, must be most acceptable to God, is the prayer of thanksgiving. I have made it a rule, during life's journey, to find reasons why I should be thankful and not discontented, and until we look for such reasons we have no idea how many there are and how much there is for which we ought to give thanks."

Sister H., as we all knew, had had many crosses and much trouble, and we felt that if she could find reason to give thanks, surely we ought also to pray the prayer of thanksgiving.

Sister K. now spoke. She is a widow and has suffered wrongs at the hands of many. A most timid woman is she in public meetings—afraid of the sound of her own voice—but she seemed to forget her timidity as she said:

"The most difficult thing to do, yet in the doing of which I find greates comfort, is this command: 'Pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your father which is in heaven.' It is easy to love those who love us and to pray for those whom we know have our welfare at heart, but when we can conquer any aversion we may feel toward our enemies and can pray for those who despitefully use us, we realize that it is a victory well worth battling for."

"When I was very young," began Bro. S. as Sister K. took her seat, "Pray without ceasing' was a sort of stumblingblock to me. 'How can we be continually on our knees?' I argued. 'But I have come to know that it means simply to be in a prayerful state of mind—a condition that tends so much to lift us above the petty annoyances of every-day life. I have found it to be a spirit well worth cultivating."

"One of the most beautiful things about prayer," said Bro. G., rising, "is that it gives us the pleasures of hope. We pray for the things that we do so want, and believing God's promises we have hope that our prayers will be granted. It is this hope that nourishes our aspirations and makes our morrow bright with the rosy hues of expectation. It unravels seeming mysteries and lifts us heavenward where Providence diffuses a sort of universal gladness over all the harsh dissonances of life, and unfolds to our view a future that is smiling and beckoning us onward to reap the satisfying harvest it has in store for us. This, it seems to me, is one of the most desirable effects of prayer; and the blessedness of it is, such a hope from such a source is not delusive."

"One of the tenderest things in this connection, it seems to me," said Bro. Jones, "is when the disciples said, 'Lord teach us to pray' they were told to say, 'Our Father.' Does not this give to us the privilege of coming to God, as the child comes to its earthly parent, and pour out to him our heart's desire, laying before him our wants and needs, knowing that he will not withhold his good gifts? There are few of us but know something of the protecting care of an earthly father; then how much more tender must be the care of the Heavenly Father to his children who, amid the trials aud discouragements of life, can still say, 'Our Father,' knowing that he will not allow our burdens to be greater than we can bear."

We separated, each to his own home, realizing that the subject had been but partially covered, but feeling that we had spent a most profitable evening.

"Our Own."

MARGARET SANGSTER.

If I had known in the morning
How wearily all the day
The words unkind
Would trouble my mind,
I said when you went away,
I had been more careful, darling,
Nor given you heedless pain;
But we may vex our "own"
With look and tone
We might never take back again.

For though in the quiet evening
You may give me the kiss of peace,
Yet well it might be
That never for me
The pain of the heart should cease.
How many go forth in the morning
Who never come home at night;
And hearts have broken
For harsh words spoken,
That sorrow can ne'er set right.

We have careful thought for the stranger,
And smiles for the sometime guest,
But oft for "our own"
The bitter tone,
Though we love "our own" the best.
Ah! lip with the curve impatient,
Ah! brow with that look of scorn,
'Twere a cruel fate
Were the night too late
To undo the work of the morn.

A Visit to Grandfather's Home.

The children who visit their grandfathers' homes to-day, dress in their best clothes, board a train and travel in ease and luxury. Not so with the child who made such a visit forty or fifty years ago. I want to tell you of some of these visits, that were of annual occurence, and had great importance attached to them; they were pleasan affairs, too, although stripped of many of the conveniences of to-day. When I was a child, we lived about thirty or thirty-five miles from the home of my grandfather and it took us all day to make the journey. Everything was gotten in readiness the day before so we could start early the next morning; sometimes it was in summer time, but often in fall, about the first of October.

When the large hack came to the door we were all ready to bounce in; of course the children had not eaten a mouthful of breakfast, so eager were they to get started. The boys, two of them, took the front seat with the driver, who went along to bring the hack back. And I will state now that what these two boys did not know about horses and driving was not worth knowing; the driver must have felt of very little importance by the side of them.

The two girls wore calico dresses, split sunbonnets and buckskin gloves; they took the middle seat, the huge lunch basket was put under the seat, the large trunk strapped on behind and the box with mother's nice bonnet in it was stored away under the back seat, where father and mother sat with the baby; there was always a baby to take to see its grandmother. Last, but not least, a large sack full of old-fashioned sweet cakes was put in by mother, to satisfy the appetites, which came with the first turn of the wheels. The ride was fine; over hills, through long, shady lanes, into the clear, cold water of the creeks, with their pebbly bottoms and their banks lined with white sweetelder bloom. The ride through the woods was the best of all; there were so many fine, large trees of all kinds, and father was particular to point out the various kinds to us and teach us their names. We saw the squirrels jump from limb to limb of the trees and could watch droves of wild turkeys as they roamed through the pastures.

At noon we always stopped near a large spring for dinner; no picnic party ever enjoyed a dinner like we did the contents of that lunch basket. There was boiled ham, old-fashioned sweet corn bread, resembling our steamed brown bread of to-day, fried chicken, biscuits, pickles and preserves; besides these father would go to the nearest farm house and buy the hot "hoecake," which was always baked there for the noon-day meal, get a pot of coffee and a pitcher of milk and cream, and there was a feast for a king.

The horses were unhitched and fed, while a few hours' rest was taken in the heat of the day. Sometimes a large rope was fastened to the limb of a tree and we enjoyed a fine swing. During the afternoon ride we became tired and sleepy and wished the journey was over; often we were refreshed by eating a large, red, ripe watermelon, still the road would stretch into many miles before evening; how eagerly we watched for the chimney of the old house. After awhile we would leave the main road to "go through" some neighbor's farm; the little darkey who opened the gates for us would bow and grin when father would give him a dime and say, "Now run to the house and tell your Miss Lucy that Miss Mary has come home." When we rode up to the front gate the whole family came out to meet us; the old folks happy and smiling with joy as they greeted us, just as we rejoice to-day when our dear children and grandchildren can return home for a visit. Everything was done for our comfort and pleasure, the best of food was prepared, choice dainties were set out, each child was shown some special mark of attention, and love ruled in all hearts.

We gathered the eggs, drove the cow, peeled apples and peaches for drying, went to the fields for roasting ears and pole beans, or if late enough gathered hickory-nuts, walnuts and hazelnuts for the winter.

The large old-fashioned rooms, with rag carpets on the floors, woven in grandmother's loom, were neat and clean. The tall chimney mantel held the large clock and the vases filled with corn flowers, wild roses and asparagus branches; in the fall the huge fireplaces were filled with logs of wood and the bright, cheerful fire we then had is not equaled by anything in the home of to-day.

The old neighbors would come in to spend the day and such hurry and bustle as there would be to fix a "big dinner," such pies and custards as grandmother could make, such rolls of sweet, yellow butter and such good, hot biscuits to eat it on. There were dozens of chickens, turkeys, geese and guineafowls; the smoke-house contained the best and sweetest of old-fashioned hams, bacon and lard; the people lived on the fat of the land in those days and no "boughten stuff" filled the tables. Often father and the uncles and boys would take the partridge net and set it, with its wide wings, in some field and drive a whole covey of quail into it, which would make a feast for us at the breakfast table the next morning. Grandfather raised corn, hemp and tobacco and the men all smoked, so did grandmother. They would fill their pipes or roll their cigars and smoke and talk every evening till bedtime. When the day was done the family Bible was read, the prayer offered, "The day is past and gone" was sung, and God's blessings rested upon that dear old home.

Sympathy.

BY IDA B. DAVIDSON.

The sad, tired world with all its busy cares,
Its voiceless sorrows and its throbbing pain,
Has such sore need of human sympathy,
To lesson with its kindly touch, the strain
Of daily living.

For human sympathy alone can thrill
The heart to glad, warm life and hope again;
Bearing the soul above the clouds of doubt
To join the chorus of a glad Amen!

Where a Nickel Was Lost.

BY DEWITT C. WING.

It was a cold morning in December, in a noisy business city; the streets were swarming with men, women and children—all classes, ages and sizes. An aged lady with only one arm, bent in form and weary in spirit, was plodding along the avenue, wending her way as best she could through the surging multitude. She was without means and poorly clad. Occasionally she stopped and peered about her and drew a long breath. Several times she asked for financial assistance, but all whom she asked said that cold and cruel No.

On the corner stood a well-dressed, genteel-looking young man awaiting the arrival of a street car. The poor old woman approached him and said: "Mister, will you please help me—please give me a nickel." "No," he said in a voice coarse and penetrating; "I haven't it to spare." She went on, her eye full of tears, meeting the same stone-hearted kind of people.

The young gentleman who had refused to help her was seen shortly thereafter going into a saloon, a den of evil, an endeavor society of the devil; investigation found that he had spent ten cents therein for rum, which amount was doubly detrimental to himself by reason of the fact that he had refused to give a half of it to a poor and needy old woman and spent it and another piece for drink!

The decrepid woman finally accosted a man of perhaps forty years of age and asked him for help; he opened his heart to her, and she was greatly cheered and encouraged.

I wonder which of the two men, the giver or refuser, stands right before God? No, I know there is no question about it. It is more blessed to give than receive; it is more blessed to give than not to give.

There are millions of opportunities offered every day for the proper distribution of charity; there are also many objects not deserving of charity. The case in question was and is.

"How Beautiful to be with God!"

As the shoreline of Time faded into the glad light of Eternity, and the sweet consciousness of the Infinite Presence filled the wonderful spirit of Frances Willard, she looked up with the calm of a soothed child, falling asleep in the golden glow of the eventime, and said:

"How beautiful to be with God!"

Like a benediction the words fell upon the ears of the listening world, and the message from the borderland of light floats back upon the pathway of turmoil and conflict, of sorrow and joy, and breathes the sweet fragrance of a higher hope into our hearts and lives.

"How beautiful to be with God!" We hear the glad echo of this last testimony, and a new realization of companionship with God comes up within us. The cares and responsibilities of every-day living throng us, their duties press and weary, but the harmony of heaven is ours, the beauty of its spirit touches with forgetfulness much of the hardship of the journey. In this full consciousness all life is transformed. The flowers spring up, the birds sing, the skies are blue; sad hearts cease their crying, because of the cup of comfort loving hands offer in unselfish thoughtfulness. Resentment dies out. Oppression is disarmed, the lash falls on the silent air, the stricken are tenderly lifted, the hungry fed. Strife is no more. "Peace on earth" swells out its joyful music to the tread of of the multitude, for the heart of man at last has found companionship with the Most High, the source of all that is noble and pure and holy, and feels with every heart-beat the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man. Thus comes to pass the blessed words: "Behold, old things are passed away, all things are become new;" "Thy will be done upon earth, even as it is in heaven."—Anna Wilson Simmons, in the New York Observer.

Some ladies asked once on a time,
"Can women beat the men?"
Nor long they talked but with a dime,
Began their ardent fight with sin.

"Come, work, blest host, your mite
Can wondrous blessings mete;"
The call was heard, and with delight
Their sisters now the word repeat.

Consider well, be moved with love,
Carefully watch, be always meek.
Like serpents wise, kind as the dove,
Thus win the wanderers whom you seek.

Then, Christian, work where'er you dwell,
Let woman's prayer pierce through the sky,
Our Board will aid in mount or dell,
Of missions' fruits we'll sing on high.

What We Should do as Girls.*

"Many young girls endowed with brilliant intellects, and capable of making the world better by a right use of the talents entrusted to their keeping, make a miserable failure of this thing called life."

They set forth upon the voyage under glowing skies and with faces turned to the eastward, where the dreamy splendor of the morning dawn throws its glamour over them, tinting all things with its fair delusions; even the long blue waves and the white sea-froth catch a glimmer of the golden tints, and break into sheens of sparkling beauty at their feet. It shuts from their sight the shadow of clouds that lower in the western horizon, and hushes from their ears the roar of distant breakers and the long, low, rolling thunder-note, premonitions of storms that must break sooner or later over every ship that sails the sea of life.

To-day we, a band of hopeful girls, are trimming our sails for the ocean of active life. To-day the shore is ours, to-morrow the ocean; and each feels if she does not ask the question: "How will my voyage end?"

We stand on the shore looking oceanward. The long waves break on the pebbly beach and kiss with lips of foam the eager, trembling feet, telling how tenderly the wavelets will caress our frail barks, and of the "lone sweet isles amid the sea where, when weary of toiling against wind and wave, we may rest secure from storm or flood."

But up from the heart of the waters a still, small voice is calling for earnest laborers in the fields of life. Our work in life is whatever we find ourselves competent to do.

We hear so much in these days of a public career for girls, in which may be gained fine plumage and notoriety, and in a very few instances fame. There are many ways in which a girl can perform her task in the work of this life without entering into the much-talked-of "public career." We must not undertake great things and neglect the many small duties that devolve upon us. "Seek to be good, but aim not to be great. A woman's noblest station is retreat; her fairest virtues fly from public sight."

We must remember we are not simply living in the present. The deeds we do now, the thoughts we think now, will yield a fruitage in the years to come. "Then we should be kind, be nob'e! Make our life one grand sweet song." "Drop kind words along our pathway. We will find them again, transformed into blue forget-me-nots, whose fragrance will welcome us as our feet near the verdant meads of the Glory-land."

We should be energetic, and this energy is but really the result of an educated will. By resolving to do all things well, and as quickly and gracefully as possible, even if the act be no greater than the pouring of a cup of tea, or the arranging of one's toilet, the will is gradually taught energy and its strength increases. Let us every one, therefore, lay aside all listlessness and "whatever our hands find to do, do it with a will." All the really strong characters in the world are they who are so by mere force of will. No gifts, even the most brilliant, are of much real worth without the will to use them.

The best and most enduring work is not done by the noisy persons who are forever calling attention to what they do. It is performed by those who, after their best performance, are conscious only that they have done those things which they ought to have done. Such workers are surprised when commended for what they accomplish. It has been said of Gen. Grant, and the words well describe the quiet, modest soldier:

"He came grim, silent, saw and did the deed that was to do;
He slew our dragon, nor so seemed it knew;
He had done more than any simplest man might do.
One of those still, plain men that do the world's rough work."

So may we silently and willingly perform our duties, and cultivate each day those virtues—gentleness, kindness, modesty and purity—which are so admirable in the character of a young girl. For—

"As pure as a pearl,
And as perfect, is a noble and innocent girl."

FOR YOU

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common-sense way, that is, by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

Getting Started.

After George and Jennie Weston had eaten their supper (oyster soup and pickles), they hastened to the bookcase to select the books which they intended to read in the Advance Society course. It was necessary to pick out a history or biography and a book containing poety.

"I am going to keep on reading Irving's Life of Washington," said Jennie, taking down the second volume, "I am very much interested in it, anyway, and you see it will count on the society work."

"I'm going to get the biggest history we've got," George announced. "I guess that Hume, up there, is about the thing; I see it's in six big fat volumes. I'm tired of seeing it take up so much space, and nobody ever reading it!"

"Oh, George!" exclaimed his sister, "I wouldn't begin on such a long history as that. Besides, I'm afraid you will tire of it, and then quit and leave me to be alone in our branch of the society. Get a book you will be interested in, like Southey's 'Life of Nelson,' or 'Dickens' History of England.'"

"No," said George. "Here, you hold this chair while I go after that Hume!" He mounted the baby's high chair, because that was the only way to reach the high shelf. "And don't you be afraid I'll quit. I'm going to be printed in the List of Honor. Look out! that chair's a-wobbling dreadful! Now I've got it!" He climbed down with his book, and they went to their study table where a lamp stood ready.

"First thing," said George, "let's get blank books to keep our record in."

"Hadn't we better make a record first?"

But George hunted up a notebook and spread it open before him ready to write down how much he had read as soon as he had done it. Then the children began to read and silence reigned in the room until Mr. Weston entered. That gentleman looked over George's shoulder. "Hume!" he exclaimed. "And Saturday night!" He felt his son's head. "Do you feel well, George?"

George said he was well, and his father departed with a perplexed expression. At last George finished his five pages, and he hurried to write in his book,

"Minutes of the Advance Society,
Kept by George Weston.
First week (Nov. 3-10, 1898).
History.—Hume's "England," Vol. I. 5 pp."

Then he looked at his sister, but she was reading steadily. After watching her awhile, he exclaimed, "Well, you are a show one!"

Jennie started. "Why! I have read an extra page without thinking!" she exclaimed.

"I stopped right in the middle of a sentence," said George, "at the end of the fifth page. Five pages are all you have to read."

"But I was interested and kept on. You ought to have gotten a book that would make you want to know what was going to happen."

"I didn't care what happened," said George. "My book said the Romans defeated Caractacus 'and took him prisoner and sent him to Rome where—' And I don't know 'where' what, because that ended the fifth page. But I can tell you, I feel big, reading that big history, and I would rather feel big than to feel interested! Now bring on your poetry."

There was a change of books (George cried, "Change cars!") and again silence reigned, till the boy demanded,

"Didn't Milton write a long time ago?"

"Why, yes, many, many years ago."

"I guess they didn't use periods, then!" said George, in an aggrieved tone. "At least I haven't run across one yet. Jennie, this is awful!"

"Why, George, what are you reading?"

"Paradise Lost. Jennie, I told you I couldn't stand poetry, and I'm afraid I am gone, now! I don't want to feel any bigger than Hume makes me feel. Now this thing—I don't any more know what they are doing here than—why, it ain't even about skies and birds and things, what they generally talk about in rhymes."

"Let me get you a book where the poetry tells little stories—here is Longfellow, and over here in his 'Tales of a Wayside Inn,' there are sure enough stories, only the lines rhyme."

"A story in poetry?"

"Why, of course. A lot of people meet at an inn, and each one tells a story to the rest; good stories, too!"

"Hand her over," said her brother. "But I wish I had been Longfellow; I'd have written all this out in prose, where the lines are even at the end! Poetry always looked to me like the lines were trying to trot." But he hunted out one of the tales, and read with a determined expression on his face. "Now that's over," he announced at last. "What are you reading, just keeping on and on, like you were wound up?"

"This is 'Gertrude of Wyoming,' by Campbell. It is about a little boy and girl and Indians, so far. The Indians killed the boy's parents, and a good chief slipped the boy away, and carried him through the woods to the girl's father. I expect they'll fall in love pretty soon."

"Yes, and die by and by," said George. "There is more dying in poetry than there is in the army! But come on, let's get our quotations. I want to do everything the same evening, and be free to do as I please the rest of the week. Here's what I'm going to learn, from Josh Billings." And George began to walk up and down the room declaiming in a loud voice, "Hope is a hen that lays more eggs than she can hatch. Hope is a hen that lays more eggs than she can hatch. Hope is a hen—" He stopped on seeing his father watching him from the doorway. Mr. Weston hurried away to his wife. "My dear," he said to her, "something is the matter with George. Awhile ago he had Hume, and now I don't know what he has got! But he is acting very queer."

So Mrs. Weston came in, looking pale, and her husband tiptoed behind her; they heard the words, "Hope is a hen that lays more eggs."

Mrs. Weston turned to her husband. "He is talking in his sleep," she whispered, looking alarmed. But at that Jennie and George laughed, and told them all about the Advance Society. "All you do to be members," they said, "Is to read every week thirty lines of poetry and five pages of history, memorize a quotation, read a verse of the Bible every day and keep an account of what you do in your notebook. And if you keep at it twelve weeks, you are printed in the list of honor."

"I do believe I will join myself!" cried Mrs. Weston, when they talked about it, and Mr. Weston had retreated to his newspaper.

"You can't!" said George. "They said they didn't want any owls to be solemn and scare us robbins away."

"Mamma is not an owl!" cried Jennie, throwing her arms about her mother, "she is just a big robin, and of course she will join. Hurrah for the Advance Society! Here are three members. Let's get up a big circle in the town!"

How Jennie and George started an Advance Society circle will be told week after next, but next week we will give the true funny stories that have been sent in. The Advance Society is growing with great rapidity. Already many states are represented. We are very glad that not only children, from eight to eighteen have joined, but a good number of older persons. All are welcome. I call upon the older ones to help make this department a success. Send me stories such as children like, or sketches that will amuse and instruct. As for the children, I will give them another general subject to write upon in our next issue. In the meantime I am always delighted to receive personal letters from the children, telling me about themselves. I intend to make up an article from those letters I have already received, for a not distant day. Every mail brings new names for my roll-book. Do not be left out of this society, the only one of its kind in the world.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

We have already seen reason to question whether the late repentance of Manasseh produced any notable improvement in the religious condition of Israel. At all events the reign of his son, Amon, duplicated the worst features of his long rule. The heathen party was in full power, if it had ever been overthrown, and idolatry flourished throughout the kingdom. That all was not quiet, however, is proved by the king's death in a popular insurrection, which nevertheless was soon quelled, and resulted only in the elevation of his son, Josiah, to the throne in 639 B. C.

This was a moment of immense importance, and evidently the heathen party was quite unprepared to meet it. Amon had reigned but two years, and being still a young man gave promise of as long a rule as his father's. In such circumstances the care of the princes was of small importance. But it was the case of Hezekiah reversed. Then, in a period of prosperity, the prince Manasseh had been left to heathen companionship, and the good work of the father was undone by the son. Here the heathen father forgot the son who was growing into boyhood, and he early formed the acquaintance of a circle of boys and men who were to influence profoundly both himself and the future of Judah. The most important person in that company was Hilkiah the high priest. Others of the circle were Shaphan, the court scribe, and Ahikam, his son, with Jeremiah, a young man of priestly family, and about the age of the prince, afterwards destined to be the most influential prophet of the decline and fall. It is not improbable that Zephaniah was also a member of this small body of men who stood close enough to the king to influence profoundly his career.

The times were full of danger. The prevailing cult was so fully heathenish that Jehovah worship was in danger of entire overthrow. The temple had been invaded by idolatry, and the older faith of prophets like Isaiah had become a jest, or was mutilated by the professional preachers of the time who claimed to interpret God, but, as Jeremiah said, only followed their own devices. But the chief danger lay in the worship at the country sanctuaries. These places of ancestral sanctity had been held sacred from the date of the conquest. The earlier prophets had seen in them no danger. Samuel and Elijah alike recognized them as having a true place in the religious life of the nation. But Amos and Hosea had seen in them sources of danger; Hezekiah had tried to suppress them, and Isaiah referred to them with contempt. But after the reaction to heathenism which followed the coronation of Manasseh, the baleful character of these outlying altars could be no longer disregarded. The men who waited in silence through the dark years of Manasseh and Amon saw that a blow must be struck so swift and final that the question should be forever settled.

Many biblical scholars believe that the book found in the temple during the renovation which followed Josiah's effort to restore the worship of Jehovah, was no other than our book of Deuteronomy, or at least such portions of it as bear directly upon the problem then before the nation. One need not believe that it was a new book, written on the spot and palmed off on the people. Much of its material may have been Mosaic; wholly such was its spirit. But along with the need for emphasis upon many things which Moses had taught was the urgent demand for the abolition of all but the central sanctuary, a principle never enunciated by the great lawgiver, who had sanctioned sacrifice at any spot where God should set his name; but in entire accord with the spirit of his teaching, since the true religion depended upon the centralizing of the worship at one place like the temple, where it could be supervised and controlled. It is not improbable, therefore, that the Book of Deuteronomy, at least in its essential features, was compiled sometime during the reigns of Manasseh and Amon, based upon the addresses of Moses in his farewell to the people; giving in the main the true principles of the Mosaic teaching, with the addition of the new law of centralization which the priests and prophets who co-operated in the work may well have felt sure Moses would have enjoined in the new day that had come. This new code could not be used in that time of trouble, and may have been laid away till happier days should dawn. They came at last with Josiah; the book was found, and its perusal wrought a transformation in the thought of the king and in the life of the nation.

Whatever may have been the origin of the book we may well discover its character from the effects produced. Comparing the reformation of Josiah and the great passover that he held with the regulations of Deuteronomy, we discover that they correspond closely. We may almost believe we can select the very portions of the book which were read, since it is hardly probable that the entire volume as we have it was read to a great popular assembly. Such sections as 6:4, 5, which Jesus called the great commandment; 12:2-7, enjoining the destruction of heathen symbols; 16:21, 22, prohibition of obelisks and stakes with sensual connotation; 18:9-15, prohibition of divination, and promise of a line of prophets, and the blessings and curses pronounced upon the obedient and disobedient respectively—these were undoubtedly some of the sections of the great code which brought terror to king and people.

For when the news was brouget to Josiah, and the book was read in his hearing, he recognized in it a message from God, yet one that neither he nor his fathers had known or observed. The very things freely tolerated were those on which severest condemnation was pronounced. He had already shown his zeal for the true worship by ordering the repair of the temple. He now said that something, indeed much, remained to do. Rending his garments in token of his consternation and sense of unworthiness, he sent at once a deputation to the aged Huldah, a prophetess from whom such young men as Jeremiah and Zephaniah may well have received instruction. That she was counted a woman of importance is shown by the fact that even Hilkiah, the high priest, was a member of the deputation sent. She pointed out to them the danger of the situation, the insults suffered by the true religion as the result of the past conditions and the certainty of judgment upon the city where such iniquity had been practiced. She added, however, a commendation for the young king whose soul had been roused by the message of the book.

This conference produced immediate results. A great popular assembly was held at which the book was read. The temple was cleansed, idolatry put down, its symbols destroyed, its altars defiled and its immoral votaries driven away. The country sanctuaries were entirely abolished and the priests removed to the temple at Jerusalem. On altars suspected of idolatrous use human bodies were consumed, the last defilement they could suffer; while the fire kindled in the Valley of Topheth inorder to consume the refuse stood ever after as the symbol of all purgation by fire. Then came the great passover, with its deuteronomic features, and the reforming programme of Josiah was complete. The Book of Chronicles places the discovery of the book during the progress of the reformation, but the older record preserved in Kings makes the discovery of the book the cause of this movement.

Here, as so often since, the discovery or recovery of the Word of God was the cause of a great popular effort in behalf of righteousness. Every religious reformation of the centuries has been supported by the divine message. Wherever the Bible is in obscurity, buried in oblivion, or overlaid by the tradition of men, there come days of darkness when faith declines. Such were the times of Bernard, of Savonarola, of Wycliffe and of Luther, and such in later times was the period of Campbell. To bring forth the Book, and call men's attention to it with trumpet voice was the task of these men, and in similar times must ever be the function of such prophets.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

When men are doing a good work they may be sure to find that which is of still greater value. Quick response to the message of the Bible is proof of a soul open to the truth. The discovery that we are doing wrong should always make us as profoundly distressed as was Josiah. In a time of trouble the king inquired of God through the prophetess; we need no one through whom to go to God save our Master. It takes long years and many lessons to teach the truth that sin always brings trouble. Those who bear the burden of grief over the sin of the world are sharing the work of our Lord. The discovery of the Bible in lands where it has not been known, in circles where it has not been recognized, or in minds where it has been obscured by neglect or tradition, is the sure cause of moral and spiritual regeneration.

A Common Cold

and common carelessness can make a combination strong enough to defy all the healing skill of the physician. Common carelessness lets the cold root and grow. Common carelessness says, between paroxysms of coughing, "It will be all right in a day or two," and the common end is confirmed lung trouble, perhaps consumption. The common-sense treatment of a common cold is a prompt dose of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It is the most efficient and reliable cure for colds and coughs, and is constantly prescribed by physicians.

S. HAYNES, M. D., Saranac, N. Y., says:—

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my practice since 1853, and have always found it reliable for the cure of colds, coughs, and all lung diseases."

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

An Announcement to Ministers.

The Council of Seventy desire to announce that the Professional Reading Courses, to be conducted by the American Institute of Sacred Literature, was now fully in operation, two hundred ministers being already at work. It is significant that in so comparatively small a number the following variety of denominations is represented: Methodist Episcopal, Wesleyan Methodist, M. E. South, Presbyterian, Cumberland Presbyterian, Reformed Presbyterian, Southern Presbyterian, Disciples of Christ, Reformed, Lutheran, Evangelical Lutheran, Unitarian, Universalist, United Brethren and Pentecostal.

The subjects now ready as announced in June are (1) The Historical and Literary Origin of the Pentateuch; (2) The Old Testament Prophecy; (3) The Origin and Growth of the Hebrew Psalter; (4) The Life of the Christ; (5) The Apostolic Age; (6) The Problems Connected with the Gospel of John; (7) Christianity and Social Problems; (8) The Preparation of Sermons.

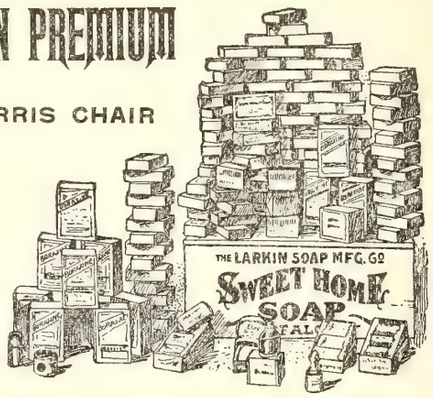
An average number of eight books has been placed upon each course. In the choice of these books every member of the Council of Seventy was invited to participate, and as a result forty distinct lists were sent, aggregating two hundred different books.

These lists were submitted to a committee, and under certain necessary conditions those books having the most votes were chosen. The lists therefore represent the composite decision of a body of seventy practical teachers of the Bible and kindred subjects in our leading universities and seminaries.

Except for payment of the annual membership fee, no restrictions are imposed upon those entering the Guild, either in time limit, choice of subject, report, etc. A carefully prepared review of each book is provided the reader. Every minister should at least inform himself concerning this opportunity for guidance and suggestion in the line of his professional reading. It is possible that by so doing he may find for himself a saving of his own time in looking up material and a stimulus toward work in some definite line of study and investigation.

All inquiries should be addressed to the American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill.

Literature of the Disciples of Christ.



The literature of the Disciples of Christ marks a period of illumination in Christian thought, and no literature in the world transcends it in importance. It deals, not with reforming the modern Church, but restoring the Apostolic Church, and this is the most important theme since the close of the sacred canon. "Celebrated as the era of the Reformation is," said Alexander Campbell, "we doubt not that the era of the Restoration will as far transcend it in importance and fame, through the long and blissful millennium, as the New Testament transcends in simplicity, beauty, excellency and majesty the dogmas and notions of the creed of Westminster and the canons of the Assembly's Digest." Alexander Campbell broke the last clasp on the Bible and threw wide open its pages, and the literature of the Disciples of Christ is to keep them open, and bring men face to face with its eternal principles. Our motto has been and ever must be, "Let there be light." Our literature, consequently, has been destructive rather than constructive, building no fortress around divine truth, but, instead, burning the palisade that a Christian philosophy and human theology had erected, and that weakened and obstructed truth. Our best books are "imperishable shrines, not of dead ashes, but of living souls." They are "the blood of master-spirits embalmed for a life beyond life." Alexander Campbell is still writing for the pages of the Christian Baptist and the Millennial Harbinger; J. T. Barclay is still taking notes in the "City of the Great King;" Isaac Errett is still writing his editorials for the Christian Standard, and B. W. Johnson is still working on his commentaries. We sit at the feet of these masters and enlarge their lives as we receive their wisdom and life.—The Christian Tribune.

Genesis of the Disciples of Christ.

F. D. POWER, Director.

The people that search the Scriptures, that search them daily, that test all religious teachings by the Scriptures, "to see whether these things are so," are not in the majority. Thousands are willing to have their thinking done for them. Thousands receive their religious views from the preacher as they receive their political views from the editor. It may be ignorance; it may be indifference; it is certainly a vice. As every one must give answer for himself before God, so every man should for himself "prove all things and hold fast that which is good." What our fathers taught is not the supreme law; what the creeds teach is not the supreme law; what our preacher, or our church may teach, is not the supreme law. God speaks: "This is my beloved Son hear ye him!"

> "Our little systems have their day;
> They have their day and cease to be.
> They are but broken lights of Thee,
> And Thou, O Lord, art more than they!"

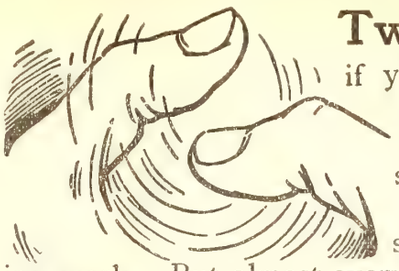
At the beginning of this century the condition of the religious world was such as to excite deepest regret in many pious hearts. Pulpit thundered against pulpit; sect warred upon sect with a bitterness of which we can hardly conceive to-day. Believers in Christ were rent into hostile factions, hateful and hating each other. These scandalous divisions and dissensions among the followers of the meek and lowly One gave great impulse to unbelief. In their bigoted loyalty to dusty dogmas and fine spun subtleties they even lost sight of the gospel. Their acrimonious bickerings in every case were engendered by human speculations and inferences from the Scriptures.

In 1807 Thomas Campbell came to America, a Seceder Presbyterian, and was assigned to Washington County, Pa. He was a man of great piety and loyalty to the Word of God. He saw the evil of human creeds and how Christians were divided on dogmas and speculations. He felt the object of Christian faith was a Person, and so long as man was right about Jesus as the Son of God and Savior of sinners, as the One having all authority in heaven and on earth, it is a matter of comparative indifference that they should agree in all minute and inferential particulars. He began to plead for a simple, evangelical Christianity, free from human opinions and inventions. His brethren, holding strictly to the Westminster Confession of Faith, threw upon him the odium theologicum, and he severed himself from the Synod and issued a declaration calling for a return to the simple original form of Christianity expressly exhibited upon the sacred page, without attempting to inculcate anything of human authority, private opinion, or invention of men as having any place in the Constitution, faith or worship of the Christian church, or anything as a matter of Christian faith or duty for which there cannot be expressly produced a "Thus saith the Lord," either in express terms or approved precedent.

Compelled by the inexorable logical demands of the position taken, that tradition has nothing to do with Christianity; that the Bible and the Bible alone is the religion of Protestants; that all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, reproof, correction, instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work; that the gospel should be preached in all ages as preached by the first authorized expounders and wise master-builders of the early church, the apostles of Jesus Christ; that the same answers should be given to inquiring penitents now as were given by the Spirit-sent and Spirit-filled teachers of primitive Christianity—Peter, Philip, Ananias and Paul—following this inevitable logic of their plea, the Campbells with their wives and a few others, were immersed June 1812, and the first congregation on this basis was formed.

There was no thought of creating another denomination. These men sought to reform abuses, to call men away from creeds, confessions, church standards, denominationalism, to a common Christianity. They proposed the union of all Christians on what was explicitly taught in the express letter of the infallible oracles. They contended if a man could be a Christian without believing in the Five Points of Calvinism or the five counterpoints of Arminianism, then these diverse doctrines were superadded to the Christianity of the New Testament—human additions—and ought not to be made tests of Christian fellowship and communion. They pleaded for the entire restoration of apostolic order to remove from Christianity the curse of sectarianism. They claimed the church should be emancipated from slavery to Augustine, Calvin, Luther, Wesley or any other man. They called men back beyond Geneva, beyond Wittenburg, beyond Oxford, beyond Constantinople, beyond Rome to Jerusalem. They said Jesus commanded, "Tarry in Jerusalem." "Preach the gospel among all nations beginning at Jerusalem," and back to Jerusalem we must go. It was a stern struggle. They lifted their battle-lit faces to the flashing of the guns of ridicule, calumny, denunciation, ostracism, but God was with them, and their blows shook hierarchs, prison doors flew open, and spiritual manacles dropped from souls that henceforth walked in the glorious liberty of the children of God, and even those who despised their movement have been swayed by their teachings.

Taking their position at Jerusalem, these men began their survey. They ran their baselines from the original stations. They taught the intelligibility of the Scriptures, that the original survey could be discovered and identified, and the bearings taken from the position of inspired men, and that in all the essentials of faith, every one could find the way of life. Beginning the survey here, settling their instruments and taking their bearings from this point, and directing their course by the old landmarks, they declared as essential to a divided and distracted Christendom, the only book that all Christians agree upon—the Bible; the only Leader and Sovereign that all agree in, and whose name is the only name they all may wear—Christ Jesus; the only faith they all regard as essential to salvation—faith in Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God and Savior of the world; the only baptism they all agree in—the immersion of the believer into the name of he Father, Son and Holy Spirit; the only test of fellowship they all believe in—obedience to Christ; the only church they all agreed upon—the Church of Christ, built upon the foundation of apostles and prophet, Jesus being the chief corner stone.



Italy (Lombardy).

The people of Lombardy, one of the northern divisions of Italy, are very different from the Italians of the South. Their part of the country was once inhabited by the Longabardi, or Longbeards, from the north, who, uniting with the Italians, formed a people now possessing typical Italian grace and beauty, combined with the vigor and perseverance of the Germanic tribes.

In this division of Italy, famous for its well-cultivated land, the mulberry, grape and chestnut are successfully grown, and much silk and wine are produced.

The Singer Sewing machine is almost universally in use by the thrifty people of Lombardy because of the simplicity of its mechanism, as well as the Company's liberal policy with its customers.

The photograph reproduction on another page shows an excellent type of Lombardy woman seated at a Singer sewing-machine. Her costume, much more quiet in tone and simple in design than that worn by Italian women of the South, is peculiar only in the shape and trimming of the bonnet which, set far back on the head, frames her face, and brings her strongly-marked features into bold relief.

Publishers' Notes.

Homer T. Wilson, pastor of Third Christian Church, Ft. Worth, Tex., and National Chaplain of the Traveler's Protective Association, and also well known as a popular lecturer in the South, has the following to say concerning M. M. Davis' recent book, "Queen Esther:"

"It is one of the most charming books I have ever read. It is a beautiful story, told in the author's own inimitable style. It is thrilling, pathetic, grand, and I most heartily commend it to all, and especially to young ladies. It is a household treasure."

"Queen Esther" is a book containing 132 pages, has appropriate illustrations, is bound in the latest style cloth, and the price is 75 cents, postpaid.

No teacher, be he or she a Christian or not, could fail of suggestion or inspiration in reading "Jesus as a Teacher," by Prof. B. A. Hinsdale, of the University of Michigan. Prof. Hinsdale has put into book form articles previously published and finds in Jesus the great Master of ethical method.

Teachers should never forget the great superiority of the new education to the old consists mainly in the farther advance that it has made along the path when the Great Teacher pioneered the way.

The above is an extract from a review of "Jesus as a Teacher," by the Religious Herald, of Hartfod, Conn. This work is worthy the attention of teachers in the university, the college and the public schools, as it is full of suggestions for the schoolroom of to-day.

It is a work of 330 pages, cloth bound, and the price is $1.25, postpaid.

"Mary Ardmore, or a Test of Faith," by J. H. Stark, is the new book that is rapidly gaining popular favor. It is written in the choicest terms, and will exert an elevating and refining influence on the minds of the readers. It is a book worthy a place in the family, and will interest both parents and children. Its thoughts will adorn the mind, and its beautiful illuminated bindings will please the eye. The long winter evenings can be profitably spent in reading this new book. It contains 328 pages, and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

The Religious Telescope, of Dayton, Ohio, is certainly excellent authority on the merits of Sunday-school literature. We are pleased to give our readers the following extract of a notice of our Lesson Commentary for 1899, as published in the Religious Telescope of Nov. 2nd, 1898:

"The Christian Lesson Commentary on the International Bible studies for 1899, by W. W. Dowling, has come to us. The volume before us is fully up to the high standard of its predecessors, and its pages are replete with notes, comments, illustrations, applications and suggestions gathered from various sources, the design being to throw the best light possible on the Scripture text, and assist the teacher and pupil to fix it upon the mind and hide it in the heart. We commend this commentary to all Sunday-school workers."

'In the Days of Jehu" and "King Saul" are two of our recent publications, the author of both being J. Breckenridge Ellis. A late issue of the Christian Oracle has the following notice of "King Saul:"

"The author gives it as his purpose to write a series of volumes which shall describe the various romantic narratives found in the Bible, and which, without altering or inventing one fact, shall develop these histories as if they were stories for the first time told. In this volume, as in the former, the author has succeeded admirably. This charming book has one of the volumes honored by being read 'out loud' in our household. It is a delightful task the author has set himself, and he is to be congratulated on his success."

"Mary Ardmore, or a Test of Faith," by J. H. Stark, author of "Hugh Carlin," etc., is claimed to be the best work that the author has yet written. It is a story showing the wonderful influence of a consecrated and pure woman. The heroine of this story is cultured and accomplished, and she uses these gifts to great advantage, leading all into a higher and better life with whom she mingles. Parents should place such books as "Mary Ardmore" in the hands of their sons and dauthters who are inclined to read novels. This book will influence their minds and lives for good. The price is $1, postpaid.

OPEN PARLIAMENT ON OUR NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

The following questions have been sent to several brethren by way of opening the discussion. If others have suggestions let them be brief, as the following are, and to the point:

While the memory of our National Conventions is fresh in your mind will you please answer in about 200 words the following questions for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

1. What changes, if any, would you suggest in the manner of conducting our conventions?
2. What suggestions have you to offer as to the Jubilee Convention?

An early reply will oblige

THE EDITOR.

Will you suffer a word from me on this very important subject? If I were to write a volume on the subject I could not express the whole matter in a better way than Bro. G. A. Hoffmann has expressed it in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST before me (Nov. 17), and I do heartily pray that the time may soon come when there will be no separate organizations, but all of them combined in ONE. thus presenting "our plea" before the world in a practical way.

W. J. HUDSPDTH.

Little Rock, Ark.

The year 1899 will close the most wonderful century of human history.

The most important movement of this "age on ages telling," is the effort to restore the AUTHORITY OF THE CHRIST and THE WORD OF GOD and the UNITY OF THE CHURCH, so sought by the Disciples of Christ.

Scarcely less important than the rejection of human creeds and names for the divine creed and divine names was the organization of the isolated churches for mutual help and world-wide evangelization according to the spirit and example of the apostolic church.

Eighteen hundred and ninety-nine will be the jubilee of our world-wide missionary organization. The meeting in Cincinnati will probably be the largest missionary gathering of the century.

One hundred thousand dollars for Home Missions, no less for Foreign Missions, one hundred thousand conversions, advancement all alo g the line—this is a noble ambition, yet perhaps we ought to do more.

In regard to any changes in methods of holding conventions, it is self-evident we must have more time, or hold some sessions of the different conventions at the same hours. If the latter plan is adopted it will require great care to avoid depriving large numbers of some of the most interesting and important exercises.

If I am to give my conception of the most important interest it will be, "HOME MISSIONS TO THE FRONT."

Care should be taken to rule every exercise within its own time. When this is full according to a program, there is a moral responsibility involved. E. C. BROWNING.

Little Rock, Ark.

1. The entire interest of our conventions should center in the religious purpose which they represent. Sight-seeing, anythi g which draws the attention of the people from the consideration of the high and holy aims which they have met to further, is in my opinion detrimental to the work, and lowers in a degree the spiritual level of the entire affair. I do not say that sight-seeing is wrong under such circumstances, but that the two do not harmonize.

The devotional seasons that have been so rich, and of marked power in some of our conventions, should be maintained at that high level. It seems to me that these help to solidify and make permanent the convictions, resolutions and tender emotions that are always induced by the inspiring exercises of the convention. They are too precious to be sacrificed to any god of expediency.

2. My heart is stirred to its depths over the possibilities of this jubilee year. May there be a great ingathering of souls and of treasure for the best cause in the world.

PERSIS L. CHRISTIAN.

Eureka Springs, Ark., Nov. 12.

1. I have not had the privilege of attending our National Conventions in recent years. I had better leave the suggestion of changes in the manner of conducting them to others who have been in a position to more closely observe them.

2. This Jubilee Convention and year ought to be the greatest in our entire history. To make it such I would suggest that work be begun in every congregation of Disciples throughout the land. Our brethren need to study anew the religious movement with which we are identified. The older brethren can have their hearts gladdened by a review of the glorious past, and the younger ones should become acquainted with the heroic efforts and elements that made up the history of the past. Especially should each congregation study the history of these fifty years of organized and aggressive missionary work. In connection with this general study they should study the part they, as congregations, have had in this work. If this part has not been what it should be let it stir us up to greater exertions than ever before. Congregations should plan to have one or more members at the convention. But they should not go up to this convention empty handed. Without a decided increase in all of our missionary offerings this Jubilee Convention will be worse than a mistake—it will be fatal to the great work of evangelizing the great world in so far as our people are concerned.

Every minister should determine to do more to increase the spirituality of the people to whom he preaches and he should also seek to win as many souls to Christ as possible. In this way the jubilee may be sounded over all the land.

The churches in our large cities should organize for closer co-operation with our churches in Cincinnati to make this a great occasion.

B. F. CLAY.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 17.

Concerning the Jubilee Convention, I have a suggestion to offer which may or may not be found practical. It is about the attendance of the Endeavorers and others who can be there for only a short time. If the C. W. B. M. would give Saturday evening to the young people (and C. W. B. M. work could be presented among other things to those present), let the Endeavor session be arranged for that time. Then let excursions be seen from neighboring cities, such as Columbus, Lexington, Louisville, Indianapolis, etc., arriving in Cincinnati in time for the evening session Saturday. Those who could not be there longer could thus be there on Sunday and could return on the early trains Monday in time for the week's business. Sunday will naturally be the great day of the feast and as many as possible should be there for the great communion service, if they miss all else. Some such plan will do much toward bringing the attendance to the 10,000 mark. The details of such an idea can be worked out later.

JOHN E. POUNDS.

Indianapolis, Ind.

1. More attention should be given to the devotional feature. A great National Convention ought to be an expression of all that is best in our holy religion. Channing used to say that the House of Commons as a body had better taste than the man of the best taste in it. So also a great assembly of the Disciples of Christ should be more devout than the most devout man in it. Such a convention would generate spiritual power as well as enthusiasm. The addresses should be neither so numerous nor so long. If there are to be two the same evening neither should occupy more than thirty minutes. There should be a separate room—something like the cloak-room in the National Capitol—where delegates and friends could meet and converse without disturbing the convention. There should also be some one—say a sergeant-at arms—to move quietly about and assist the presiding officer in keeping order.

2. A speial effort should be made to have all the older generation of Disciples attend the Jubilee Convention. N. M. RAGLAND.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxv. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, December 1, 1898. No. 48

CURRENT EVENTS.

The commission appointed by the President to formulate and recommend a system of government for the Hawaiian Islands as a part of the United States, has returned from its tour of investigation in the islands. The details of the bill which it will present to Congress have not yet been announced, or even completely formulated. A meeting of the commission was held in Washington a few days ago to consider some of the items. It is understood that the commission will recommend a slightly modified form of the territorial government, including a governor and a legislature, but with certain necessary limitations to the right of suffrage.

In view of the approach of the date for the final evacuation of Cuba by the Spanish forces, preparations are being rapidly made for placing in the island a sufficient body of American troops to guarantee the preservation of order. One regiment has already sailed from Savannah for Neuvitas, Cuba, and others will soon be on the way. The time for the completion of Spanish arrangements for a permanent departure was extended, some weeks ago, from December 1 to January 1.. Realizing that this is their last chance to grab anything in Cuba, the Spanish authorities are busily getting their hands on everything that is not red-hot or screwed down. Even the stone walls can scarcely be safely left out over night, now that the monument to Columbus which stood in Havana has been torn up by the roots and shipped back to Spain.

If the tide of gold importation is either an indication or a cause of commercial prosperity, the business men of America have at present no cause for complaint. The report of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, shows that the amount of gold brought into the country during the first ten months of this year is more than twice that for the corresponding period in any preceding year in our history. Not only so, but there is also a vast preponderance of importation over exportation of gold. During the last sixty years the balance has been regularly the other way, with one or two exceptions. 1896 was the first year within the decade when there has been an excess of importations, and this year the excesses for the first ten months is raised from 37 to 129 millions. The ebb and current of the flow of gold are dependent upon causes which are hidden from us; but whatever those subtle influences are to which this sensitive current is subject, evidently those who control the matter perceive in the present situation satisfactory reasons for bringing gold into the country. We have but lately emerged from a condition of war and naturally our military leaders are the heroes of the hour, but there is no other commander by land or sea whose popularity can compare with that of Gen. Prosperity.

The international congress for the consideration of means for the suppression of anarchy held its first session at the Corsini Palace in Rome, Nov. 24. The program of the congress, as outlined by the Italian Minister of Justice, includes the following points: (1) To define a "criminal anarchist." (2) To classify anarchistic outbreaks as either political offenses or crimes against common law. (3) To consider special measures for restraining the press from encouraging anarchy. (4) To arrange for the summary extradition of fugitive anarchists. (5) To organize an international police service, or to make such modifications in the existing police systems as shall enable them to keep up international relations. Underlying all these particular topics is the fundamental question whether the mere profession of anarchistic sentiments is to be considered deserving of punishment, or whether it is necessary to wait until there shall have been some actual and overt violation of statute or common law. If anarchy is merely a political creed, then none of the nations of modern Europe would assert a right to suppress it, but would be forced to confine their repressive measures to the punishment of the individual crimes of which its adherents might be proved guilty. But if anarchy is a "cult of crime," an association with no other object than murder and outrage, then it can be suppressed without depending solely upon the conviction of individuals for specific criminal acts. In the latter case it would be regarded as criminal conspiracy and as such would be liable to punishment even in those cases where there was no opportunity for it to work itself out in actual crime. An interesting and pertinent parallel to this view is found in the attitude which the British Government took toward a religious sect in India known as the Thugs, the distinguishing feature of whose cult was indiscriminate assassination as a means of propitiating the goddess Vishnu. The government acted upon the hypothesis that such a cult as this was not religious, but criminal. Its devotees were, therefore, punished severely, without stopping to ascertain whether each individual had been guilty of actual murder. Similarly, is anarchy a political creed, or a criminal conspiracy?

The annual report of the Secretary of the Navy, which has just been made public, will be an important document for future historians of the Spanish-American war. There is nothing new in the Secretary's review of the naval operations during the war, but his statement has the advantage of being a final and authoritative summary. Still more important are the recommendations which the report contains. These indicate the lessons which the department has learned from its experience in this war. The most important of these recommendations are as follows: (1) That, in view of the inefficiency of the transport service during the late war, the transportation of troops by sea be hereafter under the control of the navy as it is in other countries. (2) That Congress shall devise and adopt some method of rewarding meritorious service in the navy other than the method now in use. By the present system, the reward of one officer may be and frequently is made at the expense of others who have rendered equally meritorous though less conspicuous service. (3) That the grades of Admiral and Vice-Admiral be revived temporarily, to be filled by such officers as the President shall nominate, with the advice and consent of the Senate. (4) That Congress authorize an increase of the enlisted force whenever necessary to 20,000 men and 2,500 apprentices. (5) That all smokeless power be used by the navy. (6) That Congress authorize the construction of three battleships of 13,500 tons, three armored cruisers of 12,000 tons, three protected cruisers of 6,000 tons, and six cruisers of 2,500 tons, the total estimated cost, exclusive of armor and armament, being $36,100,800.

The situation in the mining community at Pana, Ill., has become little, if any, less serious than was that at Virden. The operators at Pana succeeded in importing negro miners to take the places of the strikers before any steps could be taken to hinder them. The outcome of the affair at Virden encouraged the members of the union at Pana to make resistance again, and during the last ten days there has been a stormy time in that town. Martial law has been declared by Gov. Tanner, militia sent to Pana, and an attempt is being made to disarm both parties. Gov. Tanner has issued a statement explaining and defending his course of action in regard to the disturbances at Pana and Virden. In one case he did not attempt to prevent the importation of negro miners; in the other he did. The distinction between the two cases is that at Virden armed guards were brought with the negroes because it was known that the miners would resist. The employment of armed guards was, in Gov. Tanner's view, criminal, and made the whole proceeding criminal. He admits that the mere act of importing laborers, as at Pana, is not illegal. If so, it was his duty as governor to protect the company in the exercise of this right. If he had done so, there would have been no occasion for the employment of armed guards. He was asked to send troops to preserve the peace, but refused on the ground that the operators merely wanted to have the aid of the state in accomplishing their own designs, viz., the landing of the negro miners within the stockade. If, as he admits, they had a legal right to do this, it would appear that they had a right to expect the governor to preserve the peace so that they could do it without interference. Taking it all together, the conviction is forced upon us that the more Gov. Tanner says in defense of his course, the less defensible does that course appear.

Spain's Peace Commissioners at Paris, acting under instructions from Madrid, have yielded to the American demands, and cede the Philippine Archipelago, including Sulus and Visayas, to the United States, the latter agreeing to pay $20,000,000 in consideration of moneys expended by Spain for the improvement of these islands. It is reported that Spain agrees to sign the treaty, embodying this cession of territory, under protest. The secretaries of the two commissions have been instructed to put these agreements into treaty form, and this document is to be presented at a joint meeting of the commission during the present week. Except the formality of signing this treaty, which is also to embody an agreement concerning religious freedom in the Caroline Islands and certain commercial relations with Spain, this may be said to close the diplomatic part of our contest with Spain. The result is not pleasing to the statesmen, politicians and crowned heads of Continental Europe. They do not like to see this great Western Republic gaining a foothold in the East and becoming a factor, and, as they believe, a disturbing factor, in what is called the "Eastern question." While the Spanish press complains at the hard conditions exacted by the United States, there is no doubt but that it is the best possible solution of the problem, even from the Spanish point of view. The Daily Chronicle, of London, expresses the exact situation when it says: "So far as the decision to annex the Philippines goes, the United States, after some hesitation, has chosen the narrow path of duty, which always attracts the brave mind." This, we take it, expresses the true attitude of the United States to the whole question of annexation.

George Gould, it is said, has given $10,000 for the erection of a Y. M. C. A. Building at Texarkana, Ark. The T. P. and I. M. Railroads have given the lot and the building will be erected at once. All railroad men are to share the benefits of this refuge under the Y. M. C. A. management.

Owing to the hatred of the natives of the Philippine Islands toward the Roman Catholic Church Archbishop Kain is said to favor the annexing of those islands to the United States. He is, however, opposed to this movement on other grounds.

The Second Presbyterian Church of this city is almost ready to let the contract for its new $100,000 building, as $97,000 is already in hand and the remainder will be raised shortly. The building will be completed before the fall of 1899.

OPEN PARLIAMENT ON OUR NATIONAL CONVENTION.

We give this week another installment of our Open Parliament on our National Conventions, more particularly on our forthcoming Jubilee Convention. There will probably be more to follow. Several very good and practical suggestions have been received, which should, and no doubt will, receive the attention of the makers of the program for our next convention. It might be well to summarize some of the more important suggestions which have been made in this symposium.

1. The greater simplification and unification of our missionary methods and organizations, which has been suggested, is worthy of consideration. This is in the interest of economy in time and of distribution of interest in all departments of mission work. There has already been some progress made in that direction, and this tendency should be continued as far as it is found practicable. We have always believed, since both the home and foreign missionary work have been fully accepted by the brotherhood as alike necessary and important, that our entire missionary work could be carried forward under one organization, with the necessary number of boards.

2. The importance of having a larger number of business men in our conventions, and participating in their proceedings, will be universally recognized. It is a question of how best to secure this result. One way doubtless is to give them more work to do in the convention. The ministers also can do much to help bring about this result by urging the matter upon the business men of their respective congregations.

3. It seems to us that the suggestion for devoting one-half day to conferences on various interests is a wise one, as it would not only give these interests a hearing for such as are specially interested in them, but it would secure a full attendance for the other features of the program. This suggestion, in different forms, has been made by several brethren.

4. It will be noticed by our readers that there are two suggestions that seem to conflict. A number of the brethren urge the importance of more time for thorough deliberation and discussion of important matters, while others suggest that less time be spent on routine matters and more time allotted for short inspirational addresses. But, after all, there is no real conflict between these two suggestions. It is apparent that we do need more time for the discussion of such matters as are of importance, and concerning which the convention needs information to enable it to act intelligently. There are a great many other matters which are necessarily routine in their character, and may be disposed of very briefly. If committee reports are made in such a way as to facilitate action, there can be such a distribution of time as will permit a more thorough discussion of the matters needing discussion. And then more addresses can be secured by having shorter addresses, and we believe this change would meet with general approval. A wise chairman can do much to direct the convention in the proper course by having the program in mind, and hastening where haste can be safely made, and calling for discussion when discussion seems to be needed.

5. The suggestion that there should be a committee on credentials, to examine more carefully into the question as to who are entitled to vote than has been the custom heretofore, is eminently wise, if our convention is to be a deliberative body. This need not interfere with the presence of large numbers who are not delegates or entitled to a vote, but it will limit the voting of those who are entitled to this privilege, and will emphasize it as a privilege, and tend to increase the number of those who are authorized to vote. That these delegates should sit together in a body, toward the front as far as practicable, is also desirable.

6. No more important suggestion has been made, in our judgment, than that more time and attention should be given to the devotional feature of our conventions. If it be necessary to meet an hour earlier to secure this time, and devote the hour sometimes given to Bible lectures to purely devotional service, with such spiritual instruction intermingling as would feed the fires of devotion, many earnest souls could no doubt be gathered even at so early an hour as that. We cannot too much emphasize the truth stated by one of our writers in this Open Parliament that "in expecting and attempting great things we must depend upon the closest and fullest communion possible with the great, gracious and wonder-working God of missfons." This is a most essential condition of the success of our Jubilee and all other National Conventions, as it is, indeed, of all work for God. Let this be a year of unusual prayerfulness and Bible-reading and consecration to God, and to the great work he has committed to us, and we shall undoubtedly have a convention of unusual power and of most gratifying results.

A DIVINE MISSION—WHAT?

IV.—CATHOLICITY.

The manifest necessity for a closer and more scriptural union among Christian people naturally led the fathers of this Reformation to consider the problem of how this union could be brought about. Their task was twofold: they had not only to convince the religious world of the evils of a divided Church and the necessity of union and co-operation, but also to point out a practicable remedy for the evils of division, or in other words, a scriptural basis of unity. The latter has proved to be the more difficult task.

It was clear enough, in the light of history, that these denominational divisions had their origin in an undue emphasis upon speculative beliefs about which good people differ, making these differences of opinion tests of fellowship; that is to say, the divisions arose, not so much about what was clearly revealed or clearly taught in the sacred Scriptures as on inferential reasoning and deductions. It was seen, too, that these differences did not, in most cases, relate to matters of vital importance, but were about matters concerning which people may differ and still be Christians. It was equally clear that if these divisions originated in an excessive emphasis of doctrinal opinions that were not vital, the remedy would likely be a change of emphasis, dropping into the background all unauthorized tests of fellowship, and bringing up into clear light the great fundamentals of Christian faith and duty.

It is easy to see how this way of viewing the subject naturally led to the thought of restoration as a central feature in the program of religious reform. Familiarity with the teaching of Christ and his apostles enabled these early reformers to see that the original Church was united, not upon its opinions, for they differed in opinions, not upon methods of organization, for while these all were simple there is evidence of different types of organization, but that they were one in their acknowledgment of Christ as Savior and Lord and in their unquestioning submission to His authority in all that He had commanded. They saw, therefore, that the catholicity of the New Testament Church must be restored as a condition of the restoration of its unity.

They had but to ask what was the original confession of faith, to find the answer clear and emphatic in the teaching of Christ and his apostles, namely, the confession of Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah, the Son of God. If they asked again what further condition of fellowship than this faith in Christ was required, they found the answer equally clear and emphatic—the surrender of the believer to Christ in baptism and the manifestation of the life of Christ after his acceptance of Him by confession with the mouth and by baptism. All this is very clear in the Acts of the Apostles as well as in the Epistles. In Paul's letter to the Ephesians we read that "there is one body, one Spirit, one hope of our calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in all."

There were the elements of catholicity in the primitive Church. This was the "unity of the Spirit"—the only union that is either practicable or desirable. It is the only union practicable, because it is evident that there never can be unity among Christians on the basis of any of the creeds of Christendom. No one, perhaps, has ever been so Utopian as to hope for the unity of Christendom on the basis of any human creed that was ever formulated. It is undesirable because, even if it could be effected it would put a limit to religious progress, curtail Christian liberty and result in religious despotism. When one body of men is allowed to fix and define the limits of religious thought and faith for the rest of mankind, those who accept such limitations surrender the liberty guaranteed to them in the gospel of Christ, and become followers of men rather than of the Lord Jesus.

The reader will see, then, that there was no course left open for these reformers, if they were to prosecute their plea for Christian unity, but to repudiate the authority of all human creeds, and urge the acceptance of the original creed confessed by Simon Peter and others as the essential faith of the gospel, and submission to Christ as the only test of Christian character. This was not saying that everything that these creeds contained was erroneous; it was simply saying that as bases of union and communion they were unauthorized and had become insuperable obstacles to the unity of the body of Christ. It is gratifying to know that this position, which then seemed so radical and revolutionary, has come into wide acceptance, so that even where these creeds exist they no longer exercise the dominion over the faith and consciences of men which they once did.

Another feature of catholicity in the early Church was the very names worn by the followers of Christ. They were designated as disciples of Christ, as Christians, as brethren, as saints, and their local congregations as churches simply, or Churches of God, or Churches of Christ. A tendency to follow human leadership and take on party names early manifested itself in the Corinthian church, but it was promptly and severely rebuked by the apostle Paul, who reminded them that such divisions come of the flesh, and that there is only one foundation, other than which no man can lay, even Jesus Christ. Who can doubt that the same apostle, animated by the same spirit, writing to the Churches to-day, would rebuke our party names, our party spirit, our party divisions and our party creeds? It was felt by the leaders in this Reformation that if they were to plead for unity among the followers of Christ they must place themselves upon a basis as broad and catholic as the New Testament itself, and that they must give up, not only their human creeds, which they had formerly acknowledged, but their party names also, and be willing to be designated as the original followers of Christ were designated in order that their name might furnish no obstacle in the way of unity.

Of course, this generous and magnanimous course in surrendering their denominational names in order to put themselves in a fraternal attitude toward all other Christians has been either ignorantly or purposely misconstrued as a claim for the exclusive right to the name Christian or Disciple of Christ. But this was to be expected. All who care to know the truth by this time, however, understand that there is nothing exclusive in the acceptance of these names, but that on the contrary, our hope and our prayer is that the time may soon come when all who revere the name of Christ will be content to wear his name, to be known as his disciples and to have his will as their only law of life.

The acceptance of the two ordinances, baptism and the Lord's Supper, in their original form and place was held to be necessary in order to a full restoration of New Testament catholicity. There was no controversy about these ordinances in their original form; the discussions have arisen about changes which have been made in them. But if we are to have union it must be on a basis which all acknowledge to be scriptural. This course, especially as regards baptism, has been a stumblingblock in the way of many who have otherwise been charmed by the manifest conformity to scriptural teaching of our position and plea for unity. We cannot enter into the discussion of it here and now further than to say that if the baptism commanded by Christ, submitted to by him and practiced by his apostles was the burial of a believer in water as an expressive symbol of Christ's burial and resurrection, and of the believer's death to sin and resurrection to newness of lite—and this is generally admitted by independent, unbiased biblical scholars—then we cannot feel that it is narrow or uncharitable to insist upon it as a part and feature of the New Testament Christianity, which we are seeking to restore as the basis of the united Church. That thousands of earnest, consecrated men and women, who love Christ and reflect his spirit, see this subject in a different light is freely admitted; but if a dispensation of truth has been committed to us we do not see how that can modify our course further than to make us feel charitable and fraternal to those who differ from us, while we seek to be loyal to our purpose in restoring the catholicity of the New Testament Church, in order to the restoration of its unity.

MORAL GROWTH A REASON FOR NATIONAL GRATITUDE.

There are many, no doubt, who believe in the Amorite ascendency in this country, and that the nation is on the down grade morally. Perils there are, backsets there have been, and evils exist in threatening forces, but God is not a failure, and the devil is not a success, and Israel must possess the land. No person who has lived out of the United States during the last thirty-five years can form any adequate conception of the tremendous demoralization that followed in the wake of our great Civil War. The whole tone and character of our civilization was lowered by this fratricidal strife, the spirit of lawlessness and a reckless disregard of the value and sanctity of human life filled the country with violence and bloodshed, and to-day we are hardly within fifty years of the end of the terrible consequences of that gigantic struggle and the national crime that precipitated it. Lawlessness, worldliness and other effects of ruptured moral relations could not be kept out of the churches any more than they could be kept out of the families that compose the nation. Evil forces generated a pandemonium let loose thirty years ago, have got the start of us and their cumulative momentum will be hard to turn, but it may be said for the general encouragement, so far as both church and state are concerned, that signs of reaction are beginning to appear.

Some people think that democracy and Christianity are doomed and that the country is going to the dimnition bowwows, but the facts do not report on their side of the question. The fallacy of the whole pessimistic argument lies in the shortness of the periods that lie between its points of comparison. Compare long periods if you want to see how much the world has improved. Compare, if you please, the close of the eighteenth with the close of the nineteenth century in the United States, and behold the difference. Paine's Age of Reason was finally given to the public in the year 1795. It was the most popular book of the time. James Lane Allen in his "Choir Invisible" represents a batch of the volumes of this work as selling like hot cakes on the streets of Lexington, Ky., a hundred years ago. When Timothy Dwight took the presidency of Yale College, it is said that there were only four professing Christians in the whole college and two Thomes Paine Societies; and so popular was French infidelity that a number of leading members of the senior class dropped their own names and took as their own those of leading French infidels. There are not that many fools to-day in all the colleges of Christendom. Moreover, there is not at this hour in the whole United States but one infidel of the Tom Paine school with enough brains to be known outside of the town in which he lives. The vulgar, irreverent, blasphemous, scurillous type of infidelity of Tom Paine and Bob Ingersoll is repudiated by infidels who make any pretensions to decency. There is less skepticism in the country than was ever known before.

In the beginning of the present century intemperance was common, the tippling habit was universal, and prohibition sentiment had never been heard of. Lyman Beecher says in his autobiography that the sideboard of a preacher, in his day, with its decanters, pitchers of water, tumblers, sugarbowl, nutmeg and spoons looked and smelled like the bar of a grogshop. In describing an ordination service he adds: "None of the Consociation were drunk; but that there was not, at times, a considerable amount of exhileretion, I cannot affirm." The traveling preacher carried it in one end of his saddlebags to balance the New Testament in the other end, and the potent, grave and reverent seniors of the official board of the church kept a barrel in the cellar. We are so far away from that time in Christian manners and morals that a preacher is scarcely allowed to smoke, and he has not the ghost of a chance for a decent pulpit if he is even suspected of unsoundness on the absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic. Less than a hundred years ago slavery was spreading its sable wings over half the continent and the church, both North and South, was silent on "the sum of all villainies." At the beginning of the century there wasn't a Protestant missionary society in the world, and the church was opposed to the evangelization of the heathen lands. There were no missionary organizations, home or foreign; and when first the attempt was made to organize a missionary society the preachers of that day protested against it as an irreverent attempt to interfere with the decrees of the Almighty. To-day the missionary organizations of Christendom are numbered by hundreds and their converts in heathen lands by millions, and no church is orthodox that neglects the first part of the Great Commission. One hundred years after Pentecost there was one Christian to every 150 of the world's population; to-day there are two to every five. It is a fact for congratulation and thankfulness that the religion of Jesus Christ is growing more rapidly in the United States than in any other country. The last census shows that the leading denominations increased their communicants in the last decade at the rate of 42 per cent., while the growth of the population was less than 25 per cent. It is claimed that 33 per cent. of our population are communicants of churches and that most of the other 67 per cent. are in some way connected or associated with the churches. It is estimated that the religious population of the United States embraces all but about five millions of its inhabitants.

And, thanks to modern investigation and criticism, which have taught us more about Jesus Christ and the Bible than we ever knew before, and to the great Endeavor movement and the increased missionary enthusiasm of the churches, the Christian world has begun to manifest symptoms of advance in spiritual power. The progress of interdenominational comity and courtesy and unity is even more remarkable than the advance in numerical expansion. Polemic religion is played out. Controversial Christianity is a back number except in the backwoods. Ascerbity and bitterness of the sectarian spirit is giving way to the sweetness and light of the gospel of the cross. We are learning to displace the metaphysics of the creeds with the ethics of the Sermon on the Mount. Fighting stress is now laid, not on the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee, but on the difference between a life of sin and a life of righteousness. We are learning the lesson that Christianity is a law, a life, a spirit and not shallow theories about trifles. Christianity is more Christian than it used to be, and for this reason the rising sun and the flowing tide are with us. Our convictions are deeper, our ideals are higher, our spirit is better, our faith is stronger, the united kingdom of God is at hand. I may be reminded that we have plenty of faults and sins and that gigantic evils threaten the future of our nation. Oh yes, but I am talking about the mercies that God Almighty has bestowed on this country, and I must remind you that evils and mercies do not belong to the same category. J. J. H.

"THOSE WOMEN WHICH LABORED WITH ME."

Paul recognized the unity of the Lord's work. Those who had helped in his work were to be helped in theirs, for both he and they were workers together with the great Master of them all.

There has been too little of this spirit of reciprocity among the Disciples of Christ. One of the most serious hindrances to our missionary work has been a lack of unity in the means of administration. We have kept with almost scrupulous care to the lines dividing "foreign work," "home work" and "state work," and have distinguished almost as closely between the "Brethren's Boards" and the "Woman's Board," as if the sexes had different gospels.

One of the most encouraging latter-day signs is the tendency toward unification. The American Society is uniting the various State Boards in a closer co-operation than they have ever known before. Our secretaries have come to an understanding with regard to the times for special offerings, and for the presentation of their respective departments of work. This adjustment was much needed, and promises great good. Our churches need to be instructed concerning all of the enterprises of the brotherhood. They need to become familiar with the names of our missionaries, and to learn something concerning their work. Not only is the world the field of the church as a whole; the world should be the field of each local church and of every disciple of Christ. The work is one, and should be recognized as such.

The first Sunday in December will be observed as C. W. B. M. Day. Heretofore our women have usually held two public meetings in the course of the year—one on C. W. B. M. Day, in July, and one on Educational Day, in December. But the calendar has its limitations, and the Sundays of the year do not multiply with the multiplication of our missionary interests. It has been thought best, therefore, to celebrate but one day henceforth, and to present all the various departments of the work upon this occasion.

This is the silver anniversary year of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. At our great Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati the sisters will celebrate the completion of twenty-five years of history. They are actively engaged in the effort to raise ninety thousand dollars as their offering for the anniversary year. The inspiration for this offering, and for a large increase in membership, should come through the public services of C. W. B. M. Day.

It seems reasonable to ask for the co-operation of preachers and church officers and workers everywhere, in order that the C. W. B. M. may have the forward impulse of a day thus fittingly observed. Our women are contributors to all of the general work of the church. They have seldom withheld their offerings from any other board in order to give to the enterprise managed exclusively by their own. To a large extent they have been sharers in all of the benevolences of the church.

Moreover, the work they are doing commends itself to our people. Their methods have been tested. About seventy thousand dollars were raised by them last year. This amount represents the contributions of about forty thousand women. This means the enlistment of about forty thousand women as missionary givers, which is a better result than an income twice as large from one-half the number of contributors.

The calls from the field are insistent. The work in India, in Jamaica and in Mexico, as it grows year by year, demands a broader policy and increased support. The needs of the home field are great, and it is especially desired that many weak points and weak states here in the home land may this year be given the slight temporary aid which will prepare them to support themselves and aid others. The unique work undertaken in connection with some of our State Universities this year demands particular attention. In Virginia the generous gift of $10,000 from the Cary heirs makes almost imperative the duty of raising an additional sum from other sources within the state. The work of gathering together a modest endowment for the work at Ann Arbor has been undertaken, and should be carried to completion within the present missionary year. The gift of $1,000 from Mrs. A. M. Atkinson to the English Bible Chair Endowment Fund will, no doubt, cause others to make similar gifts.

Shall we not give encouragement to the work and the workers, and help these women who have labored with us in the gospel of God's dear Son?

Hour of Prayer.

SOUL-WINNERS.

(Mid-week Prayer-meeting topic, Dec. 7th, 1898.)

The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life;
And he that is wise winneth souls.
—Prov. 11:30.

This is one of those sayings in which are crystallized the wisdom and experience of a nation which had been under the tuition of God for many centuries. The two lines of sentences quoted above have a very close connection, as will appear, being really two ways of stating the the same truth—a truth which commends itself to the ripest thought, the highest wisdom and the most fruitful experience of the present age.

"The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life." This tree of life is doubtless suggested by the tree of life which grew "in the midst of the garden" of Eden, of whose fruit if one partake, he shall "live forever." The thought is that the righteous man is not only blessed in himself, in that he receives the reward of his righteousness, but he becomes also a "tree of life" for others. It is another way of stating the truth that "no man liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself."

There are influences going out from our lives continually that tell on those about us either for good or for evil. There is no view of human life that so accentuates its responsibility as to the effect of our personal influence on others. We can conceive how one might become so blinded to his own personal interests and so fascinated by the power of sin that he might decide to pursue it to the bitter end and take the consequences; but it is an awful state of depravity that makes one oblivious to the welfare of others whom he is dragging down with himself to the same awful destiny.

On the other hand, it is a most pleasing and inspiring thought, and a great incentive to righteousness, that if our lives are right with God there is constantly radiating out from us a subtle, unconscious influence that is molding the character of others and helping them to decide for the right, and thus to become partakers with us of the divine life. Every man, it may be said, is a tree of some kind. He may be a upas tree, whose very shadow produces disease and death, or he may be a "tree of life," whose fruit, whose leaves and whose welcome shade are for the healing of others about him. Which will you be?

"And he that is wise winneth souls." The connection between this statement and the one upon which we have commented, is now seen to be very close. The thought of this last is not, as we understand it, that the wise man sees that winning souls has a great reward, and he therefore sets about the work of winning souls in order that he may receive this reward; but, just as the "fruit of the righteous" becomes a "tree of life" to others, so the man that is wise, by the very influence of his wisdom, "winneth souls." The wise man in the Scriptures is always the man that reverences God and keeps his commandments, while the foolish man is one that disregards God and his moral obligations to him. The wise man, therefore, is the righteous man who, by the beauty and moral winsomeness of his life, wins souls to righteousness. This is, then, only another way of stating the same truth, after the manner of the Hebrew parallelism.

That sin has its enticements, and that it can weave a magic spell over the souls of those that come under its influence, is everywhere recognized in the Scriptures, and is a matter of common observation. But over against that fact is set the other fact, that righteousness or true wisdom is more fascinating than sin, and when it is embodied in the lives of men where it can shine forth with its heavenly beauty, it can even draw men from the power of Satan to God. After all, righteousness and goodness and purity are positive qualities which, given an equal chance with their opposites, have always triumphed over them, just as light triumphs over darkness and the life of spring over the death of winter.

If this were true under the old dispensation, much more is it true now when the life of Jesus Christ is incarnate in our human lives, and shines forth with its immortal beauty. The Christian may be a tree of life in a fuller and higher degree than it was possible for any one to be, living before the time of Christ. The wise man and the righteous man of to-day is the man who accepts Christ and who is filled by his Spirit. The fruit of such an one is, indeed, a "tree of life" to the hungry and perishing ones of earth. It is also true of every such person that he "winneth souls." He may not preach, he may not even teach in the Sunday-school, but if he be anointed from on high and be filled with the spirit of loving service and tender ministries, the influence of his life and character will be such that men will be won by it to the religion which he professes and to the Master which he serves.

Oh, the responsibility that rests upon us, as Christians, because of the influence that we exert by our very characters, either in winning men to Christ or in becoming stumblingblocks in the way of sinners! May the realization of this responsibility lead each of us to a fresh and honest examination of our inmost motives, as well as of our outward conduct, to the end that we may be trees of life and not trees of death; that we may win men to the service of God and not be obstacles to keep them away from such service.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, and who art also the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, we thank Thee that thou hast so made us and endowed us that we may share in Thy nature, that we may be filled with Thy truth and life, and so be agents of Thy grace in ministering life to the perishing about us. We thank Thee for the influence for good that may go out from our lives because Thou dost dwell in us and Thy influence can go out through us to win others to Thy service. Make us to realize more and more that Thou art speaking to the world through the lives and characters of those who profess Thy name, and may we see to it that the message which we deliver to men by what we are and by what we do, as well as by what we say, shall be such as will win souls from the love and service of sin to the love and service of God, through Christ our Lord. Amen!

A number of very interesting anniversaries are just ahead of us. The first one is the Jubilee Convention or the fiftieth anniversary of the American Christian Missionary Society, for which we are now getting ready. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions also have their "Silver" anniversary in October next. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society has its twenty-fifth or "Silver" anniversary one year from next October, or in the year 1900. But the greatest anniversary in our history, so far, should be the Centennial of our religious movement in 1909. The "Declaration and Address"—our religious Declaration of Independence—was issued in September, 1809, and that is the proper date from which to reckon the age of our Reformatory movement. A whole decade yet lies between us and the completion of 100 years of our history, but matters should begin to shape themselves with a view to that Centennial celebration. Those of us who are spared to witness that event will see and hear things in the way of growth, progress and achievement which would scarcely be credible now. Let us get ready for it.

A correspondent sends us the following lines from Lowell as expressing the same sentiment as that in those which stand at the head of our second page in our declaration of principles:

> "They are slaves who fear to speak
> For the fallen and the weak;
> They are slaves who will not choose
> Hatred, scoffing and abuse,
> Rather than in silence shrink
> From the truth they needs must think;
> They are slaves who dare not be
> In the right with two or three."

Our correspondent asks if we cannot say "amen" to these lines also. Indeed we can! There is not a fibre in our being that does not respond to the noble sentiment of these lines. We must regard him as a poor type of a Christian who does not indorse them, for Christ is the highest and noblest manifestation of the principle expressed in them. What this world needs, yea, what the church itself needs, is more of the moral heroism of Jesus of Nazareth, the Christ of God.

In the report of a sermon by J. M. Rudy, at Cedar Rapids, Ia., on "How Shall We Help Young Men?" as given in a local paper, occurs the following statement, which seems to us to cut down to the very core of the problem:

> "Be the cause what it may, the average young man does not look upon 'being a man' as one and the same thing as 'being a Christian man.' The Christian is thought to be the abnormal, while the non-Christian is thought to be the normal man. The young man has come to feel that to be a man of real liberty and independence, he must not be found making a religious profession."

This is no doubt the feeling and the thought of the irreligious young men of our time. They have not been made to see that being a man, in the full and true meaning of the word, and being a Christian man is the same thing. In other words, they have never apprehended the true manliness of Christ and of Christianity. They have the pernicious idea, as false as it is pernicious, that it is manly to be non-Christian, to be skeptical, to reject the claims of God upon them and the demands of the moral law! We need a kind of preaching and teaching that will show to the world that Christianity simply means the highest type of manhood and womanhood, and that to reject Christ and his conception of life and duty is to doom one's self to everlasting failure, and that, besides being wicked, it is the blindest stupidity to live and struggle for the lower and perishable things of life, when the higher and imperishable are within our reach. The Bible is a very plain-spoken book, and it calls men "fools" who turn away from the Divine ideal to follow the leadings of their own depraved appetites and passions.

Swinging to a strap in an uncomfortably crowded street-car going home last evening—a condition of things imposed on us continually by the greed of street-car corporations and the indifference of the people to their own rights—the thought came to us continually, and it was the only comfort in the situation, that, at any rate, we were going home. True, the way of going had its discomforts, but in spite of this it was better to be going home than to be going in the opposite direction, in which there was plenty of room in the vacant cars. It occurred to us that the principle was capable of a broader application. Suppose our lot in life is a hard one, involving burdens to be borne, opposition to be overcome, poverty to be endured; at any rate the Christian may say: "I am going home!" He can often see how, by disregarding honor and truth and moral obligation, he might have an easier time, as it seems to him; but then that course would take him in the opposite direction from where he wishes to ultimately land. So, if he be wise, he decides that it is better to endure the pangs of poverty, and even persecution in behalf of the right, since that course leads homeward, where await him a welcome, rest and peace. One who had special opportunities for knowing both the afflictions of the present life and the joys of the life eternal, weighing the whole matter, said: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to us-ward."

ARCHBISHOP PURCELL ON ALEXANDER CAMPBELL AND HIS WORK.

An Interview with the Catholic Prelate.

It is now some thirteen or fourteen years since I visited the city of Cincinnati in the pursuit of my calling. During a lengthened residence there, I had occasion one day to call upon John B. Purcell, the Archbishop of the Roman Catholic Church and by far the greatest man of which that church could boast in all America: a church which for many centuries towered above all other human institutions and still flourishes in undiminished grandeur in every portion of the globe. So old is it and so powerful that one is almost tempted to believe that it had indeed been planted by the hand of the Almighty and watered by the blood of its saints and martyrs.

I was then engaged in an occupation of little consequence and no emolument, but well suited to the mediocrity of my talents and my aspirations—an occupation that led me to call upon many of the highly literary and accomplished classes of men throughout the country. I had always been accustomed to the society of the best and most cultivated men, and felt that I might justly hold up my head in any assemblage into which I might be thrown. But as I approached this extraordinary man and mounted the steps of the palace, a strange and unaccountable feeling of timidity overcame me and led me to feel nervous and anxious about the kind of reception that would be accorded me by one who had reached so lofty a position in his grand old church and who had filled this position with unusual grace and dignity and honor.

Little did I dream of the kindness and courtesy with which I was to be met when ushered into the presence of this worthy prelate and begged to make myself welcome and entirely at home. Thus was I brought face to face with one of the most remarkable characters of the age—one high in position and powerful in intellect, and yet with manners as plain and simple and unaffected as those of the dear old man whom Sterne's magic pencil has graven on every heart and given a lodgement in every bosom. I entered the presence of this man a perfect stranger, without any letters of introduction, without any description of credentials whatever, dressed in the ordinary costume of a business man, or, to speak more properly, in a garb that reminded one of a combination of the gentleman, the trader and the backwoodsman. What reception was to be accorded to a person who entered a grand residence under all these circumstances and with all these drawbacks attaching to him? Ah! well I knew that here would come the test of the true gentleman.

In an instant I knew my man. I had taken the gauge and dimensions of his ong head and of his big and manly heart. Upon the transaction of the business that had led me to make the call, we entered into a general conversation.

Observing a fine marble bust in his parlor, I asked whom it represented and if it had been executed in Italy. I then turned the conversation towards Greece and the Fine Arts and the age of Pericles. Here I was vastly more at home than His Grace, for this had been the talent of my family for generations and my own particular love and passion. Pretty soon we dropped down to the Pontificate of Leo the Xth, who was such a glorious patron of learning and the fine arts in the early days of Martin Luther and the Reformation. He seemed to gain new life and new energy when I commented largely on the munificent manner in which the Popes had befriended such men as Raphael and Michael Angelo, and had filled all the great galleries of Europe with the finest statuary and the most glorious paintings.

After the conversation had run on in this manner for sometime, the idea occurred to me to talk to His Grace about Mr. Campbell. So I boldly broached the subject and said: "Bishop, I am aware that you were once engaged in a debate with the greatest reformer of the nineteenth century, and one of the greatest men of any age."

"Oh!" said he, "you allude to Mr. Campbell, of course."

I said, "Yes, he is the man."

"Now," I went on, "I have, Bishop, many friends in Mr. Campbell's church who are persons of sterling worth and noble character, who would like very much to hear your opinion of that gentleman, of his work and his place in the history of the Christian Church and amongst the intellectual giants of the Protestant Reformation."

"Certainly," he responded, "I will glady talk with you about my worthy friend, Mr. Campbell. From the very first day of our acquaintance to the day of his death, I always entertained the kindliest feelings toward that gentleman. Oh! he was a most lovable character, indeed, and treated me in every way and on all occasions like a brother." Here the good man's eyes sparkled as he added:

"Was he not my brother in the Lord? Was he not like me a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus? Did he not believe in the resurrection of the dead and of the life beyond the grave where we shall all meet to part no more? Did he not kneel before the same cross in spirit and regard with reverence the Mother of Jesus and that poor woman who bathed his feet with her tears and wiped them with the hairs of her head, and of those other sweet and pious women who followed the great Master in his journeyings over the classic hills of Judea and knelt beside his body when taken down from the cross and placed in his narrow tomb?"

"It is true, we differed in some matters—for instance, on church government, prayers for the departed, confessions of sin to the priest, the celibacy of the clergy—what of that? These were all minor matters. In the essentials of Christianity we entirely agreed.

"In Mr. Campbell's church the form of worship is very simple, as in the days of the apostles. He hoped always to keep it so. Here is where he was mistaken. It cannot be kept so. As the church becomes great in numbers, and rich and strong, it will lose its original simplicity. This is inevitable. We begin to see the change already in some of the richer congregations in the cities. Are not the advanced congregations already discarding congregational singing, and procuring fine organs and hired choirs? Are they not placing soft and luxurious cushions in their seats, and placing flowers in the pulpits and in the altars? Has not fine stained glass found its way into the lofty windows of their truly Gothic cathedrals? Surely, all these things have taken place, and very shortly they'll have representations of the apostles and the saints in these same windows, and fine frescoed ceilings, with scenes from sacred Scriptures represented thereon, as we have in the Sistine Chapel at Rome.

"I do not think that the Christian Church will introduce into their worship our incense-throwing, or our scarlet robes, or many other things that are peculiar to the Church of Rome. We have been many centuries in introducing all these forms into our worship. The church of Mr. Campbell is not one hundred years old. It is yet in its infancy, and a very lively brat it is, too! What forms it will adopt in its manner of worship in the future, what changes it will inaugurate in the next five hundred years, no one can tell. As I before intimated, the magnificent ritual of the Church of Rome has been the creation of ages and ages, until now it is as perfect, as imposing, and as impressive as it can possibly be made.

"Now, in the Jewish Church the same struggle is going on between the Reform Jews and the Orthodox. One represents the time of Moses and Joshua, the other modern civilization, science and progress. There is an irreconcilable conflict between these two wings of Judaism. Which will dominate? Of course, the more advanced. It is a case of the survival of the fittest and the wisest. So in the Christian Church. One section is opposed to choirs, fine music, splendid churches. The other just the reverse. One I call the backwoods church, the other the church of progress and of high moral and æsthetic culture. Now, I contend that the church is drifting, drifting away from the apostolic simplicity of which its founder dreamed, and has joined in the race which all Protestant churches are making toward something grander and more majestic.

"Do not imagine that I am saying that the church is losing any of its distinctive features—any of its fundamental doctrines. It has merely added something to them to make them more elegant and more attractive."

Said I, "Bishop, what do you think of the debate between Campbell and Rice?"

"Oh, as to that," said he, "I have never read the debate. It was very lengthy, you might say tedious. It ran through seventeen consecutive days, and each party claimed the victory, of course. One of the grand features of the debate was the presence of Henry Clay as a moderator. We Catholics felt no interest in the points at issue between these gentlemen. Take baptism, for instance, a subject on which both churches were very much exercised. We Romanists believe in the great, essential, absolute importance of the holy rite of baptism. In our church it is a sacrament like marriage. Beyond this we don't go one step. We care nothing about the style of baptism or the manner of administering it. We sprinkle, we pour, we immerse. We do precisely what the person to be baptized insists on. We generally sprinkle because it is most convenient.

"Pending the long debate between these two really great men my prayers were daily lifted up for Mr. Campbell. In his discussions with our clergy he had always been kind, affable, courteous; Rice quite the reverse. One was a gentleman; as to the other, what shall I say of him?"

"Bishop, how about your debate with Campbell?"

"Well, that only lasted a few days. Everything was conducted in decency and order, as St. Paul would say. Campbell was decidedly the very fairest man in debate I ever saw, as fair as you can possibly conceive. He never fought for victory, like Dr. Johnson. He seemed to be always fighting for the truth, or what he believed to be the truth. In this he differed from the other men. He never misrepresented his case nor that of his opponent; never tried to hide a weak point; never quibbled. He would have made a very poor lawyer, in the ordinary understanding of the term lawyer. Like his great friend, Henry Clay, he excelled in the clear statement of the case at issue. No dodging with him. He came right out fairly and squarely. He was what used to be called, in good old times, 'flat-footed.' Rather than force a victory by underhand or ignoble means, he preferred to encounter defeat. But whenever he fell, he fell like the Cavalier Bayard, with honor and a clear conscience.

"In our debate not a particle of ill-feeling or bitterness was mixed up. After the discussions were over we would meet and be just as friendly as if we both belonged to one and the same church. Oh, how I should like to have met this dear son of God socially and in private life, after age had whitened our locks and mellowed our tempers and dispositions!"

I said, "Bishop, what think you of his work?"

"Well," he said, "we Catholics do not think much of a church until it has existed fully a century. It must have passed its hundredth annual milestone. Hardly has this church seen its seventy-fifth birthday. But it is a lusty youth, and has certainly distanced all its rivals in the race for popular favor. Not even the Methodists, with their efficient itineracy and their sensational methods of worship, can hold their own with the Christian Church in the fierce struggle for proselytes and for supremacy. I see no signs of weakness, of decay, of decrepitude in this organization. Quite the contrary. It appears to be gathering new hope and courage and strength with each successive decade. Should this progress continue for the next quarter of a century, who will say what gigantic proportions it will assume? It has already passed away beyond the wildest dreams and hopes and expectations of its founder.

"Now as for Mr. Campbell's standing in future ages, I think it is quite within the bounds of truth to say that not ecclesiastical history alone, but profane history, will place him on the same pedestal with Luther and Calvin and Wesley, the peer of either of them. Had he lived in the early ages of Christendom and accomplished the wonderful amount of good with which he is justly credited he would after death have been sanctified and canonized and 'enrolled in the capitol' along with St. Chrysostom and St. Jerome as a father in the church, his name forever embalmed in its annals as a worthy successor of St. Peter and St. Paul. But alas! he missed these high honors by being born too late in the history of the world and in a prosaic age when money and power are more valued than piety and goodness and greatness."

"Bishop, what do you think of Calvin and his treatment of Servetus?"

"Oh! that was horrid—most horrid indeed. To allow his friends and tools in Switzerland to burn this man at the stake—this brother Reformer who had stood up so boldly against the mighty powers of Rome in defence of Protestants and Protestantism. Campbell could not possibly have done such a thing. It was not in his nature. No, not a single drop of cruel blood coursed through his veins.

"Still, no one can deny John Calvin's wonderful powers, his great supremacy as thinker, writer, reformer and metaphysician. A few of his works I have read with great pleasure and profit. He was the first of that long line of bold, learned divines who have immortalized the name of Presbyterianism and made it synonymous with talent and refinement. Numbers of these men have cut a large figure in the history of the world and distinguished themselves by their bold and resolute championship of human rights and of religious liberty.

"I believe Mr. Campbell got his fine education amongst the Presbyterians. He could not possibly have been trained in a better school for the great work that he had marked out for himself in early life. You know that his father, Thomas Campbell, was a Scotchman, and a very great Scotchman at that, and I believe that Alexander himself was born in that wonderful land and inherited the bold and rugged and resolute character that has always characterized the people of that charming country.*

"In early life he was a Baptist. But he was too bold and original a thinker to be hampered by Baptist rules and creeds and modes of thought. He was not born to travel in a beaten path. Nature never created him to follow any man. He was designed for a leader. He must blaze his own way through the forests of ecclesiastical traditions and heresies and contradictions, and right boldly and fearlessly and perseveringly he did, and, Io triumphe. See the result—the creation of the 'Christian Church.' "

I said, "Bishop, do you not think it strange that Mr. Campbell's followers should be offended when called 'Campbellites'?"

At this he laughed very heartily and continued: "This was the very weakest and most foolish thing his people ever committed. Ashamed to be called 'Campbellites!' Fretted at being associated with the name of their noble founder! Strange! strange indeed! Do not the Germans call themselves Lutherans? Do not the accomplished Presbyterians glory in the name of Calvinist? Do not the Methodists shout at the name of their founder and sing themselves hoarse in loud hosannahs to the lasting glory of John Wesley? I do not know how others feel, but as for me, if I were a member of this persuasion, I should do myself the honor of calling myself a 'Campbellite,' and I should be proud of the name."

"Bishop, how did Mr. Campbell get such a start and succeed in founding so large, so respectable and so influential a church?"

"Oh! that is very easily accounted for. He was a born polemic—a theological debater or gladiator. He was, besides, very highly educated and thoroughly equipped for his work, well grounded in the general principles of theology. The Bible he knew by heart, and from a very diligent study and application of his powers had made himself thoroughly acquainted with the doctrines of all the leading churches of the country. Then he knew his power. He was fully conscious of his herculean strength. Hence he was always ready and anxious for a debate. It was his habit occasionally to pass through the southern portions of Ohio and Indiana and Illinois and through the fine bluegrass region of Kentucky and the rich farming sections of Missouri on both sides of the Missouri River where the farmers are and always have been exceedingly intelligent and rich and hospitable. Perhaps there is not a finer set of people on the face of the globe. These interesting pilgrimages began somewhere about 1824 or perhaps a little before that era and lasted perhaps for a quarter of a century with some intervals. His discourses attracted vast crowds of people who came from distant points and who listened to every word that fell from his lips and felt in their heart of hearts all the burning zeal of the devoted followers of Peter the Hermit. At that time the religious propensities of the people were very strong and there were few churches in the country and no places of amusement. People would ride fifty miles on horseback to attend a large baptizing, a camp meeting or a religious debate. Mr. Campbell was regarded as a kind of religious Goliath, and was met at every cross-roads and at every toll-gate by well-intentioned, half-informed preachers of the different denominations and challenged to produce his credentials, to enter into a discussion in defence of his original and peculiar views. Our hero was nothing loth to do so. Such opportunities were precisely what he desired. A vast audience would gather together to hear what to them was vastly more attractive than a great battle to the death between two celebrated gladiators.

"These debates were brief and decisive. Campbell floored his opponents in a few moments. Their arguments fell to pieces as if they had no more strength than a potter's vessel. So quickly was this all accomplished that they could hardly realize their discomfiture. The people saw all this and it made Campbell thousands of proselytes; and their children and their children's children have to this day stuck to this church like grim death, and there they'll stick for generations to come. For certainly the members of the Christian Church are the most zealous and stubborn in their Prostestantism of all classes of Protestants.

"In thinking of the persistent and multifarious attacks upon Mr. Campbell by his puny adversaries, I was always strikingly reminded of the lines of the great dramatist in the play of Julius Cæsar:

'Why, man, he doth bestride
The world like a Colossus,
And we petty men
Creep between his huge legs
And peep about
To find ourselves dishonorable graves.'

"Again," said the Bishop, "of all the men that Campbell encountered in his long career Rice was by many odds the best equipped. In this discussion Campbell seemed to have forgotten the wise saying of Solomon: 'Oh, that mine enemy would write a book!' He had written and published largely. Rice had debated often and published almost nothing. Of course he had made a diligent study of all that the great Reformer had ever published and had all of his multifarious writings at his fingers' ends. Here was Rice's advantage. In traveling along the great high road of investigation Campbell had occasionally changed his views, as all wise men must do, and will do. To make his adversary contradict himself—to show where at one epoch he repudiated what he had advocated at another—this was Rice's strongest point.

"As I said before I have never read this remarkable debate."

Before bidding adieu to this venerable prelate, twelve or fifteen young men came into the parlor to pay their respects to this venerable father in Israel and to receive his blessing. They had (I presume) just finished their theological courses and were preparing to leave for the positions to which they had been assigned. Each of them kneeled before the good man and he placed his hands on their heads and muttered a low prayer as he did so; finally dismissing them all with a Dominus vobis cum as they filed out. The scene was very picturesque and affecting.

Then turning to me he begged pardon for the interruption and for his weakness (for tears glistened in his eyes) and with a kind look he bade me farewell. I. C.

Stop Stop! Stop!

When I made the announcement concerning preachers and their place of residence for the official list, I forgot two things: 1st. What a good advertising medium the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIRT is; 2nd. How wide its circulation. I meant simply Missouri preachers. But I am getting them from all over the land. I don't want anything outside of Missouri. But still there are ever so many Missouri preachers, some very close by, who are depending on the fact that I know them, yet my memory is very treacherous. If you are left out don't blame the secretary. Yours in his name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

Current Religious Thought

Such teaching as the following, from the New York Observer, will go a long way toward relieving so many minds of that false notion which they have about the dryness, or fearlessness, or uselessness of prayer:

The purpose in prayer is not just to win something for ourselves, but to worship God for himself. Prayer may be communion, companionship, converse; the breathing of a sigh; the upward glancing of an eye; as it were the presence of an unseen hand in the darkness. There are prayers that do not need to be prayed, and that would spoil by being prayed, just as there are songs without words, and there may be love without a token. Such an intimacy of a worshipful divine communion was that enjoyed by the godly Bengel, whose devotions one night before retiring, after long study of God's Word, consisted simyly in his laying his head upon his folded arms and murmuring: "O Lord, thou knowest me. We are on the same old terms."

In all such prayer of a generally worshipful nature there is purpose, though it may not be the particular purpose of a definite petition. Yet, while the devout spirit may make of every place an oratory, may find each changing scene of life to be a Bethel, or House of God, there occurs many occasions in life when very special and urgent petitions must be offered, for the gift of some blessing or for escape from some calamity. Prayer in such a case cannot be too pointed or pressing. Such a petition was that of the dying Jacob, when he besought the Lord for Joseph's sons saying: "Bless the lads!" such an urgency that of Peter when sinking in the waters of Galilee he cried: "Lord save me!" Prayers of this purposeful, pressing nature when offered in faith never go unnoticed or unrewarded. Does God answer prayer? Of course he does. Why not? Turn the tables on your sceptic. Make him prove the impossibility of faith. If God could not answer prayer he would not be God, but the mere slave of his own creation. And if he would not answer prayer he could not be good, since then a hundred explicit promises of his would have to be unsaid, and more than one solemn covenant require to be broken. A God who can make a thousand worlds, or systems of worlds, can certainly answer a few stray prayers, that here and there thread their unwearied way in and out among the kindly stars until they reach his mighty yet merciful throne.

Dr. Gunsaulus, of Chicago, who last summer was near death's door, but now at his post again, is showing a marked tendency toward freedom from religious creeds and denominational restraints in the announcement of certain views of which he says: "With a great cost have I obtained this freedom. I reached these conclusions when I found myself nearest the celestial city, and in sight, as I believed, of the judgment bar of Christ. They bear the very atmosphere of those moments when, after months of enforced calm, I thought myself looking back on the end of my ministry in this world. I cannot forsake them; they are dearer to me than position or life." One of these views he has expressed in an article in a recent number of the Advance, as follows:

I am convinced that the first necessity for my laboring effectively at Plymouth Church, indeed the absolute requirement made by my heart and conscience, is the simplifying and strengthening of the articles of faith upon which the church sets up her banner and invites men and women to unite with her in the common task and hope of making this a better world. I would make our statement less theological and more religious. I would insist upon the orthodoxy which Christ had in mind when he said: "Not every one that sayeth, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Entrance to the church ought to be simply saying: "By thy help, I will," in answer to the command of Jesus: "Follow me." A true sorrow that one has been wrong, an honest turning from wrong to right, desire to be like the Master, trust in him as one who has the right to guide and rule our lives, willingness to take his Spirit and put it into all our life and labor; these are the fundamental and ethical ideals I would emphasize; and I would substitute these for theological statements which, however true they may be, concern themselves with matters as yet unconsidered by many truly Christian men and women, and may not be decisive at the springs of conduct which Christ saw are the fountains of life.

The Observer, St. Louis, gets at the merits of the question as to the origin and basis of the religious dispositions of men in the following paragraph from one of its editorials:

There are indubitable evidences that the faith of the primitive race was in one Supreme Being. That faith has degenerated and lost its pristine force, but the belief in the supernatural has, in all ages of the world, and among all the races of the world, been a moral force, and has stood for righteousness, even among savages. Men have lost sight of true religion, but they have never been able to divorce themselves entirely from God and God's demands upon them. Even the Greek religion, with all its corruptions and impurities, was on the side of moral order and moral law. No religion has been wholly devoid of moral power. However imperfect the religious beliefs of the ancients, the people held to some kind of obligation to their gods. They recognized their dependence on the deities and rendered them service for their aid and protection. The religion of our Lord is in accord with the deepest, most abiding and indestructible convictions of the race. It could not have been born of accident, nor of a mere superstitious fancy. The soul of man did not create its own immortal longings and aspirations. The faith of man is correlated to the Infinite, the Eternal and the Perfect. Surely the highest and purest and noblest sentiments of the heart of man do net rest on a falsehood. The universe demands and explanation, and God is the only possible explanation of the universe. The human mind cannot rest content with the unreal and the false. God is essential to man's needs, and it was he who implanted in the soul the religious instinct. If it be true that man created his own God, it is also true that he worships his own creation. Such is the persistence of the religious sentiment that it will not be satisfied without some object of worship. False religions give unmistakable evidence of the urgent demand of the soul for the supernatural.

The Interior makes the visit of Emperor William to Jerusalem the occasion for bringing to light a trend of things in his empire that is fraught with great issues. It says:

While the Emperor William is on his starring tour to Palestine the social democrats at home are working with intense energy with the propagation of their doctrines and the extension of their organization. Their ultimate success is sure. It is a new Protestant Reformation with added incentives. It is working from the basis of principles already ingrained in the people by Protestantism—the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and mutual responsibility. Very many of the social democrats, repelled by the union of the church with the monarchy, are unbelievers; but a notable change is appearing, and its full accomplishment is inevitable. The socialists see the tremendous power they win by allying themselves with Christ as their leader, and have already abandoned Karl Marx and other rationalistic pioneers. The effect of this is not only the very rapid extension of their principles, but the modification of those principles to bring them into accord with the divine Teacher. In other words social democracy has reacted to conservatism, to the Christian religion in its well-guarded socialism. This is what is rolling up its constantly and rapidly increasing political ballot. What will the monarchy do? Not a very long time can elapse before the monarch must choose. He has three causes open—to submit, demit or fight. If he choose the latter Germany will become the theatre of a violence the end of which no man can foresee.

New Study of the Revelation.

In order to encourage the new study of the Apocalypse of Patmos in ministerial circles I will make a special inducement to Christian preachers if they will write to me that they are members of a pastor's association and would like to encourage the reading of a paper and the discussion of the subject by their association.

Our Budget.

—We are glad to hear the Michigan Evangelist say that its subscription list now almost supports the paper. The M. E. is now but one year old, but it has proven acceptable to the brethren of Michigan as a state organ, and they are thus showing their appreciation.

—The Hiram House Settlement has begun the publication of a bimonthly paper of twelve pages in the interest of its work. The name of this journal is the Hiram House Life. It is to be the exponent of the inner life of the Settlement.

—At Portland, First Church, in the third missionary district of Oregon, including about one-third of its population, a very profitable convention was held Nov. 8-10, and steps were taken to put an evangelist in the field all the time if funds can be secured.

—We learn from the Pacific Christian that the drouth in California is becoming a serious matter to its people and that the Roman Catholic and Episcopalian clergy have been called upon by their bishops to offer up prayers to God for rain. The P. C. asks also, "Why not all who profess to be Christians pray for rain" at such a time?

—Would it not be a good idea for the Bible-school superintendents and preachers to tell the children about the "Advance Society" organized and managed for their benefit by J. Breckenridge Ellis, of Plattsburg, Mo., of which he writes every week in our Family Circle Department. We feel sure that the children will be delighted with his plan for amusing and instructing them. At one church the preacher mentioned the matter and 14 children promised to join the society at once.

—The Board of Church Extension has just mailed its last annual report. The receipts this year are the best in the history of this important work, and the publication of the same in the annual report occupies over twenty pages. Illinois comes first in the amount contributed, having sent in $3,949.11; Ohio stands second with $2,996.47; Kentucky is third with $2,634; Indiana is fourth and Pennsylvania is fifth. In all departments there is shown a healthy increase. The list of life directors and life members show that the leading people among us are putting money into this fund. Besides the annual report, there is some very interesting information in regard to the work, embodied in such articles as "A Definition of the Fund," "Strengthen Thy Stakes," "Early on the Ground" and "The Plan and Management of the Fund." This report will be sent to any one who applies for it to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Waterworks Building, Kansas City, Mo.

—Against the frequently made statement from Protestant sources to the effect that the state of civilization in any given country west of Asia declines in proportion to the dominance of the Roman Catholic Church therein, the Catholic News points to the condition of a large class of people in London who, it says, "are blessed with Anglo-Saxon civilization." This is evidently a shrewd way of meeting the argument aforesaid, but it only shows the more plainly how keenly the charge is felt and how difficult to meet. These same conditions not only obtain in large cities under Roman Catholic rule, but throughout the countries in which they are located. The basis of this argument should not rest upon the section of a city, but upon the intellectual and moral condition of the entire people of the nation in which that city is located.

—There must have been a strong regard in the Chattanooga Convention for the fitness of things when it fixed the third Lord's day in December for an offering for the Ministerial Relief Fund. How Christlike it is to contribute to the immediate relief of dependent ones at such a time! And how easy it will be to give under the influence of the giving spirit so characteristic of Christmas times.

—We have learned that F. H. Thompson was found frozen to death in the streets of Omaha, Neb., during the recent storm, but have no further particulars about his distressing death. He was at one time an agent for the Christian Publishing Co.

—We publish this week a very interesting and remarkable interview with Archbishop Purcell from the pen of one who had the privilege of a long and pleasant conversation with him. Our readers will no doubt be surprised to know the sentiments of the Archbishop in his later years toward Mr. Campbell, his whilom antagonist. It is a little strange that one who seems to have had such a keen insight into Mr. Campbell's character and motives should have been unable to understand the reasons which prompt his brethren and colaborers in refusing to wear his name. Mr. Campbell's whole aim religiously as relates to the world was to bring men away from the dominion of creeds and party leaders and under the authority and leadership of Jesus Christ. It would, therefore, be very inconsistent, to call it by no harsher term, for them to accept the name of Mr. Campbell or of any other human leader. Our readers will, nevertheless, enjoy this remarkable interview and will thank us no doubt for having secured it for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—During the latter part of last summer we announced in these columns that a Congress of Disciples had been arranged for to meet in St. Louis sometime next spring. The committee having the matter in charge has about completed the program, which will be published soon. The time fixed for the meeting of the Congress is Tuesday, the 25th day of April next. The program embraces some of the leading questions of the time and a number of the ablest men in our ranks. Keep this matter in mind and arrange to attend.

—A brother from Indiana warns the churches against a "Ben Hurr" entertainment that is being imposed upon some of the churches of that state. He says it is immoral in its tendency and demoralizing to the young people who engage in it, besides proving generally a financial failure to the church. We know nothing of this particular entertainment, but church officers can not be too cautious in looking into the character of these peripatetic shows, which propose to give an entertainment and divide proceeds with the church. All such devices for raising money are doubtful even when decent, but when their moral influence is bad no countenance whatever should be given to them.

—The brief message from A. M. Atkinson, calling the attention of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to the appointment by our last convention of the Lord's day before Christmas as the day for a general offering to the Ministerial Relief Fund will, we trust, attract the attention of all our preachers especially, and will lead them to make such preparation as is fitting and right, that the churches may acquit themselves honorably in reference to this beneficent work. Both the time and the object of the offering are such as to open the hearts of all to the demands of this tender ministry of love to our aged and needy veterans. Read what Bro. Atkinson says, for he says it as no one else can say it, and let his tender message find a response in all our hearts on the day mentioned.

—The Christian Oracle came out last week a renewed paper within and without. It is in new form, sixteen pages, and cover of unique design for the Thanksgiving number. New names appear at the head of its business and editorial departments—names that stand for business and for success. The editorial staff and promised correspondence are especially strong. The Oracle is evidently contemplating an era of growth and prosperity in its history.

—The Interior seems to be concerned about the inroad which Christian Science is making upon the churches, especially, as it says, upon Presbyterian and Baptist Churches. The remedy for this depleting malady, the Interior thinks, lies in better pastoral care for the flock. So far so good, we think, but this is not all. The people are conscious of a constant sense of bondage, captivity, oppression, burdens, etc., and are ready always to utilize every promise of deliverance, of liberty, of release, of rest. Jesus recognized these conditions and preached deliverance to the people, and since that time they have expected this assistance from the churches, which stand as his ambassadors. If the churches fail them in these ministrations they will seek relief elsewhere. Many of their troubles result from society and governments as now constituted, and true relief cannot come until these conditions are changed. A more earnest and sincere effort on the part of churches which stand for Christianity to better society and governments, and remove the real cause of their distress, is therefore needed as well as better pastoral care. Let the churches preach and practice real deliverance, and their pews will be crowded with hearers and seekers.

—Few things on this earth are better fitted to "stir a fever in the blood of age," even, and call out all the chivalrous sentiments of our nature, than the spectacle of a brave warrior standing in the face of a whole army of the foe, turning back the red tide of battle, bearing in his bosom the poisoned arrows of the enemy, when suddenly there advances from the reserve corps of the defensive enemy a stalwart son of Mars, with the sun's rays flashing from his shield, helmet and battle-axe, who takes his place beside his brother warrior, saying, "Thou shalt not fight alone, noble Ajax; I will stand by you, and we two shall scatter the armies of the alien and bring deliverance to those who are trembling before the advance of the invading host." Such a spectacle as that is visible just now in our current history to those who have eyes to see and hearts to appreciate the heroic and the sublime.

—One is sometimes surprised at the blunders of great scholars in their references to the Scriptures. The editor of the Expository Times says, "St. Paul's expression, 'the baptism of the Holy Ghost.'" This from the greatest critical paper in the English-speaking world! In the first place, there is no such expression in the Bible as "the baptism of the Holy Ghost." Neither Paul nor any other biblical writer uses it; and still worse, the idea it expresses is not in the Bible. In the second place, the phrase "baptize with the Holy Spirit," or more correctly speaking, "baptize in the Holy Spirit," is used in the Gospels and the Acts by John and Jesus, but is not employed by Paul. He uses the phrase "filled with the Spirit," but this is neither the expression nor the idea of the "baptism of the Holy Ghost."

—The following reasons for an interest in missions appeared in the Watchword and are worthy of careful study as they indicate the lines along which it is most profitable to work in our efforts to increase the interest of churches in missionary work:

In an open parliament on "How to Kindle and Keep Ablaze the Missionary Fire," conducted by J Edgar Knipp, at the Miami Y. P. C. U. Convention, the question was asked, "What awakened in you an interest in missions?" Here are some of the answers in brief:

"Love for souls."
"Studying the subject of missions."
"The great Student Volunteer movement."
"The command of Jesus Christ."
"The study of God's Word."
"One of the first principles taught me by my mother."
"Giving to missions."
"Corresponding with a missionary in India."
"Personal acquaintance with missionaries."
"Contrast in the condition of heathen and Christian peoples."
"Reading the life of John G. Paton."
"The self-sacrificing spirit of Christ."

—After an absence of near two months the "Gospel Plea," published at Edwards, Miss., in the interest of Negro Education and Evangelization, has resumed its weekly visits. The break in its history was occasioned by the yellow fever epidemic.

—Dr. Whitsitt is said to have been heartily received by the General Association of the Baptist Churches in Virginia in session at Richmond, recently, and his speech on the work of the Seminary, with the utmost favor. The tide of persecution against Dr. Whitsitt seems to be snbsiding and he may yet ontlive its influence. Crusades against heretics are not popular religious movements in these days.

—It is altogether proper that the picture on our first page should have a place in our gallery of brethren whose position and work have made them known to a much larger circle than they have been permitted to come in personal contact with. President J. W. McGarvey, of the Bible College of Kentucky University, is widely known as a teacher, preacher, author and contributor to current literature. His name is a household word among the Disciples, and his likeness will become a household picture in thousands of homes through this issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He was born in Hopkinsville, Ky., March 1st, 1829, and hence is now in his 70th year, but still well preserved and capable of doing a great deal of work. He graduated at Bethany College in 1850, and afterwards spent some time in Missouri both preaching and teaching. He is the author of a number of works, including Commentaries on Matthew, Mark, Acts of Apostles, "Lands of the Bible," "Text and Canon," "Credibility and Inspiration of the Bible." He is at present conducting a departmet of biblical criticism in the Christian Standard, of Cincinnati. One may not always agree with his critical views, but he will always be able to understand what he writes, which is more than can be said of many critics .

—J. Z. Tyler writes that he failed to receive Dr. Willett's article on the Bethany C. E. Reading Course, from Berlin this week, and in his stead supplies an article from his own ever-ready and lucid pen. We are sure that our readers can do a good work by calling attention to these articles and also by availing themselves of the benefits of these reading courses. This is a literary age of the world and those who will not read may expect to find themselves in the rear of the procession soon. Then they will be wondering what's the matter with the world and its people. Better fall in line and read up the history and outlook of the Disciples of Christ in this remarkable age of the world.

Educational Conference.

This will be our last opportunity to call attention to the educational conference which meets at Moberly on Tuesday next, Dec. 6th, at 3 P. M. Let the preachers and business brethren in Missouri, who feel an interest in this subject, be present to give their counsel as to the best course to pursue. If only the schools are represented by a few of their friends, little good will come of it. The conference has no legislative authority. Its power will be wholly moral and advisory. It is not even an adjourned meeting of the Missouri Christian Convention. If, however, the brethren who really represent the churches of the state are present in sufficient numbers, the advisory influence of the conference will be just as potent as that of the state convention. A thousand delegates from a single neighborhood, if they were all permitted to vote, could accomplish nothing. It is not a matter of votes except as those votes represent churches that will back up their votes with donations. Let the schools present to the conference some practical plan for self-help, and ask the co-operation of the brotherhood of the state.

Uniform Series of Prayer-meeting Topics.

The Uniform Series of Prayer-meeting Topics, arranged by the joint committee of seven, appointed by the Chattanooga Convention, has been carefully prepared, and is now in the printer's hand. The topics represent all our missionary interests and go into effect January first. No church can use them without improving its prayer-meeting, and there is no reason to doubt that they will come into immediate favor. There is something inspiring in the thought of a uniform topic for all our prayer-meetings throughout the land.

GEORGE DARSIE,
Chairman Committee.

The recent expressions of interest in the Hour of Prayer Department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been very gratifying, and many churches, we are glad to learn, have been using these topics, particularly during the past year. Now that a uniform series has been arranged, it may reasonably be hoped that our churches generally will adopt these topics, and that the prayer-meeting may assume a new interest and importance. There is something inspiring, as Bro. Darsie suggests, in the whole brotherhood using the same topics, studying the same Scriptures and directing their prayers to the same great objects. These topics will be found flexible enough to be adapted to special local needs, where such exist. There is no reason why the prayer-meeting should not be as much benefited by this uniform series of topics as the Sunday-school has been by the use of the international series of lessons. The topics arranged by the committee appointed by the national convention at Chattanooga come into use with the beginning of the New Year.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Granville Snell, of Trenton, Mo., preaches at Oskaloosa, Ia., Nov. 27th.

Sherman Hill preaches at Hampton, Ia., one Sunday in November.

I. N. McCash delivers an address, Nov. 28, at Creston, Ia., before a Ministerial Institute.

Prof. Hill M. Bell, of Drake, spent his Thanksgiving vacation in Chicago.

H. N. Dale, of Sioux City, Ia., spent a few days in Des Moines recently.

F. F. Grim, late of Iowa, now of Hamilton, Montana, has had 38 added under his ministry, the larger part being baptisms. Bro. G. has out a good tract on our beginnings as a people.

A synopsis of the sermon on "Make Your Calling and Election Sure," preached Nov. 13, by A. Sanders, pastor of the church at Newcastle, Wy., appeared in the Weston County Leader, published in that city.

C. McIntire has been unanimously called to preach for the church at Garden City, Minn., for one year. He has been with that church one month and praises their faith and loyalty to Christ very highly.

The Pacific Christian says that T. D. Garvin expect to close their work in Honolulu soon and will go to Australia where an inviting gospel field is said to be awaiting them or return to California.

An elder of the church at Brazil, Ind., says thet Perry T. Martin, who has been with that church for two years, has been retained by the church as its pastor for an indefinite period of time. All debts of the church are paid and $400 on hand toward a church building.

Wm. Remphrey Hunt, writing from New York, says that he will sail for England on the 26th inst. and that he is returning to his place in the foreign field with delightful memories of the Chattanooga Convention and of the churches of our great brotherhood.

J. S. Smith preached the Union Thanksgiving sermon in the M. E. Church at Algonac, Mich.

C. K. Marshall, of Lexington, Ky., says that any congregation wishing to employ a faithful, energetic pastor, interested in all of the enterprises of the brotherhood would do well to write to R. H. Lampton, 248 E. 3rd St., Lexington, Ky. He is a graduate of the Bible College of that city.

Scott Cisco, clerk of the church at Wayneville, Ill., writes that the greatest meeting ever held in that community has just closed at Rock Creek Christian Church with 117 additions. R. Leland Brown, of Rockville, Ind., did the preaching.

Well Known Pastor

Health, Voice, Appetite and Strength Failed—Completely Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Last year my health failed entirely. My limbs were so weak that I could scarcely walk. I had no appetite and suffered with constipation. My voice failed me in the pulpit. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and very soon I saw a great improvement. In the winter I was attacked with the grip which left me weak and prostrated. I went back to my old friend, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which seems to be the thing for me." REV. C. S. BEAULIEU, pastor Christian church, Lowellville, Ohio. Remember.

Emma Bird, daughter of Mrs. Emily L. Campbell, of New Cumberland, W. Va., was married to Charles Morell Watson, Nov. 24th, 1898.

Bruce Wolverton, who recently returned to Portland, Ore., from this city, writes that he has been kept very busy since his return. He is holding a meeting with the church at Forest Grove, Ore., and raising funds to pay off its floating debt. The leading school of the Congregational Church in the Northwest is located at Forest Grove. Bro. Wolverton writes also that he is asked to take the work of evangelist in the third district of Oregon, which is said to include about one-third of its population.

S. J. Phillips, of Sugar Grove, Wis., is receiving some very earnest inquiries concerning Christian Library for Bible-schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, about which he writes in this paper.

J. G. M. Luttenberger, of Dorchester, Ill., paid his respects to this office last week. Though not elected representative from his district in Illinois in the last election, he is by no means cast down over it. He still has on his war paint and proposes to continue the battle in the interest of the Prohibition party and of temperance. More lectures and better organization is his motto for future work.

Correspondence.

In the Cemeteries of Paris.

The traveler from the New World has a sort of negative impression the first time he enters one of the three justly celebrated burial grounds of Paris He sees what it lacks before he sees what it has. His idea of a cemetery is quite another. His eye is accustomed to the grassy mound, rounded and green, to the long, sloping lawn, dotted with shrubs and trees. He is struck with the fundamental difference between these graves and those of his native land. The Paris grave is never rounded; it is never green, nor does is ever have an inch of lawn, or rarely ever. The eye is quick to detect that each grave is covered with a stone slab 3 x 8 and six inches thick. The slab of one touches that of another. The crack is filled with mortar. If you should remove all the monuments and tombs along both sides of a given lane, yon would have the lane bordered with two sidewalks made of flagstones. The lane is paved with cobbles. Not a spear of grass, except at the carrefours, where all ways meet and cross. There is no room for grass. Put in a single phrase, you miss all that inspired Gray to write his "Elegy in a Country Churchyard." You miss nature and the poor. Yet the principal avenues are lined with trees. There is little room for the poor in the overcrowded capitals of this world, whether they be living or dead. The new-born babe has no place to set its tiny foot except its mother's hand; the aged have no place to lie down in death except the ashes of others. In Paris, at least, it is necessary to be very rich in order not to be compelled to shove the bones of your ancestors, left in human order by the disappearing flesh, into a disorderly heap that you yourself may have room to molder.

He who has the good fortune to spend the summer and fall in the French capital, and the inclination to frequent its necropoles, will soon become accustomed to the absence of nature in admiring the works of art. These are abundant. The family tombs, and they are nearly in the majority, are unique and characteristic. They border every path and lane and avenue and give the graveyard the appearance of a city, a fairy city, with temples and cathedrals. Not alone along the ways, but even in the "massive" that is to say, aside from the main walks, these tombs are in great numbers, often to the exclusion of the simple stone. They are turned at all angles. They are generally of modest proportions, say eight to thirteen feet high, three to four wide. Many are large, grand, magnificent; like so many cathedrals they tower above their environment. Architecturally they preserve and reproduce all the ideas represented in the great palaces, temples and cathedrals of antiquity and the middle ages, of which they are in reality so many miniature copies. The Gothic type predominates. There is infinite variety in the dimensions and in the execution. They have much in common, while displaying to the patient eye the most charming variety of detail. Each seems to have a peculiar conception to represent. Some are gloomy and dismal, others are filled with a tender twilight and some are as full of sunlight and flowers as an American cottage on a summer day. That is the same as saying that some look like dengeons, others like churches and still others have the air of a home. What an infinity of expression in the exterior of a structure! Thought loves to display itself in a door or in a window or to conceal itself behind it.

It is precisely the variety in the doors and windows of the tombs which would awaken in the reader the most varied emotions and lead him to the strangest of reflections. Every monument or vault is in a certain sense the projection of the thought of those who order its erection. Tombs have always been a fruitful source of study. They preserve the history of peoples. When a nation passes into oblivion it leaves a graveyard behind. Posterity gathers the contents of these graveyards into museums. The gateway to a cemetery or the door of a tomb is of vast importance. They are concrete ideas. The doors of Paris tombs reveal the most remarkable development, not alone from the standpoint of the architect, but as well from the religious and social point of view. Here is a door, an iron one, without an aperture except the keyhole; it is absolutely expressionless; it is rusty. It is not alone; it has companions. Here are others, very numerous, with apertures in many forms—now a clover leaf, now a cross, now a star or circle. They admit air, but not light. Another perhaps has a frameless transom; you see the dark opening; you have a sensation of fear and suspicion. You could look over that door, but you don't. The blank iron, the darkness, concealing the mysterious and unknown, seem to say, Pass on. You flee. Still another door repulses you in the same way, while being entirely different. It consists of iron bars crossing at right angles. It is a grate, that is to say, it is the door of a prison. It has a lock and chain. Such a tomb is a county jail and excites the same sensations. No common metal produces more sympathetic feeling than bronze. These cemeteries are rich in tombs with bronze doors, the panels of which are decorated with graceful palm branches or bas-reliefs of a nature to attract and retain the attention and please the eye. The pannels are often in glass, which may or may not be protected with a light trellis. Such a door transforms completely the impression you have of such a tomb. It becomes a house. It loses its prison-like aspect. It represents the architecture of the avenue penetrating the graveyard. Architectural harmony may suffer somewhat, for you see cathedrals with dwelling house doors. In some rare instances a door is provided with a clean white curtain behind the glass. Perhaps the curtain is drawn obliquely wide, as in many a cottage door. The transformation is complete. In such a door you read the theology of the housewife. Such a portal arouses in you the most pleasant emotions, yet you no more think of looking in than you did before those iron doors. Back yonder it was fear, dread; here it is respect for the living which restrains you. This tomb is certainly inhabited. it is not a tomb at all; you cannot think of it as such. It is a tiny home. There is a woman behind that curtain. Such are your conclusions. The illusion, which the writer has often experienced, is rendered complete if, at this moment, the door quietly opens from within and a real person appears in the doorway, a pot of flowers in her hand, a lace bonnet on her head. In fact, these tombs require a great deal of attention all the year round. They are little houses which need to be kept; they have their keepers. The rich send their servants, their "bonnes," though doubtless many a mother or the daughters of well-to-do families perform with their own hands this sacred task. It is especially in the month of October that you see a great activity in the cemet ries. The tombs are all cleaned and decorated for the feast of All Souls, which the French call Toussaint.

The apparition of a woman in the door has something of the effect of a Spiritualistic seance in broad daylight. You wish for a medium to stand between you and the vision and allow you to retreat to a safe distance. But something in the pleasant face seems to command you to speak. You collect your senses and the little French you know, and venture to say, Good-morning!

The vision says, Bonjour, monsieur, and continues to pick away the dead leaves of the plant in her hand.

You feel that the conversation has reached a period, yet you don't find anything more inappropriate than, "It's a beautiful day for housecleaning, madame."

The vision assents by saying with charisteric French grace: Oui, monsieur.

Another period; you turn again. You wonder why you asked such a stupid question in a cemetery. You reach a climax by asking a more stupid one; you want to know who lives in that splendid two-story house, with four marble statues at the corners, or what church that is at the corner of the same street, or who is the pastor.

The vision looks a little surprised but replies pleasantly: Nobody lives there, and that is not a church. These are tombs. This is the cemetery of Father Lachaise.

The housekeeper, to continue the illusion, locks the door gently and goes away when she has finished her task. You say to yourself: she has gone over to visit one of her neighbors.

The windows are no less varied, no less interesting, no less significant in the evolution of the tomb. All the modern doors correspond to windows, round, square or oblong, in the opposite wall. They exist also in the side walls of many tombs. In instances all four walls have disappeared, the corners have become columns. The tomb is glass. A bronze trellis protects it. Needless to say that such a sepulchre is without shadows. Yet it has just a little the air of a show case. The interior saves it from this degradation. But for the most part even the side windows are rare. In two or three new tombs in the cemetery of Montmarte, the entire rear wall has become glass devoted to splendid representations in colors. Two are the tombs of noted physicians. The rule is the single window in the rear wall. They are often without any design, many display the cross. The majority represent some holy scene, or reveal the portraits of some saint. Mary and Joseph are favorites as in the churches. In every cemetery there is a certain group of tombs which never have any picture whatever. Their windows bear a word in Hebrew characters. This is not an infallible mark of a Jewish tomb. The writer recalls a certain tomb in Montparnasse which had Hebrew characters in the window and a bust of Jesus in bronze on a Christian altar. A certain New Hampshire family has a tomb in the cemetery of Father Lachaise, in which the emblem of the United States is to be seen in the window. It is with the most joyful sensations that you stand before this open tomb, for it has no front wall, so full of the expression of nationality. To find in the window of a tomb, in a foreign land, the American eagle, the American flag in colors and the motto of American unity—what a surprise, what a pleasure! This tomb is neither a dungeon, nor a church, nor a home; it breathes but one thought—the nation; it awakens but one sensation—love of country and gratitude. It contains a beautiful marble statue. It is the Whitcomb tomb. In a few cases all such designs and representations are missing. The portrait of some child or the head of the family takes their place. t is full of significance, such a digression from the custom prevailing in all the others. It marks the triumph of an idea, the conquest of the tomb by the home. Nationality and religious feeling give way to the idea of the fireside, of the family. The expression family tomb gains a fullness of meaning which one raises in the others. In most cases the prison-like vault has developed into a church with stained windows and holy pictures. In but rare instances has the idea of the home conquered the church-like tomb. Nothing but the front door. If the reader ever visits the cemetery of Montparnasse, in the south of Paris, he will find the tomb of the Liser family in Raffet Avenue. The utter absence of everything else but the inscription "Liser" leads to the conclusion that the family was probably not in any way connected with political life. The tomb is modest, has a bronze door. It is not remarkable except for the window which contains the portrait of the father. The idea of the home predominates irresistibly, though there is an altar with a bronze crucifix and candles at the side. It is the portrait of a man in the vigor of years. The features are composed, but they are full of health and ra-diance. It is the face of a happy father. He wears a gray coat. He has the appearance of a man at home in the midst of his family. It is the face of one who returns at close of day from a day's labor that has left no shadow over the features. Not a care. There is an expression of satisfaction, and toward the stranger who presses his face against the glass door, of welcome. You are glad you looked in, you do not want to go away. The sinking sun illumines that tomb, it increases the radiance of that face. At the hour when you flee from others because they are full of shadows you linger gladly here where the sunshine lingers. Why didn't you stay by yonder tomb? The sunshine was there, too, but it fell through the sad face of a saint. That tomb was a church, perhaps you paused a moment in silent prayer; but here the tomb is a home. When the sun sets you seek the fireside with its joyful blaze and merry voices.

One can imagine the family council where it was determined to make this deviation from public opinion. A tomb is always the occasion of a family reunion. There were probably friends present, probably also the priest. It was probably against the advice of all these that the home gained the victory over the gloom of the vault and the twilight of the cathedral. Perhaps some son, looking up at the father's picture on the sitting-room wall, said suddenly and cheerfully: "Let's put father's portrait in the tomb, it will make it more home-like." Irresistible suggestion of filial love! "The tomb will preserve what is lost from the home," he continues, "when we gather to change the flowers, or renew the wreaths, or to pray, his face will welcome us." May it not have been the mother, for whom the word home had become a hollow sound—for the motto of mothers is, "What is home without a father"—who added in assenting to the proposal of the son: "Yes; and when we all lie side by side beneath father's portrait it will seem so much like the family asleep at home." For the priest there remained nothing to do but to give his benediction to the holy decision.

With the sunlight streaming through door and window you venture to examine the interior of these habitations of the dead. This is no sacrilege, for the owners have rendered them public by giving them light. The glass pannel is often open, even the door on All Saint's day. The modern tombs are really hospitable. There are hospitable tombs just as there are hospitable homes in spite of the contradiction of terms. In a word, the interior is generally that of a miniature chapel, contains almost invariably an altar, a crucifix, some candles, and a prayer-chair or two. The tomb of the Rothschilds has a carpet. The walls are sometimes very rich, even mosaic. Marble statues are frequent. They are all full of thought and sentiment, gloomy enough in the case of the prison-like vaults. Yet happily modern ideas are prevailing. They excite your interest, your admiration, your enthusiasm. They make sorrow beautiful. You forget that death is sad, you forget that there is an invisible corridor which conducts from every tomb to a desolate hearth, you forget that the tomb is the complement of the home, that they are the products of human sorrow just as homes are the products of human happiness. Happy hearts plan homes, only the sad plan tombs. Yet it is a pleasure to forget that for every cradle there is a coffin, for every home a tomb, for every fireside a heap of ashes, humam ashes.

Virginia Letter.

After a month of silence I resume the Virginia Letter. Many of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST have learned from the Editor-in-Chief that a number of us were indisposed at the Read House in Chattanooga. Shortly after returning from the National Convention I visited several of the churches in Virginia. Having to drive some distance through the country in a driving rain, the effect was anything but salutary. It was simply the "last straw" of a series of unfortunate circumstances which compelled me to give up all my work for a couple of weeks. Hence my silence in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The "Sunny South" is not always sunny. Two years ago, while Mrs. Young and I were in Athens, Ga., it rained for nearly three weeks, with scarcely any intermission, and since coming to Virginia the first of October, the rainy days have certainly equaled the days of sunshine, and a cold November rain in the South is, if anything, more apt to endanger one's health than a snowstorm in the North.

Since coming to Virginia I have visited only four of our churches during the past month; two of these are ministered to in word and work by Bro. Richard Bagby, whose home is Louisa, Va. Leaving Charlottesville on the Southern I visited Orange, where I was entertained in the home of Bro. Thomas Bond. There Bro. Bagby joined me and we drove twelve miles through the country to the Macedonia Church. This is one of the "mother" churches of Virginia. The present commodious brick building, in which the congregation worships, was erected before the war. Notwithstanding the terrible ravages of that severe struggle, the old church was uninjured, although the fierce battles of the Wilderness were fought hard by. Here the Caves were reared and began their Christian life. I met many of the relatives of Bro. R. L. Cave who, as college president at Christian University in Missouri, and now at Kentucky University, as well as for many years pastor of our leading church in Nashville, has faithfully served his Master and advanced the cause of the great brotherhood in which he is an honored worker. I was glad to learn that those who love Bro. Robert Cave were clear-visioned enough to regret the step he had taken, thus separating himself from the great movement with which he was formerly identified. I was entertained at the home of Bro. Jackson, who is a great sufferer from a wound he received in the Confederate army. It is but natural that he should have a warm place in his heart for his comrade in arms, but he is a loyal as well as humble follower of the Divine Master. I have ceased to be surprised at the high average of intelligence I find in many of our country churches, but the Macedonia congregation is far above mediocrity and has given to our brotherhood many other noble workers besides those above mentioned. One of these has become so widely known through his long and successful pastorate at the Walnut Street Church in Louisville that his life and ministry alone places our brotherhood under obligations to the Macedonia church. It was here that E. L. Powell, one of the purest spirits as well as clearest thinkers among us, confessed his faith in the Divine Savior when a barefooted boy of only twelve or fourteen summers. When reading the Easy Chair comments on the influences which shape a boy's life, having recently visited Macedonia Church, the contrast between the little towhead, attending Sunday-school at the church in the midst of a grove of outbranching oaks, and the noble Christian man whom I heard during the National Christian Endeavor Convention in San Francisco, as he held the intensest interest of a vast audience with his simple yet sublime thoughts concerning the heart of Christianity according to Christ, stood out vividly before my mind. Sunday-school teachers in the midst of your discouragements concerning that class of boys in the far-away country church or in the crowded city, trust God and take courage. You may be molding a noble benefactor of the race. Remember, we are told that when the dear Lord came to the last sad scenes of his earthly life, he loved his disciples "unto the end;" that is, he loved them for what they were to be under the developing power of the Christ-spirit. I shall long remember with pleasure my visit to the old Macedonia Church. Bro. Bagby is much loved and respected by all the members as a faithful, God-fearing follower of his Master.

At Unionville, the next point I visited, I also found quite a vigorous congregation. The large number of young men which came to church on horseback, wearing their leggins as in the colonial days, was especially noticeable. The leggins are frequently made of good leather, although generally made of canvas. The men stand around in groups outside of the church, talking politics, farming, etc., while quietly whittling sticks, until the services begin. These groups break up one by one and by the time the opening songs are sung, the long prayer has been offered and the sermon is well under way, most of the men have ranged themselves on one side of the church, frequently not even husbands sitting with their wives. These people are a little slow, but they are far above the average congregation in thoughfulness and appreciation.

The last Sunday in October I visited the old Gilboa Church, indeed one of the oldest in Virginia, as the first building was erected in 1834. This was the boyhood home of Bro. W. K. Pendleton, who was for many years intimately associated with Alexander Campbell as editor of the Millennial Harbinger and who was afterward for years president of Bethany College. Here Dr. Phil Pendleton, his brother, still lives, his residence now nearly a hundred years old, and his store, formerly the nucleus of the little village where, in the grove near by, the Gilboa Church is situated. Here again I found distinct evidences of culture and refinement above the average. There was no dust on the pews, as we frequently find in city churches, the lamps were all trimmed and bright, and between the two doors, by which the congregation entered the building, hangs a large and beautiful picture, symbolic of the Rock of Ages. I was entertained in the home of Mrs. Sarah E. Hankins, whose cultured daughter, Miss Mary, is an exception to the majority of young ladies who neglect their music after leaving college.

We had a delightful C. W. B. M. meeting in this consecrated, Christian home. Mr. Albert Hankins who, while a traveling man, takes every opportunity possible to preach Christ by a noble life, made his mother a life member of the C. W. B. M. The Gilboa Church has been ministered unto by many of our best preachers. Dr. Phil Pendleton informed me that Uriah Higginson was their first preacher, about 1834. Since then James Bagby, R. L. Coleman, R. C. Cave R. L. Cave, F. D. Power, I. J. Spencer and L. A. Cutler, besides others I have not space to mention, have served that congregation.

Here I found the memory of Col. John B. Cary held sacred, and nearly seventy-five dollars will be contributed this year, besides a number of pledges for the future, to the University of Virginia Bible Lectureship, founded by Col. John B. Cary. In my next letter I shall make mention of the frequent visits of Alexander Campbell to this section of Virginia.

Mr. Campbell's visits to Virginia were frequently in the interest of Bethany College, and it is but fitting that I should close this letter with a few serious statements in regard to that time-honored institution. It is now so generally known that early in October I was requested by the Board of Trustees of Bethany College to become its president that I do not hesitate to mention this fact publicly. The condition of Bethany College is well known to the public. Like many other institutions, Bethany has suffered from the inroads which the public system of education have made upon all distinctively Christian institutions, but the situation at Bethany is not hopeless. Reader, ask yourself this question: Can it be possible that our great brotherhood, which has grown to be more than a million strong and soon to control the heart of America religiously, will permit its oldest institution of learning to die? It is not a question of sentiment; it is not solely because Bethany was founded by Alexander Campbell that our brotherhood should rally to its support. We cannot afford to let any of our Christian colleges go down. Bethany College is in no worse condition to-day than other institutions which are doing good work. If the reader is interested in the future welfare of Bethany, will you please express such interest in a few lines? Address me at University Station, Charlottesville, Va.

CHARLES A. YOUNG.

A Sad Argument.

Died of cancer at the Poor Farm, Oct. 18, 1898, Elder —— ——. While young he had united with the Christian Church and shortly after his marriage was ordained a minister of the gospel by that church, and followed preaching and school teaching in Ohio for twenty years. He was then called from Ohio to West Virginia, in which state he lived for fifteen years and devoted his entire time to the ministry. On account of failing health of himself and wife he gave up the ministry and came to Missouri and when —— was laid out he bought several lots and built the Commercial Hotel and run it for sometime, but was compelled on account of poor health to give up his business and rent the hotel out. In a few years he became so badly involved in debt on account of not being able to do anything to keep up his expenses that he sold most all his property to pay his indebtedness.

The good people of —— have been helping them for sometime, but their health got so bad that neither of them could care for the other and they were brought to the Poor Farm, July 24, last.

A few days before his death he called Mr. ——, the superintendent of the farm, to his bedside and requested that his body be not buried in the county cemetery on the farm, but buried in —— cemetery. Mr. —— carried out his wishes and buried him as requested.

The above was taken from a local newspaper which by mere chance came into my possession a few days ago. The article refers to a brother whom I know has done good service for the Master's cause in years gone by, and I venture to make public mention of the above because of the extreme sadness of the case. I mention it because it is one of the many sad cases in which brethren who have spent the best days of their lives in the work of the Master, when worn out in body and mind, have been cast upon the cold charities of an unfriendly world. This case would be indeed very sad if it were the only one of that nature ever known to happen within our brotherhood, but it is still more sad when we remember that there are existing among us many more such cases as this one.

The good wife of this good brother is still living and is an inmate of the same poor farm where he died. Is this the appreciation we have of those who have "borne the burden in the heat of the day?" These men were defenders and exponents in the Reformation when it meant hardships and denials of which the younger generations of preachers know nothing. Preaching was then hard and severe labor, with but little, if an any remuneration. Let us remember that we have not grown to over a million people without the most severe self-denial on the part of some one, and the severest of these denials and hardships fell upon the preachers of this brother's age.

This case is a sad and yet a very convincing argument in favor of the work of the Ministerial Aid Fund. It is a sad comment upon the liberality of a rich and prosperous people like the Church of Christ if we leave the treasury of this fund so depleted that Bros. Atkinson and Lucas shall be compelled to leave a single appeal for help unrelieved. It is not only shameful, but it is actual robbery to take the best years of a man's life for any cause, without giving him remuneration sufficient to provide for his immediate wants and leave enough for "old age" and then refuse to hold up and support the brethren who are trying to keep these "worn-out" brethren and their wives from the poor house in their last days. There are no doubt brethren who have known for a long time of the sad condition of this brother and his wife, but they were powerless to relieve them. Each church has its demands upon it and but few are able financially to undertake to wholly provide for such a case as this, and so they must in the end see those unfortunates become objects of public charity.

When we give to the Ministerial Aid Fund the support it should receive all difficulties will be obviated and our poor ministers and those depending upon them will never become objects of public charities. Let us all respond liberally to this work. It is a duty we owe the cause as well as to those individuals who are made recipients of these blessings.

Ninety thousand dollars for '99, increase of membership, enlargement of work. Such is the purpose of the Woman's Board this Jubilee Year, which is larger with possibilities and brighter with promise than any we have known. It is heavier with responsibility. Responsibility is a divine inheritance. By discharging its obligations we grow in strength, grace and usefulness.

In our National Convention a year ago we set our aim for $90,000 in '99. This rallying cry has been slowly growing in volume during the year, and at our late Convention at Chattanooga it was in the air. It had taken shape as a possibility and was repeated from the platform and in conversation. We may confidently hope to reach that amount if we have enough workers in the field to present the matter to the auxiliaries and the churches. The generous gift of $10,000 from the wife of the late beloved John B. Cary comes also as a gift from God. It is an assurance that we shall reach the goal if we work intelligently, systematically and continuously.

Not only was $90,000 for '99 in the air, but the larger thought: 90,000 members and the enlargement of the work in all departments. To reach $90,000 this year, $21,814.13 must be raised in advance of the actual receipts of 1898, which were $68,185.87. Already has $10,000 of this sum been received, leaving only $11,814.13 increase to be made. This is easily within the possibilities so far as means are concerned. Our beloved president on hearing the good report from Chattanooga remarked: "Why not $100,000?" And, indeed, why not?

The conditions of the West appeal strongly for generous appropriations. The East is a fruitful and crying field. City evangelization is a problem the church must solve successfully for the sake of both city and country. A generous endowment is needed now for the English Bible Chairs. The force of the Mexican mission needs to be increased. Jamaica needs buildings now, and more missionaries would strengthen that work. Deoghur, India, is in immediate need of buildings and a medical missionary. Dr. Ollvia Baldwin and Miss Agnes Lackey are now on ther way to Deoghur to take charge of the orphanage to be established there. The one hundred children are orphans through the famine and are given the mission by the government. Every station in India is in need of funds with which to meet the growing demands in that land of universal need and boundless opportunity. Surely, we have a place in the ranks of the nation's workers, whom God is leading to the conquest of the world for righteousness.

We Will Give One Thousand Dollars

To the agent sending us the largest list of subscribers up to April 15, 1899; $500 to the next largest, and so on. 500 of our agents will share in the distribution of $11,500, BESIDES receiving a good commission for all work done. Send for particulars.

In what spirit shall we come to this service? Shall it be the spirit of love and loyalty to Christ, and love for the humanity that Christ loved. The great commission, Go, was to every one who wears the name of Christ. "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments." An article, "Tennessee C. W. B. M.," in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Nov. 10th, breathes the right spirit: "Can we afford to sit idly by when there is such a glorious opportunity for us to work in our Master's vineyard, when there is such an imperative call to be up and doing?" "Riginald Heber, after a day of toil in India, said to a friend: 'Gladly would I exchange years of common life for one such day as this.'" It proved his last day on earth, but it was a day of toil with Christ for the salvation of men. May we not have this spirit to some fuller degree and some such days of toil to mark this gracious year?

What we need and how to secure it—that is the question. Money and members are what we should work for at this time, in order that we may reach the ultimate object of all true missionary effort. The $90,000 can be secured and the membership largely increased if the missionary facts and sentiments are generally presented to the churches. We have two agencies for doing this, auxiliaries and organizers. Each auxiliary can do its own part, and will be furnished programs, suggestions and instruction in the Tidings. State officers who will stimulate the auxiliaries to extra effort are in a very responsible position. On them very much depends, and they can and will accomplish much. We need, however, more field workers. Efficient organiners to canvass every state, and especially those where "our people" are numerous, and who would present the claims of universal missions thoroughly and patiently, would greatly forward the desired end. The National Board, I feel assured, would place a number of such in needy places should sufficient funds come to the treasury. What state is worthy of aid from the National Board in this way? Is it not the state which does its utmost to cultivate its own field? Every state that is behind in its own work can best forward the purpose of this year by making up its deficiencies. Let every auxiliary pay state dues, make an offering to state work, and so help its state officers to place an organizer in the field, if it be only for a short time. Pray and work to this end and there will be no failure. The situation calls for strict faithfulnesss from the National Board and throughout the ranks to the most indifferent member, and not only faithfulness, but generosity of means, time and labor.

To think of the good that might be done with $90,000, the weak churches made self-sustaining, the burdened hearts made joyful, the lives turned from sin and darkness unto the life of Christian joy and light, the joy there would be on earth and in heaven, makes the heart throb with grateful anticipation.

Let us work with patient, prayerful, persistent enthusiasm, and may God lead the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to the realization of its hope—$90,000 for '99, increrse of membership and enlargement of work for the Master. PERSIS L. CHRISTIAN.

Texas Letter.

O. Paget is president of the "Free Thinker's" Club, of this city, and he magnifies his office. He never lets an opportunity pass unimproved, of saying something mean about the church, and he seems fond of letting the "fellows of the baser sort" know that he is with them. The street car strike now on has given him his latest opportunity, and he improves it by urging the people to boycott the roads. He says, "Walk—don't ride. Go to your butcher, your grocer, your baker, your saloon man and say, 'If you ride I'll not patronize you.'" This classification shows his appreciation of different classes of men. The "saloon man" is ranked along with the "butcher," the "grocer" and the "baker." Is this the legitimate results of infidelity?

Our Lectureship just closed at Waxahachie was a great success. The attendance was large, the papers were good and the entertainment was nothing short of royal. Prof. McGarvey's presence added much to the profit of the meeting. His lectures were a rare treat. and he will be warmly welcomed should he ever come again within our borders. Our meeting prevented my attendance, and hence I cannot speak of it in detail. Pres. A. Clark is president next year, and we meet at Greenville.

G. Lyle Smith has resigned at Weatherford, and will leave there at the close of the year. Bro. Smith is one of our "gilt edge" men, and any church needing a pastor now has a rare opportunity of getting one.

T. D. Secrest, of Coleman, also tendered his resignation, but the church raised such a protest that he wisely reconsidered, and will remain with them.

J. B. Boen leaves us for Guthrie, Oklahoma, to assume pastoral charge in that important city. Boen feels the need of time for study, and hence he turns away, for the time being at least, from his favorite work of evangelizing. Our Texas people will follow him in love and prayers.

Geo. Van Pelt, under the auspices of the State Board, held a good meeting at Yoakum, with sixteen additions, and the appointment of a committee to buy the Baptist church house, an elegant new house, almost completed, and and arrange to employ a pastor.

Mertens is shouting for joy, and well she may be, for Bro. Walling's twelve years' labor there is at last crowned with success. A church is now regularly organized and at work, and a house of worship is being erected.

Jewell Howard, after a successful pastorate at Terrell, resigns to re-enter Add-Ran University. He feels that no time is lost in thorough preparation for his work, and he is right.

Baxter Golightly has been very sick, but is now much better, and our people rejoice, for he is one of the best and most useful men.

C. L. Cole, has begun his twelfth year as pastor at Garland, and his work, like wine, grows better with age.

Tom Smith, one of the evangelists in the state work, has organized a church in South Waco, at a missionary point recently started by the Central Church.

Our meeting at the Central Church is four weeks old, with 31 additions. Bro. Martin's preaching is strong, and we are hopeful.

Lincoln Letter.

After three delightful years in Colorado we are in Nebraska again.

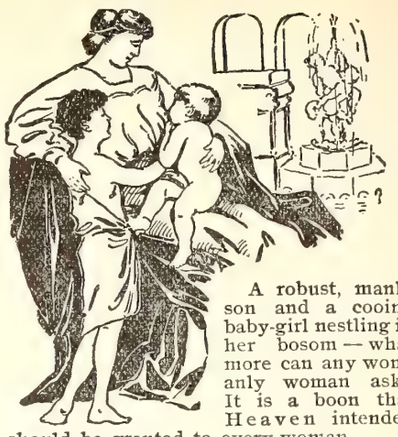
We closed our work at Manzanola, California, Oct. 14th, preaching five nights that week and baptizing four young women. Manzanola is one of the sunniest, fairests pots on earth, so far as we know, and the church, one of the best, is in need of a minister. For some consecrated godly young man that is a fruitful field for a life work among appreciative, loving hearts, who will always hold up his hands and help to plant "the Old Faith" in that sunny land. May the Lord richly bless Manzanola and her people, for they are worthy.

Since leaving we have received the sad news of the death of Sister Anna Eichling. As one of the "pure in heart" her presence in the house of the Lord was always an inspiration and she was always there if health permitted. With a face always full of sunshine and heart cheery and glad she was a great power in the Sunday-school as teacher of the infant class. During twelve years of pastoral work I have never known a sweeter Christian life. Such lives—the embodiment of a "peace that passeth understanding," and a "joy that is unspeakable and full of glory." John must have had in mind when he wrote, "And they do bring the glory and honor of the nations into it." May God bless and sustain Bro. Eichling and comfort the church.

Sunday, Oct. 16th, we passed in Denver with father and mother. It was a great delight to worship with them again in the house of the Lord.

We have located as pastor of the Bethany Church of Christ, worshiping at Cotner University. The church is in fine condition, and the former pastor, Bro. Bush, who still resides here, is held in high esteem.

The outlook for Cotner University is most hopeful, the attendance good, all lines of work prospering and the 25 or 26 young men in the Bible Department are of the highest order of intellect and Christian consecration.



Beloved of the Lord, we have no work of greater importance to-day than the maintaining and upbuilding of Cotner University. On the fertile plains and beautiful valleys of this trans-Mississippi empire (Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska and the Dakotas) will sometime be fought the Armageddon of our national destiny. A great tide of brain and brawn and young life is flowing from the Eastern and Central states and we owe to them and to God to lay broad and deep the foundations of better civilization here than the world has ever known.

We need to contend earnestly for that old faith once for all delivered to the saints, and to that end let us support our educational institutions.

Lincoln has been considerably stirred the last week by Mrs. Edholm, speaking for the "Rescue of Fallen Women," and the awful traffic in girls has been spoken of in a way that will do good. One case was instanced where a man who was skeptical as to "drugging, kidnaping," etc., having offered rewards for convincing proof was horrified to find his own daughter as the victim.

Dr. J. J. Lewis, of Boston, recently lectured to the students of Wesleyan University on the "Passion Play" of Oberamergan. This will be remembered as the play that was to purify the stage. This was years ago. Meanwhile the stage still lives to curse and cumber the ground. The way to purify the stage is to make Christianity so all-sufficient to humanity that the stage will be abolished for want of patrons. A. K. WRIGHT.

Lincoln, Neb.

A robust, manly son and a cooing baby-girl nestling in her bosom — what more can any womanly woman ask? It is a boon that Heaven intended should be granted to every woman.

Thousands fail of this because they have neglected to look after their health in a womanly way. The health of a woman's babies is dependent upon her own health during the period of prospective maternity. The prospective mother cannot be too particular about her physical condition. If she suffers from local weakness, nervousness or loss of vigor and virility, her children will be weak, puny and sickly. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the only unfailing cure for all weakness and disease of the delicate and important organs that bear the brunt of maternity. It makes these organs strong, healthy, vigorous, virile and elastic. It makes the prospective mother strong and cheerful. It robs maternity of its perils. It insures a baby constitutionally strong. It is the invention of an eminent and skillful specialist, who has had thirty years' training in this particular branch, during which time he and his staff of physicians have prescribed for many thousands of women. Medicines dealers sell it and an honest dealer will not urge upon you an inferior substitute merely for the little added profit he may make thereon.

"I am the mother of a nice baby four and a half months old," writes Mrs. J. B. Clough, (Box 203,) of Lisbon, Grafton Co., N. H. "I cannot give too much praise to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. Constipation is the cause of many diseases. Cure the cause and you cure the disease. One "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. Druggists sell them, and nothing is "just as good."

Is Baptism for the Remission of Sins? No. 2.

When are the sins of the alien actually remitted? At what place, stage or time can the alien coming to Christ, and into his kingdom, have the assurance that his sins are forgiven?

If I read history aright, the fathers fought a great battle and won a great victory over this matter some half century ago. When the battle began there was not a question or matter prominent in religious circles and work more obscured.

It was a very common thing to find men and women who were searching and seeking for this knowledge in extreme agony of soul, and no man was found to stand forth and give the desired light. The rallying cry of the little band in Washington Co., Pa., "Where the Scriptures speak we will speak, and where the Scriptures are silent we will be silent," led the people adopting the sentiment to look into the Scriptures for the answer to every question, and to pledge themselves to accept and adopt that answer when found. These men had been born in the mist, and struggled gradually out of it into the light.

On the 18th day of November, 1827, at New Lisbon, Ohio, Walter Scott, who was the first man of his times to see the meaning of Acts 2:38, declared to the people assembled that God said, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins," and that God meant what he said, and that was the way to obtain remission of sins. He gave the invitation, and made it plain that all might understand it. William Amend was a devout Presbyterian. He had believed long years before. All that can be claimed for "faith" as a mental act, a heart condition, or spiritual attitude, had been his for many years. All that can be claimed for faith as an "attitude of the soul toward God," he had already. All that can be said of faith as a "subjective principle," William Amend had.

When he heard that invitation for the first time in his life from the lips of a preacher, he at once accepted it. The historian, the saintly Baxter of happy memory, says: "In the same day, in a beautiful, clear stream which flows on the southern border of the town, in the presence of a great multitude, he was baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

I cannot think that it would please the great explorer and discoverer, Scott, or the humble man of faith, Amend, to have leading men in the great movement for restoring the New Testament church in its teaching and practice, which they were then launching, seventy years later, employing such ambiguous language concerning this great matter as this: "In what sense baptism looks toward remission of sins is an open question." Or language that will be so uncertain that an inquiry is aroused as to whether baptism is for or because of remission of sins, which?

Was Walter Scott right? The men and women of faith who stood with him thought him to be right. The battle was fought on that ground. Mysticism, doubt, uncertainty and the mourner's bench system, and custom of experience telling, gave way before their cry: "God says to the believing soul, Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

There was no hint that in baptism the believer had the assurance of forgiveness of sins already forgiven. They never employed the word actually, or really, in connection with remission. It was simply remission of sins. It meant just that. No more, no less. When the man whose heart was prepared for baptism was baptized, it was for the remission of sins, and his sins were then remitted. Up to that time they had not been remitted. It meant "absolving from guilt," and "included deliverance from the power and the habit of sin," and all this took place when the man was "baptized into Christ," wherein he is a new creature.

We have been before the world with this teaching more than half a century. Tens of thousands have accepted it. We have succeeded marvelously because we have offered to the people something definite—a sure thing. Whether we quote our writers word for word or not, we must deeply deplore the fact that their utterances have been such as to raise the question, Do we believe it? For the sake of the cause let us discuss no speculative or dim theories, and let us use no ambiguous language.

All of the revisions and translations of the Scriptures, and all of the efforts of those of the contrary part have failed to make the Holy Spirit say anything different from the declaration, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Brethren, let us preach it that way, and be true re-Peters.

E. L. FRAZIER.

Indiana Items.

The Sunday before Christmas is set apart for an offering for the relief of our aged and disabled preachers and their families. Do not allow other and less important affairs to crowd this out of your memory, but rather lay aside a handsome gift for the good men who will otherwise fail to be made happy at the Christmastide.

I spent a few very pleasant hours to-day with A. M. Atkinson, in Wabash. He has had the cause of Ministerial Relief very close to his heart from its inception, and is anxious that every preacher present the matter to his people in December, and secure the heartiest and best gifts at all possible, as the needs are pressing and calls for aid are increasing. As the headquarters are in Indiana we ought not to fall behind in this gracious and noble work.

We have but few more spiritual or more successful pastors in Indiana than T. J. Clark, of Bloomington. He recently announced a brief season of prayer before the Lord's day morning service and invited any who were inclined to do so to attend. The service has been both well attended and most helpful to pastor and congregation. Why not try this everywhere? For many years the Valparaiso church officers have engaged in a brief season of prayer just before the Sunday morning sermon. These services are held in the lecture rooms.

It will be interesting to those who visited Chickamauga Park in October to know that at a meeting of the Grand Army and Confederate Posts at Chattanooga in 1885, Capt. I. P. Watts, of the 84th Indiana, proposed the purchase by the government of the Chickamauga battlefield. The proposition met with favor everywhere with the splendid outcome of the present park. Bro. Watts is one of our active and self-sacrificing Indiana preachers, residing at Winchester, and now donating part of his time to building up the broken walls in Swayzee, where he is doing excellent and much-needed work. May he meet with abundant success.

The church at Huntington has been rebuilding, and will reopen their house of worship on the 27th of November. L. L. Carpenter, the chief of dedicators, will have charge. Nearly all money necessary to pay for the improvements has been provided, and the services will be gladsome rather than goldsome. The house, with its new Sunday-school rooms, new tower and furnishings, windows, frescoings, seats, etc., will be the best church in the city. W. T. Wells is pastor, and is strong in his work and in the hearts of all the people. All departments of work are flourishing.

The Huntington church has sustained a great loss in the death of Dr. H. C. Grayston who, at the age of 76, passed to his eternal home a few days ago. The Doctor took great interest in the rebuilding of the church house, and every day went around to see how the work progressed. His absence will sadly mellow the reopening exercises. There are few men in any community like our noble Dr. Grayston. Of English birth and education, he and his good lady have been residents of Huntington for nearly a half century and represent the highest culture. I never knew a more perfect gentleman, and as a humble, gentle Christian he nobly impressed all with whom he came in contact. His sudden departure is a great loss.

In Ft. Wayne, P. J. Rice in the West Jefferson and Z. A. Harris in Creighton Avenue, are sustaining the gospel as but few men can. They both have the confidence of the people and will wield a splendid influence there for good. Bro. Rice has long held up the royal banner of Christ, and now in one of the handsomest edifices in Northern Indiana, will continue to build up a strong congregation. Bro. Harris comes from Hiram, O., and like Bro. Rice, is making genuine sacrifices for the cause they love.

E. L. Frazhier is pastor of both our churches in Marion, and has the hearty co-operation of both. This is prophetic of great good in that city.

The writer has engaged his time for every Lord's day in 1899. After the middle of December he and W. E. M. Hackleman will conduct the Indiana Christian. They now have the business formerly owned by W. T. Sellers, and handle all church, Sunday-school and Endeavor supplies that may be needed by Christian workers. They take subscriptions for all magazines and papers, and will supply any book of the Christian Church, or any popular book wherever published, at lowest rates. They are headquarters for all our Indiana people. 15 Virginia Ave., Indianapolis. Send to them at once for your Sunday-school supplies. E. B. SCOFIELD.

Drunkenness Cured

It is now within the reach of every Woman to save the Drunkard.

MR. JOHN M. HATTON.

Mrs. John M. Hatton, of Lebanon, Ohio, said to our reporter a short time ago, I rescued my husband from the terrible liquor habit by a remedy known as Golden Specific. I used it without his knowing anything about it and cured him against his will. It is a marvelous result and only goes to show that drunkenness, when considered as a disease, can be cured, but when it is handled as an immoral craving susceptible to sentiment it cannot be cured. The remedy is put up by Dr. J. W. Haines, 794 Glenn Building, Cincinnati, O., and to every woman who writes him he will send a free trial package of Golden Specific so she can see what it is and how easily it can be used in tea, coffee, milk, chocolate or food, without the knowledge of the patient. I sent for the free trial of Golden Specific because it suggested that I might use it secretly in my husband's food. He had been a hard drinker for years. I tried all sorts of schemes and made every effort I could to reform him, but he seemed to be entirely lost to the influence of liquor, and I turned to Golden Specific more out of hope than anything else. The results were all I could have prayed for, and I honestly believe this remedy will cure any drunkard, no matter how depraved he may be. I am firmly convinced that if other women will send to Dr. Haines for a free trial of this noble remedy they will succeed in their efforts just as I did, and thus have the dollars for the home food, clothing and the children's education instead of their going into the till of the saloon keeper. It's certainly enough to interest every woman who in any way suffers by this horrible liquor curse to write for the free trial package and give it a test.

Puerto Rico Letter.

J. H. GARRISON—Dear Brother: Your readers will doubtless be pleased to hear a word from this new U. S. territory.

We landed at Ponce Oct. 27th, remained there nearly a week and then began our journey across the country toward San Juan, the capital city of the island. Ponce is the largest of Puerto Rico's cities, and to a new comer one of great interest. New scenes upon every side meet the eye of a Kentuckian, or a resident of any part of the United States. A new order of vegetation appears. Even the grass, while it is grass, differs from that we have been accustomed to; where it is uncut or not eaten off it stands higher than my head, and that is six feet. The most striking thing among this sort are the stately cocoa palm trees that, although they have become common to my sight, are still a wonder and delight.

It is not my purpose in a letter to tell you my impressions of the country now. I have been traveling from place to place for over a week, have visited the Southeast Coast regions from Ponce to Guyama, thence to Cayey, an interior town of about five or six thousand, situated in a lonely valley between the southern and central range of mountains. The country round about is most picturesque and rich; indeed the whole country is rich, the very tops of the highest mountains are covered with a verdure almost as rank as the valleys, and every hill is crowned by numerous palm trees standing like silent sentries of the land. In the valleys, on the hillside and on the hilltops are farms with their little triangular and all kinds of angular fields of bananas, plantins, rice, corn (not very much corn, but in the valley it grows well, and we have some ears eight, ten and twelve inches long), and in the lowlands sugar plantations containing as much as 3,000 acres. Everywhere there is some kind of fruit to be seen, most of it used for food by the natives.

We are now at Coguas, another interior city in another rich valley. Coguas has ten or twelve thousand people. In all the important towns United States troops are stationed, and the streets of the city are patroled by a soldier bearing a Springfield or some other sort of gun. Some of these soldiers, by the way, are no recommendation to the American citizen. Some of them seem to think they are so far from home that there need be no restraint upon their actions.

Concerning the question that brought me to this country, viz., its religious condition and its need of the gospel, there can be but one answer: Its religious condition is bad. I often wonder how, under the circumstances, the people are as good as they are. The Catholic Church is the only one here, except an Episcopal mission at Ponce, and they have no church buildings except in the larger towns as a rule. We travel twenty or more miles before we reach one, and that in the most densely populated districts, and these churches are the center and circumference of whatever religious influence there is good or bad. No wonder the people are faulty.

The gospel is needed, and I never saw the place where people were so anxious for something better than they have as they are here. They are eager to learn, schools are in demand and the common folk are most attentive to the story of Jesus. I do not speak Spanish well enough to preach to them in their own tongue, but Bro. W. H. Sloan, a Baptist missionary from the City of Mexico, is my traveling companion, and upon two occasions we have gathered a crowd to listen to the difference between Catholicism and Protestantism. At Aguirre about fifty gathered last Sunday evening, and Bro. Sloan told them that the Protestants were coming into the country; they ought to know what they believed and taught, and in a plain, kind way told them. They sat upon the ground or stood up for forty minutes and listened most attentively, and at the conclusion said they thanked us for bringing such good doctrine. The next morning as we were about to leave two came and wanted to be baptized, but we concluded they were not yet taught and told them to wait.

Upon several occasions in private houses, after a conversation with the family, the whole of them have expressed a desire to become Protestants. Of course they are not ready to take upon them discipleship, being untaught, but it shows how ready they are to leave Romanism. However ignorant they may be in other things, they do know that Romanism has done them no good, and are ready to leave it. We must give them the truth.

I am preparing two lectures to give upon my return, both to be illustrated by stereopticon views; one, "Puerto Rico," which will deal with the island physically, its climate, soil, production, vegetation, etc.; the other will be "The Puertoricans," dealing with the people, their homes, habits, occupations, religion and social environment generally. I hope through these to awaken an interest among our brethren in the evangelization of this island, to the extent that they will put money in the hands of the Home Board, who have undertaken this work, so as to enable them to begin a work here at once.

Yours, J. A. ERWIN.

Coguas, Puerto Rico, Nov. 9, 1898.

Monthly Bulletin from the Foreign Society.

The Executive Committee met in the rooms in Cincinnati, Nov. 18th, 1898. Devotional services were conducted by J. A. Lord.

Finances.—The receipts for October amounted to $7,794.40. Some of this came from a bequest. Some was received on the Annuity plan. The regular receipts for the month are small.

Notes from the Field. India.—Mrs. Crisp writes from Mungeli that there have been three baptisms and that twenty men and women are inquiring about the way of salvation. Miss Mildred Franklin was heard from last at Port Said. There were twenty-five passengers; of these nineteen were American missionaries. Mr. McGavran is devoting the present cold season exclusively to village work. It is believed that as a result of the relief work in the time of famine multitudes are more willing to listen to the gospel than ever before. Mr. Louis Klopsch, of the Christian Herald, proposes to send $300 a year for three years to aid the work among the orphans in India. Dr. Drummond reports the arrival of a young missionary in his home.

China.—Dr. and Mrs. Osgood and Dr. Welpton reached Shanghai safely on the 28th of September. Dr. Welpton will spend the winter at Lu Cheo fu with Mr. and Mrs. Titus. Dr. and Mrs. Osgood go to Chu Cheo. They will be associated there with Mr. and Mrs. Arnold. Mr. Meigs writes that the work in Nankin is moving on finely. There are inquirers all the time. Mrs. Meigs expects to come home in the spring to recruit her health. Mr. Meigs will remain on the field for another year. James Ware has succeeded in getting a suitable place to work right in the heart of the mill district of Shanghai. At the first service the place was crowded. All the Christian women turned out and evinced great enthusiasm.

Japan.—C. E. Garst and H. H. Guy are devoting most of their time to evangelistic work. They find Japan everywhere open to the gospel. One man followed them a 100 miles to be immersed. He and his brother are very zealous. They are both developing considerable powers as exhorters. Mr. Guy is kept busy answering the questions of those who are studying Christianity. At Akozu, where we are carrying on quite a work, there has been great damage done by flood. This is the fourth year that they have been afflicted in this way.

Turkey.—Mr. and Mrs. Chapman arrived in Constantinople in good health. They have already begun the study of Armenian. There are ninety-four children in the school and there are others to go. Mr. Chapman has begun to preach by the aid of an interpreter. John Johnson, of Smyrna, needs a relief fund. In west Turkey the fig and grape crops have failed. Many of the people will suffer much during the winter. A little help will be of the greatest advantage to him. He is also preparing two or three leaflets for publication. He needs the funds to pay for printing these. His faith is in God and in the brethren.

Scandinavia.—Dr. Holck has requested that a strong man be sent to Norway to take charge of the work in that fruitful field. He is not able to visit the churches there very often. Some Norwegian man should be found to aid these churches and to help in planting others. The committee hopes to be able to send a man before the year closes.

England.—J. A. L. Romig has gone to England to do evangelistic work. He expects to hold meetings in several of the churches and to open up work at several new points. L. H. Gow has resigned at Southampton.

Cuba.—The Executive Committee has decided to begin work in Cuba. At least two men should be sent to that field without delay. The sooner these men are sent, the better it will be. The success of the work of Dr. Diaz shows what can be done in Cuba. Thousands of the people have broken with the established church. Many of our own people will pour into Cuba. The work in this field should be self-supporting within two or three years.

Stomach Trouble

Stomach trouble is the common name applied to a derangement of the system which is keenly felt but vaguely understood. It may mean inability to retain food or to digest it. It may mean nausea, pain after eating, fullness, inordinate craving for food, or entire lack of appetite. Whatever it means, there's trouble, and it's with the stomach. If you have stomach trouble, you will be interested in this letter from a man who had it and was cured by

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For nine years I suffered from stomach trouble. I tried the aid of the best doctors of Philadelphia and Pittsburg, and spent large sums of money, all in vain. One day while waiting a train in Bellaire, O., I picked up a paper with a notice of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I got one bottle to try it. It did me so much good that I purchased five more bottles. I took four of them and gained in flesh, my appetite improved, and now I can eat anything. My stomach is all right, thanks to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—CALVIN M. STEVENS, Uniontown, Pa.

The movement seems to be meeting with general favor. Many words of encouragement are coming to us from brethren in different parts of the country. Names are not only coming to us through the mails, but wherever our illustrated lecture is presented it is enthusiastically received. Next week we will publish brief extracts from letters of prominent brethren, college men, editors and preachers.

We herewith submit our third list of names. If you have not already sent in your name will you not do so at once? We want to get the 50,000 volunteers at the earliest possible day.

Our New Home.

I have been here about one week and enjoyed the change from Northern Ohio. I am thankful for favors from the Oracle and Christian Pubilshing Cos. En route I attended Sunday-school and meeting yesterday. Bro. Wallace, the pastor, insisted upon my preaching. I share the hospitality and cabin service of Bro. W. A. Streator. We burn pine knots and tell a few stories. These candles of our forefathers are burning brightly in the houses of many brethren who came here lately to secure timber land and improve farms in a more mild climate. There is room and welcome for more, but the supply of choice bargains is limited. I hope to secure a winter home at least for myself and a few friends. J. F. CALLAHAN.

Acknowledgement.

I desire to acknowledge a very gracious gift that has come to our Bible department library. It is in the shape of about seventy volumes from the private library of our lamented Brother Leroy Skelton, donated by his brothers and sisters, Samuel, Frank and Will Skelton and Mrs. Shockley and Mrs. Ward. Bro. Leroy Skelton was of the class of '66 of Eureka College. He died in '76 while pastor of the Bloomington church, if I mistake not, and is the only one whose name is marked "deceased" on the roll of Eureka's alumni preachers. The books will be kept distinctly as a sweet savor to his memory. Are there not other useful collections among Eureka's friends that could thus be consecrated to greater usefulness?

Lovely whether in the "sunshine state" after the blizzard of Oct. 17 and 18.

Election is over and seems likely that our Populist governor is re-elected. What is more important, it is probable that woman suffrage has carried. Moreover, the dispensary and referendum amendments are also said to be adopted.

The Westerns are rustlers all right, but they do count votes wofully slow in this commonwealth.

Bro. Thomas Reed, of the Arlington congregation, was elected State Senator from the twenty-first district on the Republican ticket.

Miss Pearl Wiley, of Carthage, is singing for D. A. Hunter in Iowa.

Anders Erichstone begins a meeting for the the church at Volga, Nov. 20. He will preach in the Swedish language.

G. W. Elliott is in a successful meeting at Harold.

Several of our C. E. Societies report the observance oi Forefathers' Day.

Good reports are received from the work of L. H. Humphreys at Sioux Falls.

Carthage and Romona are each pastorless at present.

There is a flourishing Bethany Reading Circle at Miller where E. W. Bowers ministers.

So far as we know, W. P. Shamhart, of Aberdeen, and M. D. Alexander, of Watertown, were our only representatives at Chattanooga.

Last year South Dakota sent $382.79 to the F. C. M. S. Even omitting the $100 annuity this is a very creditable gain over the $229.25 of 1897. However, we note with regret that only three of our C. E. Societies contributed to that work.

On Nov. 3 I had a funeral service at 1:30 and a wedding ceremony at 6. What is stranger still, on the same afternoon my M. E. colaborer had the same experience of officiating at a wedding and at a funeral.

Anent Dr. Mac El'Rey's Criticism.

EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—

Dear Sir and Brother: Permit me to say that I had fully decided to take no note of Mr. Joseph H. Mac El Rey's articles on Spiritism till my eye fell upon your editorial reference to the matter of their publication, and upon the expression of your desire that they might serve a useful purpose in calling out an article in response by myself. I have simply this to say: Mr. Mac El Rey's logic is as lame as his rhetoric. His leading argument is the street urchin's retort, "You're another." His plural Latin coupled with English in the singular is quite distressing, but no more so than English plurals similarly outraged. When Mr. Mac El'Rey succeeds in parsing his productions I will attempt to answer them. As they stand they are unanswerable, being for the most part unintelligible. If you desire it, I shall seek to furnish you, as soon as I can command the leisure for its production, another article on this subject. I must ask you, however, to excuse me from making any further reference to Mr. Mac El'Rey's materialization of bad English, and his triple-page seance of inconsequential vituperation.

Very respectfully,

W. J. LHAMON.

Iowa Notes.

Iowa's new secretary, B. S. Denny, is showing what metal he is made of. He recently visited Corydon, Wayne County, where sundry efforts had failed, and in a few days raised a subscription of $2,000 and purchased a fine lot. They will build in the spring. This means another county seat securely occupied.

Drake University has just carried off a championship from five states. Her foot-ball team defeated Iowa College on Thanksgiving day 10 to 16. The Drake team is a Y. M. C. A. team. One of its members is in the ministerial department, and six are active church workers and good church members. The Iowa College team has also a high religious standing. Drake's next honors are expected in the oratorical contest. The judges in the contest are C. C. Rowlison, of Cedar Rapids; S. E. Carroll, of Perry, and State Supt. of Public Instruction Barrett on thought and composition, and J. G. Berryville, Rev. J. E. Cathell and Prof. D. A. Johnson on delivery.

To the Reader of This Paper.

For rheumatism, that foe of mankind, I have a simple remedy which cured me after many years of suffering, and has since proven its wonderful curative power in thousands of apparantly hopeless cases, in fact, so prompt and have been the cure that multitudes of former sufferers consider it nature's antidote for rheumatism. Many a bedridden person, also some who walked on crutches, regained their health through this marvelous cure, and in order that every similarly afflicted reader or their friends may learn about it, I will gladly mail them a trial package with directions for use and other information free, even if more than 15,000 persons should apply. Distressing cases of rheumatism from 20 to 40 years standing yielded to the benign influence of this remedy, of which I mention a few: In Pittsburg, Ind., it cured a druggist whose rheumatism dated back as far as the civil war. In Kenterville, Idaho, it cured a man who was bedridden for 15 years. In Fountain City, Wis., it cured Hon. Jacob Sexaur, a man who suffered for 33 years, notwithstanding employing 7 physicians. In Seguin, Texas, it cured a man who was afflicted for 41 years. In Amsterdam, N. Y., it cured a lady who nearly became insane from pain. Mr. J. T. Carter, of Fork Church, N. C., a reader of the Christian Endeavor World, was quickly cured after suffering untold agonies for many years. Mr. N. H. Spafford, of Newton, Mass., says that through the kind providence of the Lord, he was directed to Mr. Smith's remedy and was quickly cured after suffering for several years.

The original letters of above cures, besides thousands of others, can be seen at my office. No one should dispair, but write for a free trial package and other information. Address John A. Smith, 809 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ministerial Relief.

The Lord's day before Christmas was appointed by the Chattanooga Convention for offerings by the churches to the cause of Ministerial Relief. The near approach of the day makes it important that the preachers begin at once suitable preparations for the offering. It is greatly desired that this, the first general offering to this tender and sacred ministry, shall be so generous as to reflect honor upon the church, and prove truly refreshing to the old veterans, whose closing days are full of sorrowful anxiety concerning their future comfort. We are seeking to awaken a deep and holy interest in the Cincinnati Jubilee Convention, which will be a most notable event in our history. What report shall we bear to that historic assembly, concerning our provision for the care of our old and needy preachers and their companions in service and affliction? The preachers hold the key to the situation, and it is confidently believed that they will not draw back from this holy duty. Brethren of the ministry, lead your churches into the blessed fellowship. They will hear your message with tearful interest and will find pleasure in the service your message reveals. It cannot be that this great brotherhood, so favored of the Lord, will knowingly permit any of their aged and needy preachers longer to suffer for the care which their long and faithful service so well deserves. Let us show our appreciation and gratitude for the heroic service of these messengers of our king, who pray and wait for the tokens of our remembrance. Let us not bring to their declining days the bitter pang of forgetfulness. Brethren, we entreat you in his name, make Dec. 25th a glad and notable day in our history.

If you have not received the last annual report, write Howard Cale, Indianapolis, Ind., and you will receive a copy.

Oregon Notes.

Closed my work at North Yakima, Washington, Oct. 30th, 1898. During the year 83 were added to the church; 50 by baptism. Preached 133 sermons. Calls made, 562. Money raised for missions $152, paying in full all the apportionments of the different boards. For improvements, $250. Money raised for all purposes, $1,402. Personal pledges made for state work the coming year, $135. The church is in a prosperous condition and will continue to grow if a good man is secured for the pastorate. We will ever hold in grateful remembrance the faithful workers of the Yakima church, may the Lord who ruleth over all continue to bless them in their holy work.

Began work here, Nov. 6th, 1898, with bright prospects; two additions at the evening service. While the church has been without regular pastoral care for several months it is in good working order, better than some churches that have settled pastors. The church here is not very strong financially, but some of the best people of Corvallis are among its membership.

This is one of the important towns in the state. Corvallis is a beautiful little city, situated on the Willamette River 90 miles south of the city of Portland, with a population of 3,000. Here is located the Oregon Agricultural College, one of the leading institutions of learning in Oregon. The roll of students is made up largely from the farms of the state; many of them are members of the church and many others attend our services, thus making our influence more than local. We should have a strong, vigorus church here, and we hope that by the grace of God we will be able to wield a strong influence over our young men and women that come here for their education. To this end we need the prayers and sympathy of our great brotherhood.

L. F. STEPHENS.

Set in Order.

Bro. Routh and I found a weak church here—weak financially, numerically and spiritually. They were distracted by many personal difficulties. We have succeeded by the blessing of God in settling all these difficulties and in uniting the discordant elements. We have had four baptisms and one reclaimed. Splendid audiences. God interest. M. Talks to Churches—II.

I. Are You Sure that you are now doing the best work of which you are capable?

II. Are You Sure that the "preached Word," unaccompanied by the "printed page," is able to reach and convert the great "unchurched masses" of our country?

III. Are You Sure that "a Christian paper in every Christian home," and "a Christian library in every Christian Church," would not give our "reformatory movement" such an impetus forward as it has never had before?

IV. Are You Sure that "a rally all along the line," and "100,000 accessions in 1899" can be secured without the aid of such instrumentalities?

V. Are You Sure that if the founder of the Christian Library were kept busy during 1899, holding meetings and placing libraries, that the scattered members of many a church would not be "rallied" to the work again and that many "accessions" would not be added to the churches?

VI. Are You Sure that the delivery of his four lectures on "Paul and Ingersoll," "Is the Bibla a True Book?" "Our duty to Inquirers" and "Infidel versus Christian Literature," if given at the close of a two weeks' meeting, would not pay for both library and meeting?

If You Are Sure you want to try it, write the founder, S. J. PHILLIPS.

Concerning the Orphan Girls at Deoghur, India.

We have had a gratifying response to the call for individuals and organizations to assume the support of seventy-six girls given our missionaries by the British Government when it closed its orphanages. It is most gratifying that a large number of families have each promised to maintain a child. The majority of these families have small incomes. In some of them the payment of the $30 per year that is required will necessitate real self-denial. Our God will abide in such homes and richly bless them.

There are twenty-five or thirty girls for whom support has not yet been provided. They are now being maintained by our missionaries. We desire to assign them at once. Many persons hesitate about undertaking this work lest in future they may not be able to continue it. Those who prefer to do so can promise to support a child during this year, and at its close make a decision whether the work ought to be continued. Those willing to assist in this good work should write me at once.

Cincinnati.

Judging from the number of additions reported in our preachers' meeting. the churches of Cincinnati are once more down to faithful and efficient work.

The Eastern Avenue congregation has called J. A. Pine as pastor. Lockland has secured a pastor in the person of W. O. Thomas. These brethren are consecrated, active young men, and constitute an important addition to the working force of Cincinnati.

Eighteen months ago J. S. Lawrence, seconded by less than a half-dozen workers, started a mission in a hall over a saloon, in Central Fairmount. They encountered many adversaries, but despite all of these, on last Sunday they dedicated to the service of the Lord a beautiful chapel which, aside from the lot on which it stands, cost $2,200. Bro. Lawrence and his coworkers have, in this, achieved a great success and are deserving of much praise. J. S. Lawrence is one of the most consecrated and energetic workers in Cincinnati.

Isaac Selby, of Australia, one of our brethren, has recently delivered a series of lectures in the Central Church of this city, in which he handled skillfully many of the current issues between Christianity and the various forms of modern infidelity and skepticism. At the close of these lectures the "Ohio Liberal Society," through its representative, challenged him to a discussion, which Mr. Selby accepted. The discussion will be held in this city, Nov. 28th and 29th.

"Is Christianity the Religion of Humanity?" Selby affirms; Blanchard, of Cleveland, O., who represents the "Liberalists," denies. "Is Evolution the True Doctrine of the Origin of Man and other Forms of Life?" Blanchard affirms; Selby denies. It seems that some of the brethren are inclined to return to the good old days of polemics and first principles; and why not? S. D. D.

Railroad Rates to Educational Conference, Moberly, Dec. 6-8, 1898.

All roads of the Western Passenger Association have granted a rate of one and one-third fare for the round trip, to the Educational Conference, Moberly, Mo., Dec. 6-8, '98, upon the following conditions: There must be as many as 100 certificates or receipts for full regular fare going to Moberly at a cost of more than fifty cents. You must ask your home agent for a certificate, or receipt for ticket purchased of him, if ticket costs more than fifty cents. If agent hasn't any certificates, get a receipt from him for money paid for your ticket. If you must go over two roads, get certificate over each road. Upon arrival at the conference give your certificate to me to be signed; and if there are 100 of them, the general agent at Moberly will stamp them and you will be entitled to one-third fare returning. These rates only apply to persons buying full fare tickets, costing more than fifty cents. Tickets can be purchased three days before the conference and are good three days after. Any one can have the advantage of this rate who gets a certificate and has it signed by the secretary there. Don't forget two things: to get a certificate or receipt, and to give it to me when you arrive at Moberly. Ask your home agent for any information you may need.

Yours truly, S. G. CLAY, Sec.

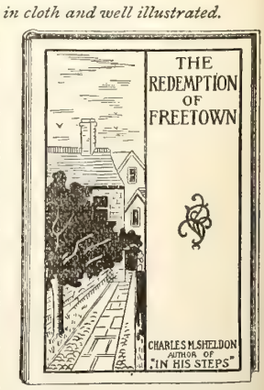
The Redemption of Freetown.

The Latest Story by

CHARLES M. SHELDON,

AUTHOR OF



"In His Steps."

Price, 25 Cents.

Daintily bound in cloth and well illustrated.

A powerful and intensely interesting story of social settlement life.

"The author has felt deeply and written with a good purpose. He sketches vividly the extreme condition of a town given over to vicious influences, and works out his plan of redemption. The story has many excellent points as an object-lesson in reform, and many flashes of fine human sympathy light it up from within."—The Independent.

"Intensely interesting, and will doubtless have as wide a circulation as 'In His Steps.'"—Lutheran Observer.

KANSAS.

Larned, Nov. 24.—Please to report three confessions to this church, our first contribution to the 100,000 for Christ. Everyone seems interested in the forward movement. This will be a glorious year for the Disciples. Church will grant me two meetings to help in this great work.—C. H. HILTON.

Sedgwick, Nov. 27.—Two additions to the church, with all lines of church work improving since I took the work here in July. Will send a list of subscribers by the first of January, 1899. Yours in faith.—A. M. MCLAIN, pastor.

St. Francis, Nov. 25.—W. R. Gill just closed a four weeks' meeting here. The meetings were well attended, and the result of the labor was that 12 young people were baptized and taken into the church.—C. A.

ARKANSAS.

Little Rock, Nov. 25.—George R. Stainer has just closed a fine meeting in North Little Rock, with six additions. He is a fine man, and can be secured for a few meetings in Arkansas. Write him at Argenten, Ark. Care Dr. E. Meek.—W. J. HUDSPETH.

WASHINGTON.

Palouse, Nov. 21.—Two added by letter yesterday.—E. C. WIGMORE.

MICHIGAN.

Fife Lake, Nov. 26.—Meeting in new field two weeks old; 30 gathered ready to organize, and everything coming our way to unity in Christ.—S. BUTTERFIELD.

Buchanan, Nov. 21.—We had 21 more added here last night, and two at the A. M. service; 39 in two nights, and 51 to date.—SCOVILLE & SCOTT.

TEXAS.

Italy.—Percy T. Carnes, evangelist; B. B. Sanders, singer; five additions Nov. 20th; one by baptism.

San Antonio, Nov. 21.—One confession at our mid-week prayer-meeting Wednesday, 16th. Last night one of our Sunday-school boys stepped past his father and took a stand for Christ. The father followed. Then a young lady came. We had splendid audiences at all services. Many of the soldier boys attend, and our Endeavorers are doing all they can to help these boys who are removed from home influences, and their work is appreciated. Our G. A. S. is thriving. I took one confession at the city hospital yesterday.—GEO. B. RANSHAW.

IOWA.

Bedford.—R. A. Omer is assisting Pastor J. W. M. Walters in a meeting here.

Irwin.—D. H. Bays, author of Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism, reports nine added and the meeting continues. Frank McVey, of Concordia, Kans., is his singer.

Wintersett.—Pastor J. M. Lowe and singer, J. Will Landrum, have just closed a meeting with several added.

Laurens.—W. B. Cash, pastor, assisted by a student from Drake University, is in a meeting here.

Dysart.—Wright & Martindale are conducting a siege here.

Delta.—Pastor Fisher is holding our meeting here.

Mason City.—S. M. Martin, of California, will lead the great meeting here in January. Pastor Sumner T. Martin is already preparing for it.

Marshalltown.—Pastor C. C. Rowlison will exchange meetings with Frank G. Tyrrell, of St. Louis, Mo.

Exira.—D. A. Hunter is in a good meeting here. Full report later.

Marne.—J. T. Spurrier is organizing a new band here.

Central City.—D. A. Wickizer is in a good meeting at this place. Our expectations are high and the audiences are large.

Anita, Cass Co.—A. M. Haggard and pastor, C. A. Lockhart, are in a meeting here. Bro. H. preaches four nights and Bro. L. three each week. This enables Brother Haggard to teach his classes in Drake University.

Ninth & Shaw, Des Moines.—J. R. Speck is in a fine meeting here. We hope to report great results.

Keokuk.—James Small, the great interstate evangelist, is laying track for a fine meeting here. Fifteen added the first week. He assists Pastor A. F. Sanderson.

Webster City.—Pastor W. A. Moore is holding his own meeting. A good number have been added. Full report soon.

Burlington, Nov. 28.—Two more added by statement yesterday. Expect to begin a short meeting about the first of the year.—J. H. FULLER.

KENTUCKY.

Walton, Nov. 21.—W. J. Howe, of Centerville, Indiana, yesterday closed a good meeting at Newberg, Ky., with 15 additions; six by baptism, one reclaimed, and eight by statement. The preaching was strong and helpful.—J. W. ROGERS.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Everett, Nov. 21.—Yesterday baptized and fellowshipped two oonverts.—R. H. BOLTON, pastor.

NEBRASKA.

Lincoln, Nov. 22.—Closed a meeting at West Point on Lord's day with 15 additions. E. E. Francis is the untiring pastor. I now go to Rock Port, Mo. Churches desirous of a revival may address me there. Terms most reasonable.—S. W. GLASCOOK, evangelist.

OHIO.

Rutland, Nov. 21.—One confession and baptism at Orange yesterday.—T. L. LOWE.

Bellaire, Nov. 20.—Ten additions in last three weeks. Eight at regular services to-day. Five were by baptism. Two from the Baptists.—C. M. W.

INDIANA.

Rochester, Nov. 14.—One added to our number yesterday and two one week ago.—J. A. LYTLE.

North Madison, Nov. 25.—We had a good meeting at Liberty. Church revived. Ten additions by baptism. Church called me to remain next year. Have not accepted as yet. I begin a meeting at once at Concord Church.—C. D. MAPLE.

Fowler, Nov. 25.—Rev. Thomas J. Shuey, of Valparaiso, has just closed a three weeks' meeting for us here. Ten accessions were made to the church and the church was strengthened and deepened in spiritual life. Bro. Shuey is a strong preacher. All his sermons are good. He is wise and dignified in his work. He leaves the church on a higher plane.—LEE TINSLEY, pastor.

Nov. 24.—The work at Seymour progresses nicely. Work on the new house is being pushed and we hope to get it in closed by Dec. 20. The board desires me to remain there and take oversight of the work until January. I am one of the building committee with authority to push the work. I go to Keota, Ia., in January for a month and while I have more calls now than I can fill in a year, yet I would like another meeting in Iowa while I am there. Some of my greatest meetings have been in Iowa. Any church wanting me and my singer can address me at Irvington, Ind., for three weeks.—H. C. PATTERSON, state evangelist.

MISSOURI.

Canton, Nov. 25.—Meeting five days old. Six added and a growing interest. Pastor and people are holding the meeting.—D. ERRETT.

Kansas City, Nov. 24.—Eight additions to date in our meeting at Sixth and Prospect.—H. A. NORTHCUTT, evangelist; GEO. H. COMBS, pastor.

Albany, Nov. 22.—Prerched last Lord's day at Denver, Worth County; two additions. Will preach at same place on three Lord's days in next month.—A. D. WILLIAMS.

Lathrop, Nov. 21.—Yesterday was a great day for us at the Lathrop church, the Lord giving us four additions to the church, one at morning service and three at evening service. The work here will be in satisfactory condition when I leave, Jan. 1, 1899.—THOS. J. THOMPSON, pastor.

Breckinridge, Nov. 21.—Yesterday we began our work at this place. During the month of October we had three additions at Dawn and two additions at Mooresville.—GRAYSON HUGHES.

Grant City, Nov. 23.—Just closed a three weeks' meeting here with 26 additions. The meeting has been a very profitable one to the church. Bro. N. R. Davis, of Maryville, did the preaching. The brethren were delighted with the sermons. Bro. Davis has made many warm friends among our people. He is an earnest, logical speaker, and has sown seed while in our midst from which we confidently anticipate a great harvest.—W. H. HARRIS.

Plattsburg, Nov. 26.—At Agency, one of my regular preaching points, I have just closed a meeting of two weeks and two days with 30 additions; 25 confessions and baptisms, four from the denominations, one restored. This is my third meeting for this church. I have been called to labor once a month for this church for the fifth year without a dissenting voice.—JAMES C. CREEL.

Kearney, Nov. 28.—The meeting at Kearney closed with 33 additions from all sources. Bro. Boyle stirred up the church as well as the world. He did excellent work in our midst and greatly strengthened the church. Bro. Ridenour and his sweet singing contributed no little to the success of the meeting. The church has called me for another year.—H. S. SAXBY.

Catarrh of the Stomach.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drugstores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. These tablets can be found at all drugstores.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 21.—Three more added here since last report; all by letter.—W. H. BAGBY.

CALIFORNIA.

Pasadena.—Have just closed a short meeting of one week. The results have surprised and made us all very happy. Three thousand and more heard the gospel preached. The attendance averaged over 300—more than was ever known in Southern California. Nineteen were added to the church. At the last service many could not get standing room. Mrs. Princess Long did the singing and the writer the preaching.—J. W. INGRAM.

ILLINOIS.

Casey, Nov. 21.—One addition last evening. Raised $155 to pay the last note against the church.—E. E. BOYER.

Watseka, Nov. 25.—Another added here last Sunday evening at regular services. We are having fine home and church prayer-meetings at present. Preached the Thanksgiving sermon here yesterday in the M. E. Church to a splendid audience.—B. S. FERRALL.

Murphysboro, Nov. 21.—Our protracted meeting closed Nov. 13th, with 11 additions. In the place of the evening sermon, the Endeavorers gave an excellent special program on last evening, at the close of which an invitation was extended and one came out from the Baptists.—W. H. WILLYARD.

Fandon, Nov. 25.—On July 31st I took the liberty of opening the field at Fandon, four miles south of Colchester, my present place of work. I devoted every other Sunday afternoon to the work. I soon found that there was a rich harvest for the Lord waiting to be garnered. Accordingly, on Oct. 24th, assisted by Bro. D. J. Elsea, singing evangelist, of Kirksville, Mo., I began a series of meetings which continued four weeks, resulting in the perfecting of an organization with 33 members. Arrangements have been made and Bro. Elsea has accepted the call and will devote half of his time to the work. They have no church building, the meetings being held in a hall, but the brethren and friends are awake to the needs and the prospects are that a new church edifice will soon grace the little town of Fandon. Thanksgiving day was observed by union services held in the Christian church at Colchester. The discourse was delivered by Rev. Cromley, of the Free Methodist Church. After the services the brethren of the Christian Church repaired to the hall where a public thanksgiving dinner was served. Over 225 meals were served. The brethren and friends very gratefully remembered their pastor with a donation, among which was a baptismal suit. I began the work here last March and since that time have had 96 additions to the church.—F. M. BRANIC.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Miller, Nov. 23.—Preached 29 sermons at Sunbeam schoolhouse. Nineteen additions; 15 confessions. Four from the Methodists, three from the Congregational and one from the Episcopal Churches.—E. W. BOWERS.

NEW YORK.

Syracuse.—Since our state convention, the first of September, I have held a short meeting at Pompey, with 31 added; another at Niagara Falls with 9 added; a longer one with the Jefferson St. Church, Buffalo, with 27 added. I have also spent two weeks among the churches. While at South Benton one night, there was one confession, 68 in all, and nearly all by obedience. The gospel ship can move on in the teeth of bad weather and political storms. Am beginning here with Bro. Edwords.—J. M. MORRIS, state evangelist.

Buffalo, Nov. 25.—The work of the Richmond Church of Christ opens up auspiciously. One addition last Lord's day. Eight additions on the 6th and seven accessions not previously reported. Only two of this number came by letter and all were added at our regular services without special effort. The Sunday-school has surpassed all previous records in its regular average attendance and the prayer-meeting averages more than 100 present every Wednesday evening. We expect to make a special effort for enlargement, beginning with the new year.—LLOYD DARSIE, 291 Ashland Ave.

GOSPEL MELODIES

REVISED AND ENLARGED.

First Lines of Some of the Best Songs in this Excellent Book

Praise Him! Praise Him!
I love to steal awhile away.
Delay not, Delay not.
Softly and tenderly.
If God has riches given you.
Oh, I want to be still nearer.
Where the billows roll the highest.
There is a land beyond somewhere.
Oh, would to me were only given.
The Bible reveals a glorious land.
The voice of the Savior says come.
The path is set with many a thorn.
Oh, the love of God to me.
List to the song of the reapers.
Night with ebon pinion.
In the presence of our God we meet again.
Preaching Jesus on the way.
I ask not earthly treasure.
Oh, bless the Lord, Oh my soul.
There'll be room enough in heaven.
I am going to Jesus.
Broad is the road that leads to death.
There is a home, a beautiful home.
Attend young friends while I relate.
Peacefully lay her down to rest.
In thy name, Oh, Lord, assembling.
Toiling for Jesus day by day.
How sweet 'tis to know.
When our earthly life is ended.
Just beyond the shad'wy valley.
The Lord's our Rock, in Him we hide
Far beyond the rolling Jordan.
Lead me gently home, Father.
How firm a foundation.
Go on, you pilgrims.
Oh, how lovely! (Anthem.)
List to the voice of the Savior.
In our Father's home above.
There is one thought that cheers my way.
Make channels for the streams of love.
I've found a friend in Jesus.
It is the hour of prayer.
When storm-clouds arise in the sky.
I wonder if any poor sinner will come.
Oh, the wondrous love of Jesus.
See the ranks of sin approaching.
A thousand lords had gathered in the palace of Belshazzar.
Glory and praise to the Lord who died for me.
See! on the cross, the Savior bleeds.
There's a city of light 'mid the stars, we are told.
Just over the river are palaces grand.
Christians, are you growing weary?
There is a rock in a weary land.
O pilgrims, look forward to glory.
When the day is full of gladness.
There is a precious fountain.
Beyond the golden sunset sky.
Do you know a soul that's fainting?
Yes, we have a friend in Jesus.
Come now and let us reason.
When the waves are rolling high.
There is a house not made with hands.
Gone from our home.
I am on my journey to Canaan's happy land.
In thy temple, Lord, we gather.
Christ is knocking at my sad heart.
Let me sing the old song o'er again.
I will tell you an old simple story.
I'll rejoice in the love of Jesus.
There's a beautiful land far beyond the sky.
There's a hand ever ready to lift up all the fallen.
All for Jesus, all for Jesus.
There's a city that is far, far away.
When the trump of God shall sound.
Where are the ones we love fondly?
Teach me thy way.
God of our salvation.
Oh, there is joy in believing.
Praise Him, praise the name of God most high. (Anthem.)
Great is the Lord. (Anthem.)
One sweetly solemn thought.
Make a joyful noise unto the Lord. (Anthem.)
Hear the call to labor for the Lord.
Savior while my heart is tender.
Of the old time I'm thinking.
Twilight is stealing.
At home or away, in the alley or street.
Mother, tell me of the angels.

GOSPEL MELODIES contains several good easy anthems that will please choirs and singing societies. It is the only church music book of its class that does.

PRAYING IN THE HOLY GHOST. By Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M. A., author of "A Holy Life." Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago.

This volume of 139 pages, by a devout mind, will be certain to awaken a deeper interest in prayer in those who read it. The vital relation of the Holy Spirit to prayer is shown from many passages. It, therefore, not only emphasizes the value of prayer, but the importance of receiving the Holy Spirit, who is the inspiration of all true and prevailing prayer and of all Christian life and growth.

THE DREAM OF YOUTH. By Hugh Black, M. A., Pastor Free St. George's, Edinburgh. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago, 1898. Price, 30 cents.

A small volume of 40 pages, a gem in mechanical beauty, in literary style and in nobility of thought. Every young person particularly should read it and catch the inspiration of high purpose that glows in its pages. It is based on three texts, one from Joel, one from Paul and one from Shakespeare, and are as follows:

"Your young men shall see visions."

"I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision."

"We are such stuff as dreams are made of."

To all young people who aspire to make the most of their lives our advice is to read "The Dream of Youth."

THE HOLMAN LINEAR PARALLEL TEACHERS' BIBLE. A. J. Holman, Philadelphia, Pub.

Infidels who boast that the Bible is played out, and is being superseded, should take some account of the enormous multiplication of the sacred book of Christians in these days of ours. Of the making of teachers' Bibles there is no end, and each succeeding book has points of advantage over all its predecessors. The last candidate for public favor in this ever-widening field of biblical teaching is the Holman S. S. Teachers' Bible, which combines the desirable features of linear, parallel and self-pronouncing, with a complete analytical concordance and beautiful maps of Bible lands in all the ages of Bible history. It meets a long-felt want with preachers and teachers. It is the book I have been looking for for a long time. Mr. Holman has given us a parallel Bible without remanding the new text to the margin, or putting it alongside the other in a separate column, doubling the size of the book. By this new arrangement both versions are immediately under the eye at the same time, making comparison easy and absolutely without trouble. There is a growing disposition among teachers and preachers especially to use the Revised Version, and yet there is a feeling that the old should not be entirely abandoned. The Holman Bible solves this problem admirably. The body of the text represents the two versions in common; the differences are printed in smaller letters in double lines one above the other; the upper line is the Common Version, and the lower line the Revised. This methed brings the two texts at once under the eye for comparison. I use this Bible altogether in my studies and for purposes of teaching and exposition, because I find it the most convenient and useful in these lines. It does not supersede other Bibles, but is sure to prove itself well-nigh indispensable to intelligent Bible students of all classes. J. J. HALEY.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF OUR MISSIONS.—The title of the book is "Missionary Fields and Forces." The name of the writer is W. J. Lhamon. The number of pages is about one hundred and fifty. Its size is about five and one-half inches by four. It is one of the volumes of the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Courses. Address the Bethany Christian Endeavor Company, 798 Republic Street, Cleveland, Ohio. The frontispiece is a map on which is shown the geographical distribution of the Disciples. On the opposite page are notes on the map. The book contains twenty-one chapters. The first chapter is entitled, "The Primitive Gospel in Modern Missions." The second is a concise and clear statement of facts concerning the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. This is followed by chapters on our fields and forces in India, China, Japan, Turkey, Scandinavia, England and Africa. A half dozen chapters are devoted to Medical Missions. The story of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is well told in a single chapter. The history and work of the American Christian Missionary Society is presented in about forty pages. The chapter on the Religious Conditions in England is a remarkably clear statement of the subject. The chapters on Hinduism, Confucianism and Mohammedanism are philosophical in character and reveal a remarkable breadth of view and an understanding of these religions unusually accurate. An appendix contains the names of all missionaries employed by the American Christian Missionary Society, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Every Disciple ought to own a coyy of this wonderful little book as a vade mecum—a constant companion. W. J. Lhamon struck twelve when he wrote this book. The initial sentence is worthy of quotation in this place as an example of the crisp style in which the book is written. It is as follows:

"The gospel is a revelation. Theology is an invention. It is the office of the followers of Jesus to proclaim the former. The commission of the Master does not include the latter. Christ is perfection, and his work a completion. He is God's last and best word to us; he is the 'fullness of him that filleth all in all;' he is 'man at his climax;' he is 'the moral miracle of history;' he is 'the surprise of the ages;' he is 'the Word made flesh,' and—'We have seen his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.' "

Buy this book. Read it. Carry it in your pocket. Read passages in it to those who do not know what the Disciples are doing in the work of evangelizing the people at home and abroad. You will think better of the Disciples if you will accept and act on this advice. B. B. TYLER.

MAGAZINES.

The student of foreign missions will find the Record of Christian Work for December an unusually attractive number. Under the title of "The Awakening of China" are given three brief articles on the effect of the recent political changes upon missionary efforts, by Dr. Judson Smith, Mr. Robert Speer and Dr. A. B. Leonard. A letter from Dr. Arthur H. Smith, author of "Chinese Characteristics," presents still another phase of Christian work in China, while Rev. Henry W. Frost, of Toronto, describes the "Forward Movement" of the China Inland Mission in another article. In the same number, Dr. Hallock, of Rochester, calls attention to six "Joys that were Born into the World with Christ," and Dr. C. I. Scofield concludes his series of "Plain Papers on the Holy Spirit."

Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, British Colonial Secretary, in his remarkably frank article in the December Scribner's, makes very evident his views on America's relation to colonial expansion. In the course of them he says: "It can hardly be necessary to say that the British nation will cordially welcome the entrance of the United States into the field of colonial enterprise, so long and so successfully occupied by themselves. There would be no jealousy of the expansion of American enterprise and influence; on the contrary, every Englishman would heartily rejoice in the co-operation of the United States in the great work of tropical civilization. From the nations of the Continent of Europe he has nothing to learn except what to avoid. Their system, their objects and their ideals are entirely different from his; and, as he thinks, inferior."

In the first installment of his story of the "Merrimac," in the December Century, which is to be an unusually attractive number, Lieut. Hobson lays no claim to having originated the dea of blocking the channel at Santiago. The sinking of the collier had been ordered by Admiral Sampson, but the commanding officer off Santiago had not executed the manœuver when the flagship arrived, and the working out of the plan, as well as its execution, was intrusted to Lieut. Hobson. The preliminary steps are detailed in this number of the magazine, and in later issues the story of the sinking of the ship and the capture and imprisonment of her crew will be given at first hand. This is the only account of his exploit that Mr. Hobson has written for publication.

The Christmas number of the Pall Mall Magazine splendidly sustains the reputation this magazine has won for its literary and artistic excellence. From one end to the other of its 160 pages it is filled with good things. Among the remarkable contents is a superb photogravure frontispiece, "The Virgin and Child," after the famous picture by Gerard David, and now published for the first time.

The prize poem, "Biopsis," a song of life in contrast to "Thanatopsis," a song of death, will take high rank among the living poems of the day. It was written by Prof. McBeath and is published in the Alkahest, Atlanta, Ga., for November. It is said to be the best poem in the language on life's Christian duties, and would be a blessing and an inspiration to be read many times a year during one's whole life.

MR. ALFRED AUSTIN, Lord Tennyson's successor in the laureateship of England, will contribute to the next volume of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION a poem based on an extremely dramatic and picturesque legend, which is singularly suited for recitation. The story itself is full of interest and color, and the metre is so fluent that even a child can recite the verses with ease and effect.

"Keep Your Heart Warm."

EDWARD O. SHARPE.

There's a sweet line running in rhythmic, rhyming way,
Through my busy care and thinking, all the long and toilsome day;
It is pulsing, it is throbbing, on my soul's sad, lonesome shore.
Or, to use another figure, it's an angel at my door;
Now to give it due expression all my power bows and bends:
"Keep your heart warm to your old-time friends."

Blessed be the days of childhood with their joyous blossom ways:
See them o'er the shoulders in the past's dim, distant haze;
There our playmates circle round us in a gay and happy whirl,
Free and merry boyish comrades and one little sweetheart girl;
O! those years of harping laugnter this blest benediction sends:
"Keep your heart warm to your old-time friends."

Many business cares perplex us—shop and field and pen and plow
Bend the form with heavy burdens, put the wrinkles on our brow;
Many friends come with the sunshine, fewer when the clouds arise,
And earth-voices mock our sorrows when the tears bedim our eyes.
Now I tell you what will help us and our trouble greatly mends:
"Keep your heart warm to your old-time friends."

I have seen (I grieve to say it) dearest friends drift wide apart;
Could it be the spot was vacant where there used to be a heart?
I can't do it. One I've loved once, you may know I cling to him
Through all miles and years between us till the sun and stars grow dim.
So I bid you still be loyal everywhere your pathway tends:
"Keep your heart warm to your old-time friends."

Through Difficulties.

CHAPTER I.

INHUMANITY EXEMPLIFIED.

Mary Ashton was an orphan and lived with her uncle, Oliver Small, who was quite lenient with his own children, but very exacting with others. Her father had been killed on a grain thresher, and her mother died soon after. Mary and her brother Henry, who was some two years her junior, were thrown upon the world without home or means, as their father had been very poor. Mr. Small, their mother's brother, a well-to-do farmer, took the children to his own home. Richard, his second son, went West, taking Henry with him, and opened a small boot and shoe store in a growing town.

"Mary, why are you not out pickin' peas?" asked Mr. Small. "I do declare if you haint got on your go-to-meetin' dress! Whatever do you mean?"

"Why, Uncle Oliver, you told me I could go to school this fall, and it takes up this mornin', so I was gettin' ready to go," Mary answered, moving away from him.

"Yes, I know I did; but Sarah, and Sammy, and Billy all want to go, so you will have to stay at home and help do the work."

Mary burst into tears, but said nothing. She had learned long before how useless it was for her to say anything when her uncle had once made up his mind. She went upstairs to the little room she shared with Sarah, knelt down by the bed and gave way to a paroxysm of grief. When she became somewhat calmer she lifted up her heart to her Heavenly Father: "O, God, let me die! Life aint worth livin'; uncle scolds and whips me, and auntie takes my head off for nothin'; and I can't never see my own brother. O, God, if you are good like uncle says you are, then let me die!"

"What are you agroanin' here for?" asked a sharp voice near her. "Your uncle is a-stormin' around because you don't come on an' go to work. An' here you are, aint even got your workin' dress on yet! That's what folks git for havin' anything to do with other people's children. You would agone to the 'poorhouse,' both of you, if I could ahad my say."

Mary slipped into her working dress as quickly as she could and hastened into the field, glad to get away from her aunt's sharp tongue. The weather was excessively warm. The September sun poured down his torrid rays as if he were trying to set this old world on fire. But Mary labored on, regardless of the heat. At noon she was pale and nervous, and ate but little dinner.

"Mary," said her uncle, "I am goin' to the church meetin' this evenin', and I want you to get them peas all done by night. If there is a one left it won't be good for you, now I can tell you."

Mr. Small was a deacon of Dry Valley Church, was present at all the services, and never missed an officers' meeting. At this particular meeting one brother arose and said:

"Brethren, some of our young members have been disorderly. It has come to me from a reliable source that they have been robbing orchards in the neighborhood. Mr. Brown told me that if he caught them in his orchard again he would prosecute them. Now, brethren, I would suggest that we have a talk with the boys, and warn them—"

"I move that we turn 'em out," exclaimed Mr. Small. "Our young members are givin' us too much trouble. They know better, and I say put 'em out and be done with 'em."

"What are the names of the boys, Bro. Mangrove?" calmly asked the chairman of the meeting, a look of pain and vexation overspreading his face.

"Samuel Stone, Charles Wyman and Silas Small," replied Mr. Mangrove, and took his seat.

"It's a lie!" roared Mr. Small furiously. "I teach my children that it is almost as bad to steal as to murder, and I know Silas wouldn't do such a thing."

Just then the whole heavens were lighted up with glowing flame, a tremendous peal of thunder rocked the church and rain began to pour down in torrents. The church door flew open, and Silas himself burst into the room.

"Pa, come quick; Mary is dead!" he exclaimed.

For a few moments the wildest confusion prevailed, and Mr. Small, scarcely knowing what he did, mounted his horse and, followed by his son, started at a breakneck speed through the rain for home. He found Mary lying on a cot in the dining-room, and the family physician, Dr. Weightman, busy preparing ice to apply to his patient. He looked at Mr. Small sharply, and with withering scorn said:

"Is it possible, sir, that you, one of the wealthiest men in the valley, and a church officer, could be guilty of sending a delicate girl, and that girl your own sister's child, into the fields such torrid weather as to-day has been? If she dies nothing can save you from arrest for manslaughter."

After this tirade the doctor, half ashamed that he had permitted his feelings to so far master him as to cause him to cast professional dignity aside even for a moment, went to work energetically to save his patient. She had been prostrated by the heat, but thanks to Dr. Weightman's skill and to her own robust constitution, she rallied and in a few days was well on the way to health again.

"She will now get along first-rate," said the doctor to Mr. Small, "but she must on no account be permitted to labor in the sun when the weather is warm. Another prostration would mean death."

"There it is again," said Mr. Small. "When you take your poor kinfolks an' try to do a good part by 'em, they've got to go an' get sunstruck, an' be no account. But never you mind, Miss Mary, you can help me all the more in the house. An' I will see if you play off sick next summer like you have this."

Melville, Mr. Small's eldest son, resided in Booneville, the county-seat, which was a few miles away. He came to see Mary, and urged his parents to permit her to visit with him and his wife awhile. "The change of scene and air will do you good, and Laura is anxious for you to come."

Sammy then set up a howl, saying they had promised to let him go home with Melville, but his father ordered him to hold his peace in such a determined tone of voice that he slunk out of the house and said to the other boys that he wondered "what had come over pa."

CHAPTER II.

"WHERE THERE'S A WILL THERE'S A WAY."

Mary did go to Booneville, and while Melville's home was plainly furnished it was so much better than she had been accustomed to that Mary felt she had come to a palace. Melville's wife possessed a small organ, and it was her delight to listen to its harmonious tones. But especially was she delighted that she could attend church and hear her pastor, Mr. Sharon, preach; for he devoted one-half his time to Dry Valley Church and the remainder to Booneville, where he also resided.

"Mary," said he to her one day, "I am sorry you cannot attend school, for you have talents which should be developed. However, I have a number of schoolbooks which I shall be pleased to loan you, if you think you can use them. I shall also be pleased to assist you in your studies all I am able."

"Thank you," said Mary, bashfully, "you are too kind. I wanted to learn to teach school, but couldn't do much because I didn't have no books. Now may be I can learn." Mr. Sharon selected such as he thought would be useful to her.

"Melville, I want to go home," said she soon after receiving the books.

"Why, Mary?" said he in surprise; "I have just this minute written a letter to father to know if you can't spend the winter with us, and go to school here. I thought that would just suit you."

"Yes, it would," she replied, "but I am agoin' back home. They would think I was lazy if I staid here, and I know that ain't so," and she drew herself up proudly.

"No, Mary, you are not lazy, but just as sweet and nice as you can be," said Laura.

Mary found but little improvement in matters when she returned to her uncle's. Their treatment of her was more mild for a few days, but ere long it became as bad as ever. While she worked hard and long, yet she spent all the time she could with her books. Mr. Sharon came over occasionally and gave her some much-needed assistance. After almost two years of hard work and study combined she announced her intention of going to Booneville and pass the examination for a teacher's certificate. This was the signal for a general bombardment.

"How do you expect to pass, Mary, when Sarah failed, and she's been goin' to school every year, while you hain't went at all?" asked Mr. Small.

"You would make a pretty how-de-do ateachin' now, wouldn't you?" said her aunt.

After they had all spent sometime in ridiculing her she arose from the breakfast table around which they were sitting and said: "I am going to Booneville this morning, and if none of you will take me I will go to Mr. Mangrove's. I know he will take me. I would walk if the weather were not so warm."

"It is provoking, Mary, that you should want to gad around now when I have men to cook for; but I always knew you were lazy and good for nothin', just like your pa," said Mrs. Small. Mary was about to retort, but bit her lip and was silent.

"Well, Mary, if you are bound to go, Billy will take you over," said her uncle, whose pride would not permit him to give the neighborhood another choice bit of scandal in regard to his treatment of his sister's child. Upon arriving at Booneville Mary went to Mr. Sharon's, and carefully reviewed all the studies she would be required to pass examination in, and was greatly benefited by his kindly aid and suggestions. She was successful in the examination, and in a few days held her certificate in her hand. After a few more days she returned to her uncle's.

"Yes," said Mr. Mangrove to a group of men at the Valley postoffice, "she has had a tough time of it. But she got her papers, and now I say she can have the school in my district, if I have any say, and as I am a member of the board I guess I have; and she is welcome to board at my house, too. I just want to show Ol Small how to treat a youngster."

Mary did teach the school, and boarded at Mr. Mangrove's. While her school duties were somewhat arduous, her surroundings were so pleasant and she had so much more time for reading and recreation that she felt she had entered a new sphere indeed. At the close of her school she went to Booneville, where she studied music that summer, and attended high chool that winter. The next year she taught in one of the primary departments in Booneville, and at the close of the session announced to Melville and his wife her intention to go West. After a visit to her uncle's family, who now treated her with marked consideration, she left, not without a pang of regret and a sense of isolation, for the Great West. After passing over vast areas of plain and crossing many streams, she at last saw the snow-capped mountains, which rose like huge white clouds in the distance.

"Be good enough to send us a box of Ivory Soap, we used the last this morning."

The grocer has had a lively run on Ivory Soap and is "just out of it." Can he send some other soap that is "just as good"?

"No! I do not think any other soap is just as good; I'll send elsewhere. Let me know when you receive the next lot of Ivory Soap."

A WORD OF WARNING.—There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

CHAPTER III.

MATERIAL PROSPERITY AND SPIRITUAL DARKNESS.

"Westphalia! Change cars for all points North and South!" The brakeman's voice rang out through the car, and before the train had come to a standstill men, women and children were pushing and jostling against each other in a mad scramble for the platform. Mary's heart beat wildly. Westphalia! That was the place where Henry lived. Would he be there to meet her? Almost before she realized it a young man stood before her, looking at her intently, and then he held out a broad hand.

"How are you, Mary? I knowed you the minute I laid eyes on you. How did you leave the governor? Old Oliver, I mean. And that old hyena, Aunt Nell, how's she? I'm mighty glad to see you. You look just like your picture, only a heap bigger. Come on, or they will take you out the other side of old Pike's Peak."

He grabbed her bundles and started down the aisle of the car. The depot and platform were filled with people, and everything was hustle and confusion. Mary stood for one moment upon the car steps, looked far away to the West where the sun, just sinking behind the mountains, was painting their hoary crowns with gold, while his long, bright beams scintillated upon every peak and knoll upon their massive slopes, her heart was filled with rapture, and Isaiah's beautiful picture impressed itself upon her mind: "The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they shall see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God."

Her soul was filled with inexpressible joy, and she walked down the street with her brother, feeling that she had been transported to another world.

A Little Child.

There is no wonder half so great
As is a little child;
Of such as he God's kingdom is,
So sweet and undefiled:
He has an angel's ministry,
And none can serve the world as he.

The wonder of a little child!
A thing of charm and grace;
God dwells with him, and he with God,
He sees the Father's face.
To him the secrets are revealed
That are from coarser natures sealed.

The wonder of a little child!
He smiles, and none knows why.
Perhaps he hears the angels speak,
And whispers his reply,
Perhaps his clear, heaven-lifted eyes,
See through the gate of Paradise.

The wonder of a little child!
He stirs the founts of love;
Hard hearts grow kind at sight of him,
He bears men's thoughts above.
There is no trouble in the bliss
That lingers in a baby's kiss.

Christ called to him a little child,
And held him to his breast,
And set him in the midst of men,
To teach them of life's best;
Who are the great? they asked. Christ smiled,
And pointed to the little child.

Choosing a King.

J. H. WRIGHT.

Fratricidal blood had stained the hands of Abimelech in his efforts to become king. His only surviving brother, Jonathan, challenged the justice of the men of Shechem and Millo in their choice of Abimelech. From a safe eminence he told them how "the trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them." Some desired the olive, Judea's greatest blessing; others the fig, Judea's luxury, and still others the vine, "which cheereth God snd man." Failing in these better selections, "then said all the trees unto the bramble, Come thou and rule over us." The first nominations could not be made unanimous; the last was—but what a nomination! King Bramble chosen to rule over the Cedars of Lebanon! He was a compromise candidate, selected in indifference, contempt and derision.

Something like this is seen occasionally in the political world. Good men of any given party may seek nomination. Friends stand by them, bitterness is engendered, stubbornness follows and a compromise candidate, often obscure or even worthless is selected.

It is true in social life. A man or woman places the heart's deepest affection upon one worthy of its love, but through some slanderous word doubt poisons the mind, love languishes, estrangement follows and in reaction or desperation a union is formed with some unworthy one, "just to get even," or to keep up appearances. Many a woman who loves a man worthy to be likened to the Olive or Fig or Vine turns around and in a moment's pique accepts a Bramble! Blessed be celibacy if its alternative be King Bramble to rule over the heart of man or woman!

Men sometimes make a similar choice in business life. Starting out with eye fixed upon honorable success, disappointed in their expectations, despite education, despite entreaties of loved ones, they choose the bramble of a degraded life. Well do I recall from among the faces I used often to see upon visits to a great asylum, one that attracted my attention and compelled me to ask his history. I learned that at one time he stood at the head of the bar in a great city. By a sinful course he lost standing, grew morose and at last was confined among the insane. What must have been his feelings in lucid moments! Did he not regret that he had chosen King Bramble?

CHOOSING THE REGNANT PRINCIPLES OF LIFE.

1. Each chooses his king. Good and evil are placed before us. Right principles or wrong may be our choice. Some choose deliberately between the Olive and the Bramble. Comparatively few may at first select the latter. It may come by slow stages and be the result of indifference or carelessness. And yet it is a choice. A fire or life insurance policy may demand renewal to-morrow. It is not necessary to deliberately say, "I will not renew it." Neglect is its equivalent, and if your house burns the loss is yours, or if you die the loss is your family's. And so it mat ers little whether it be from deliberate choice or not. If King Bramble reign, he is king.

2. He who chooses King Bramble must suffer. Jonathan prophesied that fire would come from the Bramble (Abimelech) and consume the men of Shechem, and it did. And so is it inevitably with all who choose evil. Nor is its converse the less true. Blessings flow from right choice. Strange is it, when men know the law of sowing and reaping, that they should act with such great indifference or vainly hope that while sowing to the flesh they may reap life everlasting.

But why should this be true? Why may not men do just as they please and be free from penalty? This brings in the inexorable law of responsibility. Restraint must be felt. It is everywhere. You may see a little bird fluttering in its cage and you say, "Poor little bird, I'll set you free." You open its cage, perchance in some great auditorium, and it joyously flits here and there and chirps, "I'm free, free, free," but you know it is not. By and by you open a window and out it goes and you and it sing, "Free, free!" Free from what? "From the cage and the house," you say. It is no longer a prisoner, it's free!" But it soars aloft till with weary wing it returns to earth again. Free? Yes, but there are bounds it cannot pass. And so, in some sense, is man free. No little prison may hold him; he may exult in his liberty, but all around him there is a circumscribed line that bounds the mighty domain of Right. Within is liberty, beyond is rastraint or penalty.

The child first feels this restraint in the home, and a father's or mother's "no" tells him there is a boundary line.

Later on, in the schoolroom, the teacher checks, restrains, and again the boundary line is pointed out.

On the street he grows noisy, disturbs others, interferes with sacred privileges, and is surprised to learn that he is passing the boundary line of legal right, when the law's guardian says, "Stop, or come with me!"

Or he looks with longing upon some evil until a friend whispers, "Remember God's 'Thou shalt not!'" Again he learns that he is not free from restraint.

But the best of all forms of restraint is self-restraint. Toward this all home training, all schooling, all religious instruction should tend. Lead each individual to say, "Restraint is needful for my soul and the good of my fellows. God's 'Thou shalt not' shall be mine. I will choose the right, wherein is freedom. I will reject the evil, wherein is pain. King Bramble shall not reign over me."

3. He who chooses King Bramble allies himself with the side of evil. When even a man deliberately chooses evil instead of good, the Bramble instead of the Olive, he steps to the left and some blear-eyed sinner approaching to give him the hand of fellowship may say, "And so you are one of us!" No need to stand aloof. Your pride and self-respect may keep you from close association with such, but you are on his side. The only way of escape is by penitent return. Don't serve King Bramble just to be consistent!

4. However grand a man's nature may naturally be, serving King Bramble will cause him to degenerate. A patriotic American saw a captive American eagle in a Mexican camp. His patriotism resented the degradation of this emblem of American liberty and he said, "I'll free it. Once more it may soar toward the sun, seek its old-time home on the lofty mountain side, and in its majestic flight through storm and sunshine, fitly represent my country's glory." He bought the eagle, loosed its bands and started it on its flight. For a moment or two it soared as if preparing to brave the sun, and then settled down to eat the offal from a Greaser's camp! So do men degenerate in the service of King Bramble. The noble, the fearless, the pure, the spiritual, all seep away and he becomes an enervated, base, ignoble being. So much for eating at King Bramble's table.

CHOOSING KING BRAMBLE.

Every man who chooses dishonesty instead of honesty makes Bramble king. The mechanic who puts in metal inferior to that demanded in his contract says to King Bramble, "Reign over me!" Every lawyer who forgets the dignity of his calling and panders to the evil in his profession says, "Rule over me!" Every physician endowed of God and by human training to alleviate human sufferings, who yet turns aside to do the behests of "society" in which the social evil prevails says, "Bramble, thou art my king!" Every preacher, fearful of losing popularity, silent when he should speak or speaking what he should not utter that he may please the rich or some Herodias who might call for and secure his head on a charger is saying, "Farewell, Olive, Fig and Vine; Bramble, be thou my king!" God pity them all!

The prodigal son chose King Bramble when he "took his journey into a far country and there wasted his substance in riotous living." Israel crowned King Bramble when they said at Sinai, "Make us gods which shall go before us,for as for this Moses we know not what is become of him," and bowed before the golden calf, typical of Egyptian idolatry. Bramble was crowned, too, when Barrabbas was chosen and Jesus was sent to the cross. Let us beware lest we make the same error.

WHOM SHALL WE CROWN?

Crown Conscience! Let it be Christ-enlightened and Spirit-guided. Then shall intemperance lose its hold, and Mammon seek nobler channels, and self-gratification lose all ignoble meaning because it seeks ever the highest good.

Crown Christ as King! Then shall men be happier, and by and by we shall "see the King in his beauty."

"King Jesus, reign forevermore,
Unrival'd in Thy courts above,
While we with all Thy saints adore
The wonders of redeeming love.

No other Lord but Thee well know,
No other power but Thine confess;
We'll spread Thine honors while below,
And Heaven shall hear us shout Thy grace."

Aimless People.

One of the saddest signs of the times is the large number of young men, and old ones, too, in our villages and towns who have no special aim in life more than to attend to immediate bodily necessities or gratifications. My attention was called to this lately while on my way to prayer-meeting. The streets were lined with men sauntering lazily along, ready to take part in the gossip of the day. Practically all were smoking cigars or cob pipes, and spitting. One may be taken as a type of all. He throws his hat back far enough to show that he parts his hair like a girl, leans against a post, shuts his eyes, scowls, crosses his legs and arm, wags his cigar back and forth like a dog's tail and imagines he's thinking! Chairs are taken out of the groceries and stores, placed on the sidewalk and filled with men who ought at least to be at home allowing their families to share the money spent for tobacco; but instead of that they puff their cigars, break off the ashes with the little finger, spit, grunt, close the eyes, twist around in their chairs, and so spend the evenings.

If any sign of our times is appalling, it is the almost universal use of tobacco by men and boys, and its almost inevitable concomitant of wine. I charge tobacco with a train of evils peculiar to itself, but also as being the vestibule to strong drink. Shame on a man who will burn up five cents in a cigar, and yet will not let his wife fumigate the house every day with five cents' worth of new calico burned on hot coals! The latter would be a waste, but no more foolish than to befoul the whole person with the odor of nicotine.

The case seems difficult of treatment, but I think what is needed is something that will set these men at work on special lines. The rapid increase in discoveries since our civil war seems to have entirely extinguished our sense of wonder, and with that has gone the sense of investigation except with comparatively few. How many boys who use telephones nowadays care a straw how the instruments are made, or would stop a minute to learn? Or how many can tell whether a photograph is a chemical or mechanical product? or whether the moon goes East or West? Well do I remember how boys used to examine and discuss inventions back in the '50s; but that now seems to be all changed.

I would by no means decry the results achieved by the laboring classes during what we may call "working hours;" but what I mostly desire is to suggest some plan whereby their unemployed time may be turned to better account than to loaf on the street and rehash the gossip of the town. Every workingman should inform himself in the higher departments of his trade by reading books written by the masters of that craft, whatever it may be. How many journeyman carpenters in this country have studied architecture as a science? and how many of them have not had the opportunity to do so? How many of them know of the wonderful capabilities of the steel square, aside from measuring inches and feet? How many of them could be hired to read "Hodgson on the Square?" How many printers have ever studied punctuation in all or any of its branches so as to make a sentence clear? Every trade is blessed with a magnificent literature of its own, and yet what a large proportion of the men and boys who work at them are satisfied to pay no attention to their work after the whistle blows!

If it be suggested that we can not always be occupied by our work, and that we must change, I will say that it is just what I want. Instead of the plain drudgery of work, seek the higher ranks by following the thoughts of those who have become eminent in that line. Change upward.

Free public lectures, illustrated, for the workingmen, would be good, and many moral precepts might be sandwiched in. Franklin set a great example in this way for the laboring classes by means of "Poor Richard's Almanac."

The church ought to meet this subject half way by employing preachers who have some knowledge of the ways of practical life, and thereby lead the working classes to feel that the pew has something better for them than the street has. We need to make the young men realize the great capabilities bound up in their nature, and that those capabilities can be developed only by the most energetic use of their time, and by riding a good hobby as they would a wheel—anything but strutting up and down the streets, smoking and living aimlessly.

Here are the stories sent me by members of the Advance Society, when I called for the funniest stories they had ever heard, which they knew to be true. They are a credit to the children who wrote them, and I do not doubt many will be copied into other papers. Of course it is easy to make up a funny story—much easier than to make anybody laugh at it; and many things which seem very funny to us, seem to lose all the juice when we go to write about them. As Lily Gooch, of Ashland, Ill., says, after telling about a boy who tried to drag a calf to water, using rather strong English while he did so—the boy used the English, and not the calf—"It don't sound very funny to write it, but it was funny to see and hear it!" The same is true of a boy told about by Clara Moses, of the same place, who cleaned the joints of a pigtail, strung them on a string, and would make them curl up as if a pig were in front of the tail. The funniest thing that ever happened to Burleigh Cash, of Pennville, Ind., was at his Halloween party, where a jack o' lantern and a baby were the hero and heroine of the evening. And the funniest thing Bonnie Bell Blakey, of Williams, Ia., ever saw was at "Uncle Tom's Cabin," when two men, dressed in funny clothes, marched up and down the stage, saying, "Zig-zum-zig-zum, January, February, March!" Stella Linton, of Wilson, Wis., tells about four-year-old Charlie, who said he believed in immersion, much to the regret of his kitten, which he was baptizing, and which doubtless would have preferred to belong to another kind of church. Albert Davis, of Jacksonville, Mo., tells of an Indian who went to an Idaho city to buy a buggy. As they were all sold he bought a hearse, put his wife in it, and went pulling it out of town himself; said that was good enough for him!

My little friend was given a quarter to put in the contribution box. On her return from church her mother said, "Daughter, did you put in that money?" "No ma'am." "Why not?" "The sermon wasn't worth a quarter," returned the little girl.—(Roberta Broadhurst, Louisville, Ky.)

When my papa was a little boy, he had a friend named George Tyler. They started to school for the first time; both sat together. When the teacher asked papa his name, he pointed to his little friend and said: "There's George Tyler—he can tell!" The next day when they reached the schoolyard a long line of boys perched on the fence began to drawl, "There's George Tyler—he can tell!" And for years after, whenever papa asked a question the scholars would sing: "There's George Tyler—he can tell!"—(E. Witmer Pardee, Snyder, N. Y.)

Some one gave our neighbor's little son a New Testament for a prize. He began to read it through. One day he was asked how far he had read. His answer was: "I have got as far as two-eyed Peter." (II Peter.)—(Ella Harness, Exline, Ia.)

Two little boys wearing white hats, got on the train with their mother. When they reached their destination one of the hats was lost. Suddenly one of the boys exclaimed: "There it is, over there!" His mother did not see it, but she said: "Well, get it, then." Now, an old gentleman was asleep on one of the seats, with his bald head resting on the edge. This is what the little boy had seen. He made a lunge and grabbed the old gentleman by the head while the passengers roared with laughter. The old gentleman started up, stared about him and got his head on the other end of the seat. —(Nora Cunningham, Cloverdale, Kan.)

Little Jamie thought he would be great like George Washington, and as he didn't have a hatchet he took the carving-knife and hacked a nice young cherry-tree. Then he said to his grandfather: "Grandpa, I did it." But his grandfather didn't think he had done anything to be proud of and threatened to whip him if he did so again. Jamie burst out crying and sobbed: "What for, didn't George Washington's papa spank him?"—(Breckenridge Wayne, Reynolds, Ill.)

A little girl seeing the moon when it was just about half full, said to her mamma: "Now, now, moon's boke; but," she added, "Dod'll fix it." Another time, as she and her mamma were walking in the yard in the springtime, she asked, "What kind of a cute 'ittle see (tree) is this, mamma?" Her mamma said, "It is a little pine tree." Then I said, for I was this little girl, "Oh, we can have pine pie, can't we?" —(Minnie B. Snyder, Milton, Ky.)

A five-year-old girl asked her mother, "How will we get up to heaven when we die?" "I expect we will fly up." "Will we have wings2" "I guess so." "Will we have fevvers?"—(Myrtle Blanchard, Barnard, Mo.)

One day a little girl named Lavinia, seeing a man whose hair was getting gray said: "O, look at that man, nothing on his head but snow!" Then as she looked closer, she added, "Awful dirty snow, though." Lavinia's playthings were always on the floor. One day her grandma tied strings around the dolls' necks and hung them up, telling the little girl it did not hurt them. Sometime after, the grandmother exclaimed, "Well, child, you are always in the way!" Lavinia went up to her and said, "Hang me up grandma; hang me up!" Lavinia came in from play one day and said: "I saw the most pillow-slip bugs out there!" Her cousin, wondering what she meant, went out in the yard with her and found several gray caterpillars.—(Jessie L. Butler, Roseville, Ill.)

So there you are—thirteen funny stories. The story that is funny to one, sometimes doesn't seem funny to another. So if any of these don't seem funny to you, laugh twice as hard over those that do, and thus all the stories will get through. Up to last Monday week (the time of sending this to press) 66 had joined the Advance Society. By the time you see this the number will be climbing higher. This means that our society has succeeded. I thank you who have helped me to see its success. It makes me very happy to know that so many children, from New York to California, are spending a little time every week in improving their minds, and thus preparing themselves to more thoroughly enjoy life. For no people are so happy as those who have learned to love the higher kind of literature. It is fun to make battenburg, and fun to go fishing, too. But all this is nothing to the pleasure to be gotten from a good book when the fire burns bright and it looks cold and desolate outside the window.

Now the person who only cares to read trashy stories and the daily papers are like people who only care to associate with ignorant and idle company. Since it is the duty of every boy and girl to make the very most of himself, and make all the powers of the mind and soul grow, it will never do to neglect history and poetry, since they are steps to a higher kind of life. A boy or girl who isn't going to read the right kind of books because play seems more fun all the time, might as well have a watermelon for a soul, planted in August; if you know anything about watermelons, you know if they are planted in August they will never get red inside as a watermelon should. It is all well enough to say you will read history and poetry when you are grown, but you won't do it unless you begin young. And the person who grows up disliking this kind of literature has a soul with something lacking. Now I want to have a soul with all the parts there, and I am glad you do. I hope you will tell your friends about this society and ask them to join, and explain the five resolutions. It does look as if I were going to preach a sermon, doesn't it? and after all those funny stories, too!

Next week we will have another chapter of our continued story, telling how George and Jenny Weston started an Advance Society in their town. The week after our page will be devoted to letters I have received from our members, telling their names, ages and what they do and what they like; it will be an old-fashioned chat between us, and will seem like a family gathering.

JEREMIAH'S ROLL DESTROYED.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The reformation wrought by Josiah, beginning with the discovery of the law book in 621 B. C. completely changed the current of affairs in Judea. The heathen party was thrown out of all ability to accomplish its purpose, and idolatry was banished from royal recognition. This condition continued to the close of the reign, increasing in extent as the king widened the sway of the true religion, and destroyed the centers and symbols of the false. But just as in the case of Amon, his father, death cut short his career and left the hopes of the ruling party in ruins. With the death of Amon came the downfall of heathenism, with that of of Josiah came its restoration; and to the prophetic party the blow was all the more difficult to bear because the tragedy was needless. The king should have lived many years yet to round out a rich and fruitful life. In the year 609 Josiah was firmly established on his throne and had about completed his work of reformation. He was the vassel of Assyria, whose king, Esarhaddon II., the Sardonapolus of the earlier historians, was but a weak successor to the great kings of former years. Nevertheless, Josiah held fast to his allegiance in faithfulness, and when Necho, the king of Egypt, started for the north to dispute the world's empire with Assyria, Josiah, relying on God and feeling the obligation to oppose an enemy of his master, threw his little army across the path of the Pharaoh at Megiddo. But disaster ended the attempt; he lost his life, either in battle, or as seems more likely from the account, in a parley with the Egyptians into which he was entrapped. The grief and despair of the faithful may well be imagined. The corpse of the king was brought to Jerusalem amid great lamentation and buried in the royal sepulchres, and a day of mourning for annual observance was established in memory of the tragic and mysterious event (2 Chron. 35:24, 25). Josiah's attempt to stop the Pharaoh had been a sumpreme example of trust in God; and yet God had abandoned him to death. Was this the reward of all his zeal in behalf of the true religion? It is often a hard lesson to learn, that presumption is not faith. Josiah had plunged into needless danger, and his expectation of safety and victory was nothing less than tempting God. Safety is promised only to those who "dwell in the secret place of the most high," and the command is evermore, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." The death of Josiah brought corresponding satisfaction to the heathen party. It seemed to prove that the divine displeasure rested on the career of the king. A great reaction came, and heathenism once more lifted its head as the official cult of the land.

Meanwhile Jehoahaz, a son of Josiah, had been placed on the throne by the people, but the king of Egypt was not pleased by this arrangement and after three months deposed him and placed on the throne Eliakim, another son of the late king, changing his name to Jehoiakim and imposing on the country a heavy fine. The unhappy Jehoahaz he carried to Egypt where he died. The reign of Jehoiakim perpetuated the supremacy of the heathen party. In him Mananseh seemed to live again. His reign of eleven years (609-597) exhibited all the worst featuers of a weak, capricious, headstrong and dissolute monarch. Twoyears afterhis coronation the fall ofNinevah changed the map of the world. The Assyrian dominion gave place to the Babylonian under Nabopolassar, whose great son, Nebuchadrezzar, became as great a terror in the west lands as Tiglath Pileser had been in the days of Isaiah. In 604 B. C. the Pharaoh made a supreme effort to assert his power, but the Babylonian army completely overthrew him, and from that time on Egypt gave up its dreams of empire (2 Kings 24:7). But even after Nebuchadnezzar had asserted his sovereignty over the land the foolish Jehoiakim rebelled against him and brought upon himself and his land the horrors of war, though he himself seems not to have suffered as did his successors.

During all this period Jeremiah had been at work as a prophet. He was the son of a certain Hilkiah of Anathoth, a priest village not far from Jerusalem. He was one of that little company of men who formed the nucleus of better things in the opening of Josiah's reign and co-operated with the king in his great reforms. His call to the prophetic ministry came in 626 B. C., when he was still quite young (Jer. 6:1-6), and his earliest preaching (chs. 1-6) was devoted to denunciations of the moral condition of Judea, and warnings of an enemy from the north who would bring destruction for the national disobedience. At this early date Jeremiah clearly foresaw the Babylonian invasion and the distress that would fall upon Jerusalem. Then came the discovery of the book and Jeremiah's mission to preach "this covenant" throughout Judah (11:1-8). But he found much difficulty in persuading men to to obedience, and chiefly in his own town of Anathoth, where his life was threatened (11:9-12:6). In spite of all dangers these must have been happy years, for the prophet and the high priest were in close sympathy with the king, and their work was sure to triumph in the end. But the king's tragic death broke short all these hopes and left the reformers without a protector. Jeremiah might well play the part of chief mourner at the royal funeral (2 Chron. 35:24). Idolatry came back like a flood and the prophet bowed his head in sorrow, or uttered his voice in indignant protest against the folly of the time (chs. 7, 10, 26). From 608 to 604 he preached against the odds of popular disfavor using a drought as a sign of God's anger, or a potter and his work as examples of divine selection; while the prophet himself more than once felt the touch of persecution in scourging and imprisonment (chs. 14, 15, 18, 19, 20). In 604, the first year of Nebuchadrezzar and the fourth of Jehoiakim, he predicted the seventy years of captivity in Babylon (ch. 25), and taught a significant lesson from the steadfastness of the temperate Rechabites (ch. 35). The battle of Carchemish, which occured a few months later, was described, together with the woes that should fall upon Egypt (ch. 46) and the other western nations through the Babylonian power (47-49). This point had been reached in the work of the prophet at the date of our lesson in 603 B. C.

It may be easily understood how difficult was the position of Jeremiah during the reign of such men as Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim. The death of Josiah left him to fight alone. Those who held fast to the true religion were probably numerous, but they could not contend against the royal will. Under such conditions the utterances of the prophet were in danger of being lost. He was accordingly directed to gather into a roll or book the substance of his preaching hitherto given. Baruch, his faithful servant, was set at the task and Jeremiah dictated to him the important utterances of the past years. It was unsafe for the prophet to show himself at the court or even in Jerusalem. He accordingly directed Baruch to stand in the temple corridors where the people assembled and read to them its contents. Not long after the celebration of a fast in December of the year 603 B. C. brought a great throng to Jerusalem, and Baruch seized the moment as favorable for the public reading of the roll. This brought it to the notice of some of the court officers favorably disposed to the faith, and they secured a special reading of the book by Baruch at the palace. The men who listened were terrified by the tidings and anxiously asked Baruch how the roll came into existence. When he told them Jeremiah had dictated it, they agreed, not without fear of the result, to bring the matter to the king's attention. The warnings of the roll should certainly be understood by Jehoiakim. But they knew his violent temper and cautioned Baruch to take care of himself and the prophet.

When the matter was told to the king he ordered the book to be read before him. Curiosity may have carried him so far. But when a few pages had been read and he understood their purport, he angrily drew his knife and slashed the parchments into fragments, casting them on the fire by which the hall was warmed during the rainy winter season. The reckless courtiers only laughed at the king's mad act, though the more serious had trembled at the reading by Baruch. Thus Jehoiakim thought to dispose of the prophet. He could not find the man; he could only destroy his roll. But not so do the messages of God fall to the ground. Another roll, in which all these utterances and many more were set down, was prepared by Baruch—a book which was probably the original of all the earlier portion of our book of Jeremiah.

Thus, as always, the effort to destroy the Divine Word was thwarted. Persecution, suppression, ridicule, rationalism have all been used in the assult on the Bible, but without avail. Men pass away, but it abides, for "all flesh is as grass, and all the goodness thereof is as a flower of the field. The grass withers, the flower fades; but the Word of our God shall stand forever."

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

Even in a wicked court or city there are usually some good people who try to make conditions better. The king would not even listen to the words of the prophet; a few pages alone would he hear; so do many to-day refuse even to hear what might bring them life. The knife and the fire are the symbols of all those means by which men have tried to destroy God's Word. Bad companions always encourage one to sin against self and God. It is a noble thing to protest against evil, even if it seems to be without avail. Even if the king had found Jeremiah and killed him, the prophet would have been far better off than the wicked king. If one good thing is destroyed, others spring up in its place; it cannot perish. Men never escape the results of sin by denying them, or trying to destroy them. Whether the prophecy of Jeremiah against Jehoiakim was fulfilled in exact terms we are not told, but his state of soul was itself the most awful that could befall him. God's Word is destined to prevail and fill the earth.

SCALP HUMOR
CURED BY CUTICURA

I was suffering tortures from a diseased scalp. I was scratching my head from morning till night. Little pimples broke out all over my head. I had no rest. I washed my head with hot water and CUTICURA SOAP, and applied CUTICURA as a dressing. Now my head has n't a pimple on it, and my hair is growing splendidly. ADA C. HARRELL, 330 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

I thought I would go frantic with itching scalp humors. I lost considerable of my hair of which I had an abundance. I tried several remedies, they failed. I tried CUTICURA SOAP, relief immediate, itching completely gone. Mrs. M. JUDAN, 246 Halliday St., Jersey City.

TOPIC FOR DEC. 11.

THE MINOR VIRTUES AND THEIR IMPORTANCE.

(Phil. 3:12-14; 4, 8; Matt. 5:48.)

It is difficult to say what virtues are minor and what are most important—quite as difficult as it is to say what sins are big and what are little. If the virtues spoken of by Paul in the Philippian letter may be considered minor, they are certainly nevertheless of vast importance. Let us consider them in their order.

Whatsoever things are true. He means true, not in the narrow sense of veracity, merely, but in the larger sense of the word. Men may not tell lies and still not be true, steadfast, firm; but he who is true in the wide sense of that term may be counted upon in all relationships of life and never vary. He is the same towards all and at all times; he is sincere, honest and upright; he is like the sun that shines with an unwavering light, like the stream that flows with an unchanging current, like the great balancewheel that revolves unswerving upon its axis.

Whatsoever things are honorable; reverend, the Greek word means. Things worthy of reverence; and alas, how lacking our average American is in this regard. "He flouts the law he makes, and makes the law he flouts." Sometimes he reveres neither God nor man; he sits in the house of God before the services begin—he or she—chattering like a magpie, moving about, shaking hands instead of reverencing a holy place and a holy time and preparing for the service of God.

"Whatsoever things are just." This word, too, is used in its larger sense of righteousness. Mere justice is not always a virtue; we may "miss the law of kindness, when we struggle to be just." Paul was not simply just, he was more; Jesus was not merely just, he was righteous and merciful; teaching all men (both Paul and Jesus), that righteousness was the aim of life.

Whatsoever things are pure, in the larger sense of stainless, not simply chaste. Purity of thought, purity of purpose, purity of motive, purity in business, purity in ambition, purity in church life, purity in all relationships and in all work, Paul means. We have narrowed the term too much. Christ said, "The pure in heart shall see God;" he meant those upon whose hearts no breath of tainted selfishness had fallen like a blurring mist, to hinder the vision of God which descends like light from above. Unselfish motives and deeds of every kind must be included under the name of purity.

Whatsoever things are lovely; that is, aimable, worthy of love, all those unnameable little deeds of kindness, of courtesy, of helpfulness which are wafted out from some lives like perfume from flowers. It is these of which the courteous and kindly apostle was thinking. Amiability may sometimes degenerate into insipidity, but it then becomes unlovely, it is no longer lovely. But when one thinks of the character of the amiable Master, with his kindliness, courtesy, strength and firmness, one realizes what was meant concerning him when he was called "The Lily of the Valley," "The Rose of Sharon," "The Chiefest of Ten Thousand," "The One Altogether Lovely." Renan calls him the "charming Rabbi."

Whatsoever things are of good report. Not "well spoken," "well reputed," but in the sense of fair speaking, winning and attractive. This word has very much the sense of the preceding one, lovely. There is not a strong distinction, but the thought of fair speaking is in itself a very attractive idea, one who always speaks well of every one, whose reports are good reports wherever it is possible to make them good, is surely a winning character.

Upon these six things, says Paul, we should think. It is on the very thoughts of these virtues that he lays emphasis. Virtue or vice may be a thing even of the thoughts.

Reading the Bible by Books.

J. Z. TYLER.

The Bible is a unique library, composed of sixty-six unique booklets. These booklets were written centuries apart. They include law, history, poetry, proverbial philosophy, biography, prophecy and psalmody—almost every variety of literature. They were written by different men, at different times, under different specific purposes. And yet they are all bound together by such inward unity as to constitute one great book. It is not a mere aggregation of booklets, but a common spirit animates them all; great and growing common thoughts bind them together into a harmonious whole. These books came together, not through some human and external authority, but by an inward and spiritual affinity.

One of the best ways of studying the Bible is to take one of these booklets at a time. This is the plan pursued in our handbook prepared by President McGarvey and used during the first year of Bible study of our Bethany C. E. Reading Courses. After a few brief definitions, a brief general outline of the Old Testament and a brief sketch of the original text and its preservation, our handbook proceeds to consider each of the sixty-six booklets of the entire Bible. In each case the general characteristics and contents of the book are briefly but very clearly indicated. The historical thread running through the entire narrative is always kept in view. This handbook is not meant to be used as a substitute but, as its title indicates, it is to be used as "a guide to Bible study." The Bible itself is the object of our study and we make our first tour through the Bible, taking a book at a time.

Of course, it is impossible to make a critical study of these books. The purpose is to form an accurate acquaintance with them, to become somewhat familiar with the general scope and contents of each book, the main divisions of this divine literature and to gain a good bird's-eye view of the entire Bible. The study of special parts, of important persons, of fundamental doctrines, may be taken up later. Our first need is the need of an accurate general knowledge of the entire volume from Genesis to Revelation, and this we undertake to gain in our first year's study by rapidly running over the entire sixty-six books, taking one at a time.

There are certain advantages in this method. First of all, it is the natural method. The Bible came into being by the production of a book at a time, and each book still retains its own individuality. If we are, therefore, to have an accurate understanding of the Bible just as it is, if we are to know what it claims for itself, we should pursue this natural method of investigation. In the next place, it is the most interesting method. It makes the most direct appeal to our intelligence, aiding us very much in a rational understanding of the entire collection. No other book is treated in such an irrational manner as is the Bible by the average reader. To read it by chapters, to dip in at one place to-day and another place to-morrow, to read brief sections here and there without regard to the persons who wrote them, the circumstances under which they were written, the purposes for which they were written, or the period in which they were written, is to misread the Bible. In all our study of the Holy Scriptures we should never forget that "God, having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son" (Heb. 1:1).

This method of study enables us the better to apprehend the progress of revelation, and to understand that all portions are not of just the same worth to-day. The Bible is the record of a growing revelation that culminated in the gospel of Christ. Its progress is marked by larger, truer, higher ideas of God. In its requirements it moves from the outward to the inward, from external restraints to inward principles, from law to love. Its progress rises from the temporal to the eternal, from the earthly to the heavenly. Its progress is broadly marked by three dispensations which are generally designated as the Patriarchal, the Jewish and the Christian. While these three dispensations have fundamental principles in common, while each are divinely given, it is of great importance that we mark their boundaries in our study of the Bible. The failure to do this is the source of much confusion. The Patriarchal dispensation, speaking broadly, covers the entire period from the beginning down to Moses; the Jewish embraces the entire period from Moses to Christ; the Christian dispensation began with the coronation of Christ and continues to the end of time. Its message is a message to all men. All that went before was preparatory; this is final. The gospel is complete in itself. It has its own Lawgiver, its Priesthood, its Mediator. It establishes the long-promised kingdom on a new foundation, with new subjects, new terms of membership, a new name, a new life, a new destiny.

These are some of the general features to be noted as we pass the sixty-six booklets of the Bible in rapid review.

STACY.

S. S. Stacy was born at Cherry Hill, Pa., June 11, 1846. In childhood his parents moved to Northern Ohio, where he was married at Geneva, Nov. 13, 1867, to Miss Mary L. Brown. He was baptized by R. G. White in September, 1869, and united with the Church of Christ at Geneva. In the spring of 1870 he moved to Nebraska, which he made his home until the fall of 1894, when failing health led him to seek the warmer climate of Arizona, where he died on the second day of March, 1898, at his home near Phœnix. Bro. Stacy was a man of high ideals. In business life his conscience was tender beyond all customs usually considered just. In his dealings with men he let no matter rest until satisfied that he had obeyed the precepts embodied in the Golden Rule. Without regard to what some would have us believe he proved that honesty and at least a fair degree of prosperity can go hand in hand, and was ever found zealous in business, "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." To him principle was the first consideration, and questions of policy seemed wholly outside his thought or care. While he had early received religious instruction, yet when he came to Nebraska our plea and actual church life and work were still new to him; but in a recently organized church, which he found at Bower, he had ample opportunities for work and development, into which he entered with devotion and faithfulness. Though still young, he was ere long chosen their deacon. To this trust he was most constant, and as this quality, as well as his foresight and judgment, became apparent to the little band he was in a few years chosen their sole elder. Now, more than before, the interests of the church became his interests; and his first thought and the main theme of his conversation was how to best advance the cause of Christ. Whether the distance to church was four miles, as for some time, or two miles, as at a later period, he was always at his post in attendance to duty. His business was to serve his Father, his secondary care to provide for earthly sustenance. In the latter duty he was ever industrious and careful. Using his earthly goods, however, rather as a trust than a possession, he did not tithe his giving; he could not stop with a tenth. Under his care and oversight, and of one who was later chosen to work with him, the attendance at services was increased from about 20 to over 100. A church and later a parsonage was built. Thus 15 years were passed, but death claimed some of the tried and older members and new men and methods displaced the workers of other years. Poor health now caused him to seek as a home a new location, which resulted in the selection of a farm six miles from Phœnix, Arizona. To this he with his family moved in September, 1894. Here, in spite of physical disadvantage his energy did not wane. Where little grew he left a green field of 160 acres, with trees of his own planting, now large and beautiful. Here, as elsewhere, he seemed needed, and though still a stranger confidence was at once reposed in him, and he was pressed into service for the public good. Soon selected as one of the school officers, he collected nearly all the money paid at the time of his death. A new schoolhouse was erected with extra room for church services. This was the last public work in which he served. Death came to him suddenly, almost instantly. As he was walking with his son in the road near his home he was taken with hemorrhage of the lungs, and only lived to call his son by name. The news came as a shock to the community as well as to his friends elsewhere. School was at once dismissed, and did not resume its sessions until the last respects had been paid. The funeral services were held from the home and were conducted by Bro. Cal Ogburn, of Phœnix. The Scripture lesson was read from 1 Cor. 15:46 57, and Rev. 21:1-7, and on the 3rd of March all that was mortal of Bro. Stacy was laid to rest. He leaves a wife, a son and daughter to mourn his absence, to miss the thoughtful love and care which had so long been theirs. Two small children have preceded him. The above tardy tribute gives but a brief outline of his life and services. Those who best knew him can in remembrance supply much of what is missing. Though the friendship and counsel of other years will be missed, we are still grateful for the pleasant memory, for the life, though not always understood, yet whose influence for integrity and faithfulness combined with charity can never be lost. Symposium on Our National Conventions.

The following additional contributions to our open parliament on our National Conventions have been received:

1. I would suggest that our conventions could be greatly improved by increasing the number of committees, and thus considering more carefully the reports of our boards and discussing more fully all questions pertaining to the interests of our missionary work. Instead of a half dozen committees with perhaps five persons to each committee, thirty or thirty-five delegates out of 500 or 1,000, there should be ten or twenty with from seven to fifteen members, enlisting a hundred or more delegates directly in the work of the conventions and subjecting every matter of importance to the most careful consideration on the part of our most thoughtful men and women. Our conventions are altogether overrun with speech-making. We must give more time to business. This can be done by distributing the work among wise committees and using the time now occupied with big speeches, symposiums, etc., for the discussion of committee reports. This will insure also a more regular attendance on the part of delegates because of their personal interest in the proceedings and a more enthusiastic support of all measures on their return to their home fields, for they can say in the words of Virgil, "I was a part of these things."

2. This suggestion applies to the Jubilee Conventions. Let us enlist the business men and the young people, the educational men, the pioneers, the literary folks, the musical element, the Sunday-school experts, those specially interested in charities and social settlement, the evangelists, the editors, all the different classes among us in features of the work which have special claims upon them. Let us give particular attention to our weak points. Let us have a just consideration of all our interests. Let us make special effort to enlist our brethren who are not in full sympathy with our missionary societies. Let us have a great big, brotherly thanksgiving feast and get all the family together and make them all happy and united in our glorious cause.

F. D. POWER.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 19, 1898.

The first question is that of our capacity to receive. Because Bellflower apples are superior in quality one should not be expected to eat a bushel in one day, nor to consume a barrel of allwheat flour in a week for the reason that that is the most nutritious food. The C. W. B. M. and the Foreign Society get through their work very well. The problem is to equitably set forth and adjust, in two and a half days of seven and nine sessions, all the interests represented by the Home Society. Every interest, including the Evangelistic, Church Extension, Negroes, Education, Christian Endeavor, Ministerial Relief, Sunday-school and Statistics, is entitled to time enough for the submission of the report and one formal address. All of these, except the general address, like that of George Darsie at Chattanooga, should be rigidly kept within thirty minutes' limit, some of them less than a half hour. If the special advocates of education, or Endeavor or any other interest, wish more time let him find it in separate or sectional conferences. To give an entire afternoon to Christian Endeavor is out of all proportion. The evangelistic work of the Home Society is entitled to the hearing of the whole convention. If different fields need emphasis that may be arranged for pending the motion for the adoption of report of committees on those fields.

N. S. HAYNES.

Eureka, Ill.

1. I would make the program so that each convention should have at least one meeting before the Lord's day. As it appears now the different conventions, C. W. B. M., Home and Foreign, have in some measure a different constituency and class of attendants. It should be so that all who attend the conventions would attend with equal interest all sessions. The evenings should be given to gospel sermons, at least a portion of them, for many attendants would like after a day of business a strong and helpful sermon at night.

2. An address on the convention of '49 should be made with a brief sketch of the leading characters of that time; in fact, of all of them as far as known. It might not be practical to deliver the whole address, but it could be printed.

D. R. LUCAS.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 21.

I am very much in favor of the course advocated by Bro. G. A. Hoffmann, of Columbia, Mo., in reference to conducting our Jubilee Convention next year. Our two missionary societies should be in charge of the same head, and all moneys donated for missionary purposes should be equally divided, only when the donor specially requests it for one or the other. And the Ministerial Relief could be in the same hands and a part of the missionary funds appropriated to relief in that way. All funds that I should contribute I would be willing for an honest board to divide as they thought best for the interest of the cause.

Publishers' Notes.

"KING SAUL," by J. Brechenridge Ellis, is fresh from the press and contains a story that will be read with deep interest. It is a vivid recital of the history of the first king of Israel. The author begins his story by relating the marvelous manner in which Saul became the king of Israel, and the transition from the government by judges to that of kings. The wars, the appearance of David, the danger to the kingdom, the warnings of Samuel, Saul's debt to David for his life, the meeting with the witch at Endor and the battle of Gilboa are dramatically unfolded, and so interesting is the narrative that to begin a reading is to finish it.—Octographic Reviww, Indianapolis, Ind.

THE CHRISTIAN LESSON COMMENTARY for 1899, by W. W. Dowling, is not a whit behind its predecessors in the ability displayed in its preparation and in the clearness of its analysis of the lessons for this year. It is fitting volume to close the Sunday-school work of the century. Wonderful improvements have been made in Sunday school helps since the adoption of the uniform lessons in 1873. I am glad I was a delegate in that great and important convention, and had a little to do in starting the work, and since then in helping it along. The Christian Publishing Company has been fortunate in having men like B. W. Johnson and W. W. Dowling to superintend their Sunday-school publications. Their work has always been well done and in some respects superior to any other. The Commentary for 1899 is a valuable addition to the splendid series.

THE CHRISTIAN LESSON COMMENTARY for 1899, edited by Rev. W. W. Dowling, is a beautifully bound and richly illustrated volume of over 400 pages. No Lesson Help fully and satisfactorily illustrates the lessons of the International series. In our preparation of the quarterlies no commentary gives us more satisfactory if equal aid. If the teacher wishes best help in his work, he will find it in Dowling's Commentary. Every teacher, where possible, should have a complete help in addition to his own church notes. We would be glad to see the Christian Lesson Commentary in the hands of all our teachers. With its aid we can hardly see how further help would be necessary on the line of commentary matter.—Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, O.

The starry heavens are not more beautiful than on a clear, cold winter night. It is then that they seem to twinkle with more brilliancy and call forth the admiration of mankind. Our late publication, "Wonders of the Sky, or God's Glory Exhibited in the Heavens," by W. J. Russell, is a beautiful little book, pointing to the isles of light spread out on high, and then bey. nd to the Creator of all. The book is bound in beautiful illuminated cloth, and the price is 50 cents, postpaid.

A CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

A very appropriate gift at Christmas times is a good book. It is something enduring, and to which the recipient can go for years with pleasure and profit, and will be the means of keeping the donor fresh in the mind of the party receiving such presents. Among our large list of publications may be found appropriate presents for ministers, Sunday-school superintendents and teachers, officers and members of Endeavor Societies, and for general use in the family circle. Write us for our catalogue and make your selections before the holiday rush.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

America or Rome?
Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxv. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, December 8, 1898. No. 49

CURRENT EVENTS.

The annual report of the Secretary of War rivals that of the Secretary of the Navy in its interest and importance as an official contribution to the history of 1898. Secretary Alger's report is a chronological survey of the war. There is, of course, no discussion of the policy of the administration and little defense of the department, except indirectly. His narrative presents a picture of the war satisfactorily managed and brought to a successful issue.

Since, under the present circumstances, no cabinet officer can present a report which does not deal with the war or its results, the Secretary of Agriculture, in his report, devotes much space to the consideration of the new problems introduced into his department by the policy of expansion. The fact is pointed out that the resources of our newly acquired possessions are almost entirely agricultural, so far as we yet know. Upon agriculture, at least, must their immediate prosperity depend. Furthermore, the climate and other conditions of these islands are so various and so different from those of the United States that they must be thoroughly studied at once. He, therefore, recommends to Congress an appropriation to defray the expense of expeditions for the scientific investigation of the agricultural resources and needs of Hawaii, Porto Rico (Cuba), and the Philippines.

General Garcia, at the head of a commission representing the Cuban Assembly, which met a few weeks ago, is now in Washington, D. C. The purpose of the commission is to visit the President and state the case to him from the standpoint of the Cuban patriots, telling him what they expect from the United States and what they think they are entitled to. Gen. Garcia has expressed himself, both privately and in signed statements for publication, as entirely confident of the freedom of the administration from any desire to annex Cuba to the United States. He says that it will not be necessary to send a large army of occupation to Cuba as the Spaniards retire, for the Cubans recognize the authority of the United States and will reverence its flag even unsupported by arms. Besides this commission appointed by the Cuban Assembly, there is also in Washington a representative of General Gomez and the Cuban army. It is believed that there will be substantial unity of sentiment between the two sets of representatives, and that they will work in harmony, although they came independently. The Cuban Supreme Court was opened last week by General Wood in the name of the United States Government. It is considered as a continuation of the former court, but is now for the first time purely Cuban.

A history of the operations at Santiago written by Admirable Sampson would be one story, and a history of those same operations written by General Shafter would be another. There would be some notable differences between the two. General Shafter believes that he is placed in a very bad light by Admiral Sampson's report and his official dispatches which have been published—and undoubtedly he is, but, since he confines his refutation chiefly to a denunciation of the whole account as "colored," there is little chance for independent judgment of the merits of the case. At the same time the testimonies which continue to come in to the Investigating Commission tend to confirm the belief that the land campaign was managed in a haphazard, impromptu, harum-scarum fashion which scarcely deserves the name of management at all. If this be true, then the victory only proves that there was worse mismanagement on the other side, or that the courage of the men atoned for all other defects. Col. Roosevelt's testimony was particularly interesting and vivid. He makes no complaints, but describes a condition of affairs in which food, medicine and other necessary supplies were obtained only by those who "rustled" for them. It happens that Col. Roosevelt's "rustling" faculty is highly developed, and consequently the Rough Riders had things which some other regiments lacked, which did not happen to be blessed with "rustling" colonels. However, as we have before suggested, General Shafter's own reports contain a sufficient array of facts which need to be explained, without going in search of more, and we hope, now that the election is over and all fear of political complications is or ought to be passed, the commission will proceed to come to the point.

The confederacy of Central American states, calling itself the Greater Republic of Central America, has collapsed, as is the custom of such confederacies. It was never more than the feeble embodiment of a yet feebler scheme, but it was hoped that it would add some stability to Central American politics. It now appears that the confederacy was, more than anything else, a plan devised by the presidents of the three republics, Nicaragua, Salvador and Honduras, to enable them to gain a more permanent grip on their offices. It fell through, partly because of the natural jealousies of the three presidents and partly because of the arbitrary manner in whith the president of Salvador had committed his people to the new arrangement without consulting them. They had no special objection to the scheme, but did not care to have it forced upon them. There was a popular rising and a bloodless revolution, ending in the departure of the offending president from the country and the withdrawal o Salvador from the confederation. This event may have some bearing upon the Nicaragua Canal project. The present concessions for the construction of the canal were granted by the Nicaraguan Government, but it was feared that the Diet of the confederation, a provokingly intractable body, would take a hand and hinder the renewal of the expiring concessions. This was one argument in favor of returning to the Panama route. The downfall of the Greater Republic of Central America, if it has any effect, will improve the prospects for the construction of the Nicaraguan Canal.

On December 2, Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, and King of Hungary, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his accession to the throne of the dual empire. There was no jubilee, and the celebration was almost entirely of a religious sort, on account of the recent assassination of the Empress. All political prisoners were pardoned and many military and cival promotions were granted and decorations conferred. The object which the Emperor has worked for in the administration of his government is the more complete indication of the two halves of his empire, Austria and Hungary. The conclusion of a financial and commercial agreement between them, two days before the anniversary, was a jubilee present to the Emperor and, according to his own statement, the most acceptable that he could receive. There was much reluctance on both sides, and the passage of the measure was due chiefly to the Emeror's personal desire for it. It is a testimonial of the loyalty and sympathetic consideration of his divided empire, now less divided by reason both of its loyalty to him and of this measure in which it has shown that loyalty.

There are a dozen points at which war might break out in the Orient without really surprising any one, and there are more than that many conceivable occasions for friction leading to war betweed the powers in the East. It is reported that Japan is landing troops in Korea to resist Russian aggression there, and that a number of spies were captured recently at Port Arthur with drawings of the fortifications and were promptly shot by the Russian authorities. Russia has the largest standing army in the world and Japan has but recently entered the arena amony the world-powers. Nevertheless, in a conflict between the two, this inequality would be partially if not completely balanced by the fact that Japan would be on her own ground. England and France might fight to a finish on the other side of the world from Europe, but Japan has not yet reached the point where she has anything to fight for far from home.

Since a pacific adjustment of Anglo-French relations on the Nile seeme assured, it is natural to turn to China to find a possible explanation of Great Britain's unusual preparations for war. There are some facts which lend color to the hypothesis that England is expecting a clash with France in the Yangtse valley. The outrages against foreigners in many parts of China during the past few weeks, since the party of reaction came into power, have called forth a chorus of diplomatic protests and demands for reparation. Taking occasion of this general situation, and of a case of violence offered to certain Frenchmen in the Yangtse district, France has been trying to extort from the Viceroy at Nanking, as indemnity for this outrage, a territorial concession near the mouth of the Yangtse river. This, however, is England's sphere of influence, and she has already begun to assume an attitude of defense to prevent its invasion by the French. The case has points of similarity to the situation in Egypt, and probably Great Britain would be as willing to fight to maintain her position on the Yangtse as on the Nile.

The President's annual message, read at the opening of the Fifty-fifth Congress on last Monday, only a synopsis of which we have seen at this writing, congratulates the country on the successful administration of its finances, the degree of business prosperity which prevails, and then turns to the war with Spain, which it briefly reviews. It congratulates the nation upon the successful prosecution of the war and its speedy termination. After mentioning by name some of the heroes of the war and some of the leading battles, he bears testimony to "the patriotism and devotion of the large portion of our army which, although eager to be ordered to posts of greatest exposure, fortunately was not requred outside the United States. They did their whole duty, and have earned the gratitude of the nation." The work of the Red Cross is gratefully acknowledged. Concerning issues which have grown out of the war, the President says that it would be inappropriate for him to discuss them until after the peace treaty is ratified. "In the meantime, and until Congress has legislated otherwise, it will be my duty to continue the military governments which have existed since our occupation, and give to the people and property protection and encouragement under a just and beneficent rule." Concerning Cuba he adds: "As soon as we are in possession of Cuba, and have pacified the island, it will be necessary to give aid and direction to its people to form a government for themselves." The message closes with recommending an appropriation for the centennial anniversary of the founding of the City of Washington, suggests an amendment to the alien contract law, "the rightful application of the eight-hour law for the benefit of labor and of the principle of arbitration," as matters needing the attention of Congress.

While Spain's acceptance of our demands in regard to the Philippines disposes of the most critical item in the peace negotiations, the final signature of a treaty of peace may be less imminent than was supposed a few days ago. There are many minor matters yet to be disposed of, such as the acquisition of one of the Carolines, and the guarantee of religious liberty to the entire group. Upon these points, not mentioned in the proctocol, we cannot make demands, but must proceed by more conciliatory and tedious processes. The plan of leaving these matters unsettled in the treaty, covering them only by a clause providing for another joint commission to discuss them, has the advantage of hastening the agreement upon the treaty, but the disadvantage of delaying the settlement of these particular points. It is feared by some, who wish for the contrary, that the treaty embodying this article in regard to the Philippines may not be able to command the two-thirds vote of the Senate necessary for ratification. In that case it can be held over until March 3, when the increase of Republican strength in the Senate would insure its ratification at a special session. Our offer of $20,000,000 for the Philippines has not met with great favor. Abroad it is not understood. Some think it a niggardly price to pay for the islands; others approve of our expansion, but consider it a piece of freakish and foolish generosity to have offered so much where so little was expected. The Spanish have accepted it ungraciously. The anti-expansionists at home oppose the expenditure of such a sum of good gold for a possession which may be of more harm than help to us. It is approved only by those who believe that we ought to have the Philippines, and that we have a right to them, and who understand that the twenty millions is not a purchase price, but a generous reimbursement of Spain for her expenditures for the improvement of the island.

The Tribune of Chicago has been securing an expression of sentiment from the senators as to their attitude on the subject of the ratification of the treaty with Spain on the conditions which it is understood have been agreed upon. A great majority of those expressing themselves declare in favor of ratification. Some decline to express an opinion until they see the treaty. Others express their decided opposition to what they call "annexation" or "imperialism." Some of the senators forget that the treaty with Spain decides nothing as to the future of the Philippines, except that they are not to be under Spain's dominion. The whole problem of their future disposition is one that is left to Congress to decide. The assumption on the part of some politicians, that the President has decided to make the Philippine Islands a part of the United States and its people amenable to our form of government, is without foundation. The condition in reference to the "Open Door" is wholly inconsistent with that view. They will, no doubt, be put under military government until such time as the people are capable of governing themselves. There is no departure from the fundamental principles of our government in such a policy.

Aguinaldo, the Philippine insurgent leader, it is reported on good authority, has renounced the Roman Catholic religion in an open proclamation to his followers and has espoused the cause of Protestantism. It is not improbable that this fact will have considerable influence in modifying the religious condition of these islands. It is not likely that any permanent improvement can come to the Philippines until there is a greater degree of religious as well as political enlightenment.

A DIVINE MISSION—WHAT?

V.—SIMPLICITY.

We use the term "simplicity" according to its strict meaning, as indicating the condition of being unmixed or uncompounded; also freedom from excessive formality or ostentation; also as indicating freedom from abstruseness or subtlety; that is, clearness, intelligibility. The tendency of religion to become overgrown or overlaid with elaborate ritual, with abstruse subtleties and gross superstitions is known to every student of history. Another tendency which runs alongside of this is that of multiplying ecclesiastical offices and creating a hierarchy with rank above rank, culminating in ecclesiastical tyranny.

In saying, therefore, that the fathers who inaugurated this movement felt called upon, in view of the condition of the religious world and of the plain teaching of Scripture, to plead for the simplicity of the gospel, we mean that they set themselves to the task of freeing the gospel from whatever accretions had gathered about it, and the Church from those unauthorized additions to its officers and their official prerogatives which were in conflict with the freedom of individual churches. This has always been a difficult undertaking. Those who attack venerable errors and hoary superstitions which have been associated with religion are often regarded as attacking religion itself, and their efforts at reformation are regarded as little less than sacrilegious, while the effort to simplify Church organizations, and restore the essential equality that should prevail in the Church of God, is sure to be fiercely resented by those who feel that their vested rights and their official prerogatives have been assailed. But reformers, who are called of God for their work and animated by His Spirit, do not pause to take counsel of their fears or to calculate the chances of success against powerful opposition, but proceed at once to do the work to which God has called them, leaving the results with Him.

The whole process of conversion or New Testament evangelism had become so obscured and mystified by subtle definitions and false theories, which antagonized the plain teaching of Scripture and the laws of the human mind, that sincere, earnest people, anxious to be Christians, were kept in doubt and mental anxiety for years because they could not find the way of salvation. It would be impossible to enumerate in the space at our command all the particulars in which the once plain way of salvation had become obscured by human traditions. Among these, however, was the doctrine of "total hereditary depravity," which was defined to mean that man was so under the bondage of original sin, and so utterly corrupt in his whole nature, that he was wholly unable to think a worthy thought, or to perform a worthy deed, or to do anything in the direction of his own salvation until he was miraculously converted by the direct impact of the Holy Spirit. Of course, this theory logically lays the responsibility for the non-conversion of the world upon God. Under its influence men waited for God's "good time" when his Holy Spirit would accomplish the work of their salvation without their co-operation or consent. Faith, instead of being the act of an intelligent mind based on evidence, was regarded as something directly and mysteriously imparted to the human soul without its agency or co-operation. Repentance was often confounded with sorrow and weeping, and feeling was made the great test of pardon and conversion. Baptism among Protestants was relegated to the class of things indifferent and was not supposed to have any connection with the process by which the unconverted were brought into a state of peace and reconciliation with God, or with a good conscience, while Catholics made it the channel of regenerative grace.

In this state of things the doctrine that man was not so depraved as to rob him of responsibility, and that he had the power to turn away from his evil doings, to believe on Christ and to surrender himself to his authority, the Holy Spirit co-operating in the gospel, in obedience, and in the lives of others to effect this change, seemed to many like denying the necessity of regeneration and the agency of the Holy Spirit. To teach that repentance was the actual decision of the soul to forsake sin, followed by reformation of life, and that baptism was neither a magical instrument to be used by the priesthood in the conversion of children and adults nor a mere badge of denominationalism which may or may not be worn, but is a solemn and significant act in which a penitent believer symbolizes his faith in Christ and his purpose to lead a new life, and receives the assurance of the remission of sins, looked to many pious souls like "baptismal regeneration," which was freely charged upon the early reformers.

But, in spite of all this opposition and misrepresentation, the presentation of Christ as the great object of faith, and not creed, of obedience to him and to his requirements as the way of salvation, and reliance upon his Word, and not upon dreams, fancies and feelings as the evidence of acceptance, was everywhere hailed with delight by earnest, seeking souls, who desired to know the truth and to obey the truth that they might be saved. It was like the breaking out of the sun on a cloudy day, scattering the vapors and the mists from the landscape and revealing all the beauty in earth and sky. Thousands of hesitating, troubled, anxious souls came pressing into the church, claiming the divine promise, and rejoicing in the light and hope of this simple, new-found truth.

The converts thus made, according to the apostolic method, were gathered in local congregations, each one of which was self-governing, and all the members of which were regarded equally as "priests unto God," without distinction of rank or authority. Certain men of these congregations, on account of their fitness, were chosen to teach these congregations, and others to look after their temporal interests. Later on these congregations were taught that they were parts of one whole, and were to co-operate as sister churches in the furtherance of a common cause. There were to be no popes, no cardinals, no archbishops, no archdeacons nor other ecclesiastical officials, except bishops, pastors or overseers, and deacons, in local congregations, and evangelists. These congregations may organize a general co-operation for missionary and other benevolent purposes, but they are not to exercise any authority over the faith or the freedom of individuals or local churches.

This simplicity in evangelism and organization has commended itself by the remarkable success which has attended the plea urged by the present Reformation. It is a prime factor in that extraordinary growth which has puzzled the religious statisticians. In proportion as it obtains among the religious bodies of Christendom will we see the work of evangelizing the world go forward with something of that remarkable power and success which marked the apostolic age.

These five cardinal principles—Liberty, Loyalty, Unity, Catholicity and Simplicity—thus briefly stated, must serve as the skeleton which we shall endeavor to clothe with flesh and blood, and endow with life, at some time in the future. Our religious neighbors may call them "The Five Points of Campbellism." We prefer to regard them as Five Points that shall mark the church of the twentieth century.

AUTHORITY IN RELIGION.

The religion here spoken of is the Christian. The authority is that which is supreme. The inquiry relates to the seat of supreme or final authority in the religion of the Christ. The question is, What is the seat of ultimate authority in the Christian religion?

Good form now requires the discussion of this question in ministers' meetings. In such discussions the greatest variety of opinion is expressed. The replies to the question, strange as it may seem, are almost as various as the number of persons participating in the discussion.

In a recent ministerium, in which this question was considered, the following answers were given: "Conscience," "reason," "the Holy Spirit," "the Bible," "the church," "God" and "the Christ."

When Jesus concluded the Sermon on the Mount "the multitudes were astonished at his teaching: for he taught them as one having AUTHORITY."

On the Mount of Transfiguration a voice was heard from the cloud of glory, the voice of God, saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; HEAR YE HIM." Moses was present, Elijah was also there. Under the circumstances the oracle meant that supreme authority belongs to Jesus as the Son of God. God did not say, Hear my Son and Buddha, hear my Son and Confucius, hear my Son and Mohammed, hear my Son and Moses, hear my Son and Elijah. Under the circumstances the oracle out of the cloud meant, HEAR MY SON ALONE. Supreme authority belongs to him. His message is the final, authoritative utterance on the subject of religion. Above him there is no one. He is now, in the Christian dispensation, regnant. Moses, Samuel, Isaiah, Elijah, Daniel, John the Baptist—all are superseded by Jesus the Christ. Conscience, reason, the Holy Spirit, the church—all are subordinate to the Christ. He is on the throne. The Holy Spirit by Paul says: "He must reign till." And again: "He is the Head of the body, the church."

The Christ claimed this position for himself.

When he was leaving the earth to return to heaven he said: "ALL AUTHORITY hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth." If this language does not mean that Jesus is the seat of authority in the Christian religion it means nothing. The only question is, Did Jesus speak the truth when he said that all authority had been given to him? To those who believe in him as the Son of God this question is not considered—of course he spoke the truth.

Reason has a place in connection with the religion of the Christ. Jesus in his teaching appealed to reason. He sought to excite thought in the minds of men. He cited witnesses. He referred the people to the testimony of John the Baptist. His works, the works that the Father gave him to do, he said, sustained his Messianic claims. "The Father which hath sent me," he said, "hath borne witness of me." The Hebrew sacred writings, he claimed, also bore witness to him. Moses is called into court. Jesus said: "What THINK ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" "If David called him Lord, how can he be David's Son?" Reason had its place in the teaching of Jesus. The men who were sent to arrest him reported to their superiors: "Never man so spake."

Reason had its place in the preaching of the apostles.

Peter reasoned with the people in Jerusalem on Pentecost Day and when he preached in Solomon's Porch. Again and again Paul reasoned with the Jews in their synagogue and elsewhere, out of their Scriptures, proving that Jesus is the Christ. "He reasoned of righteousness, temperance and the judgment to come," when he spoke in the presence of Felix, the Roman Governor. He reasoned with such power that "Felix was terrified," says the historian. To the saints in Rome Paul said: "Present your body a living sacrifice, . . . which is your reasonable service."

Men must reason about the Bible before they can intelligently receive it as from God. They must reason upon the claims of the Nazarene before they can intelligently believe on him as the Son of God and the Savior of lost men. Having decided that the Bible in the legitimate import of the word is inspired of God, they must receive its messages as true. Reason and learning may be called in to aid in deciding as to the import of a teaching or message—but the message is true whether its meaning is understood or not. This question has been settled in the settlement of the prior question. So also concerning the teaching of Jesus: Having decided that he is the Christ, his doctrine must be received as true. What thought he intended to convey by the use of certain words is a subject of legitimate inquiry. Here reason, again, and scholarship, have a place—but both are subordinate to him whom we call the Christ.

Conscience is an important factor. But conscience is neither an authoritative teacher nor guide. A man may be conscientious and exceedingly wicked. Saul of Tarsus was. He said when addressing the Sanhedrin after he became a Christian: "I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day." Whatever conscience is, it does not always cause a man to go in the right way or to do the right thing. It cannot, therefore, be regarded as the seat of authority.

Here the church is a word of admonition from the Being who has "all authority."

He spoke of the effort that the church should make to win a man from the error of his ways. But besides this the church is worthy of respect when she speaks on any subject. Her age, her moral character, her origin, her divinely appointed mission, etc., should cause all men to give respectful attention to the church when she speaks on any subject. But the church is not infallible. Sometimes the church errs, and errs grievously. The church cannot, therefore, be the seat of authority in religion as the terms are above defined.

There is not space to consider the other suggestions—suggestions as to the Holy Spirit, the Bible, God.

When it is said that Jesus is the seat of authority he is thought of as a manifestation of Deity—he is thought of as God in human form.

The Holy Spirit is subordinate. He came to take the place of the Son of Man. The Holy Spirit was spoken of by the Christ as "another Comforter." "He shall not speak from himself; but what things soever he shall hear, these shall he speak." These words of the Master settle the question as to the place of the Holy Spirit—it is subordinate. The Christ alone is supreme. "HEAR YE HIM." B. B. T.

SPIRITUAL LIFE—HOW DEVELOPED.

I. WHAT IS SPIRITUAL LIFE?

It seems desirable first of all to get before our minds some definite conception by what is meant by spiritual life. Lexicons and dictionaries will not serve us here. We are indebted to the Bible for whatever knowledge we may possess on the subject, and to that source we must go for whatever metes and bounds the thing signified may have, and for those characteristics by which it may be identified.

The true starting-point for any adequate treatment of the subject it seems to us is the fundamental statement in Genesis, that "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created He him, male and female created He them." Without a true anthropology we cannot understand the nature of that life, which is the gift of God to men through Jesus Christ. Man is created in the image of God. God is spirit. Man is, therefore, essentially spirit. He has a material body, but he is a spiritual being. He was made like God in his mental, moral and volitional faculties. This image has been marred by sin. The object of the gospel is to restore man to the divine likeness.

If man is made in the image of God, it follows that he can never realize the end of his existence without living the life of God. In other words, it is only as man comes into fellowship with God and becomes partaker of the divine life, that he lives in the true sense of the word. Man alienated from God by wicked works and living in the flesh, following his appetites and passions, is said to be dead, morally, because he is not sharing in that life for which he was created—the life of God.

As the body is alive when it is in harmony with its environment and its organs are discharging their normal functions, and dies when this harmony is broken, so the spirit lives when it is in harmony with God, its spiritual environment, "in whom we live and move and have our being." The life of the body is, at its best, a temporal life, that ends in decay. The life of the spirit, on the contrary, is perpetual, and hence is called in the Scriptures "eternal life." It is eternal because it is the life of God and is shared by the soul that is in union with God.

If we are right thus far, then spiritual life is the life of the spirit that has come into vital relationship with God, through faith, and is sharing the divine life with Him. It is the life whose purpose, whose inspiration, whose likes and dislikes, whose principles and whose activities are all from God and are in harmony with His will. This is the true life, and because it is the true life it eternally persists.

Of course, there are degrees of spiritual life, ranging all the way from the highest type of consecrated manhood, where all the powers, energies, purposes and aspirations are in perfect harmony with God's will, as seen in the life of Christ, down to the weakest and frailest believer who has felt his sluggish moral nature quickened in the least degree by the recognition of God and of moral obligation. There is the same variety of type here that we find in the physical life, which ranges from the highest specimen of robust physical manhood or womanhood down along the descending scale to the hopeless invalid, to whom life is a burden. The question we are asked to answer is, How may this spiritual life, this life of God in the soul of man, be developed? This is indeed a most vital question. Time and space will only permit a few suggestions.

A primary and essential condition of growth in the spiritual life, we should say, is the desire for such growth and a willingness to do whatever is necessary to secure it. Without this the wheels of spiritual progress are effectually locked. Where there is no aspiration after a truer, fuller, richer life there can be no realization of spiritual growth. To create such discontent with the present spiritual attainments of the average church member and to awaken aspirations after something nobler and better is one of the difficult tasks of the Christian ministry; and yet, one that must not be neglected.

It is not enough to create a desire on the part of the people after a deeper spiritual life. There must be a definite purpose formed to strive to attain such a life. It is as true in spiritual growth as it is in the original acceptance of the gospel, that the will is supreme and that there must be a definite action on the part of the will to seek after spiritual things before they can be obtained. What proportion of our congregations have formed any such definite purpose would be a problem which each pastor may seek to solve for himself. It is to be feared that very many are living just as if there were no possibilities of Christian attainment before us for which it were worth while to struggle.

A closer study of Christ's life and the lives of those men and women who have been most Christlike, ought to reveal to the dullest mind marvelous possibilities of development in power and usefulness, unattained by the average Christian, and to awaken a hungering and thirsting after righteousness which must antedate all spiritual growth. Of a certain preacher among us it was once said by another distinguished preacher, "Bro. X's sermons always make me feel like I want to be a better man." A sermon that does not have this effect must be lacking in some of the elements of gospel preaching. Blessed s the preacher who can create in his congregation both the desire and purpose to live the Christ-life.

When one desires, not only life, but the abundant life, which Jesus said he came to give to man, and has formed a definite purpose in his mind to seek after such a life, the question still recurs as to how this desire and purpose may best be realized Another article will be devoted to that question.

Hour of Prayer.

THE HEAVENLY CITY.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Dec. 14, 1898.)

And he carried me away in the Spirit to a mountain great and high, and showed me the Holy City Jerusalem coming down out of heaven from God, having the glory of God.—Rev. 21:10.

Who does not love the mountains? From our earliest recollection we have delighted to climb their rugged sides to the highest attainable peak, and look away over the surrounding country like a map spread out before us. We have stood upon some of the loftiest peaks of the Rockies, where perpetual snow glistened in the sunlight, and have looked over the series of peaks and foothills to the far-away plains of Colorado, when the scene was enchanting. We have ascended Mount Rigi, and from its serene heights looked down upon the beautiful Swiss lakes, over which the cloud-shadows were floating, and off to the great Alpine Range, whose summits were crowned with glaciers flashing like diamonds in the light of the sun. This, too, was grand.

But never was there another mountain scene like this which John describes. He was carried away in the Spirit to a "mountain great and high." Greatly to be pitied is he who has never been carried away in the Spirit to some lofty mount of vision, from which he could survey the past and look with clearer vision into the future. Such moments come to most of us at some time or other. It may be when, like John, we have been separated from the world, with its noise, its bustle, its feverish cares and vexing ambitions, and are alone in the midst of Nature's sublimities. Left to one's self, the soul turns its eye toward God, and in the midst of its meditations finds itself on some mountain top, where life takes on new meaning, and the path of duty seems clearer than ever before. Or this experience may come to us when disease has laid us low, and we approach the borderland where the flesh loses its dominancy and the spirit triumphs over it. In the calm and quietude of the solemn stillness eternity looms up before us and throws its light back upon our past life and our present condition. From this mount of vision we go back to the activities of life often with a new sense of responsibility and new incentives to endure suffering and affliction for the right.

It was a great moment in the life of this lonely seer on Patmos when he was carried away in the Spirit to this great and high mountain. John had no doubt been thinking about his isolation from his brethren, about the persecutions and trials to which they were subjected, and contrasting their weak and helpless condition with the great, haughty Roman Empire, then a hostile force. He needed a vision that would strengthen his heart and the hearts of his brethren in those fiery trials. What a magnificent scene burst upon his vision from that mountain top! He looked, and behold, "the Holy City, Jerusalem"—not the old City of Jerusalem, with its long, dark history of apostasy and retribution, but the holy city, the new Jerusalem, "coming down out of heaven from God, having the glory of God." This city, as the angel explained, was "the bride, the wife of the Lamb." Never prophet or seer looked upon a more inspiring scene than that. Two great and inspiring truths are taught us by this vision: (1) The power which is to transform this earth into more than its Edenic glory, and build the new Jerusalem, is from heaven; (2) the scene of its operations is here on earth. (See also Rev. 21:1-4.)

It was the perfected, redeemed, glorified Church of the living God, receiving its power and glory from heaven, and becoming the rightful habitation of man here on earth. It was the Church triumphant. It told John of the time when that divine society, of which he and his persecuted brethren were members, should be the dominant society on this earth. It prophesied a triumph of truth and righteousness under the reign of Jesus Christ, through whom this earth is to be transformed into an Eden, and humanity built into a city of God.

Glorious vision! Inspiring hope! Magnificent destiny! If any of us have caught such a vision of the future glory of the Church, let us seek to make it real through our lives and labors.

PRAYER.

We thank Thee, O God, for the visions of faith; that even on the barren islands of life the soul that is indwelt by Thy Spirit may have a vision of Thee and of Thy triumphant Church. We thank Thee for the witness borne by this faithful servant of old as to what he was permitted to see concerning the future times on that mountain top to which he was carried. We bless Thee for the hope inspired by such a vision, that this earth is yet to be the dwelling-place of God, and that righteousness is to prevail over sin and corruption. May this hope lead us to such self-purification and self-abnegation as shall enable us not only to share in that future glory, but to hasten its coming. In His name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

Few friendships are more lasting than those formed in our college life. Somehow we never forget the boys and girls with whom we recited Greek and Latin, and with whom we struggled in the literary societies to solve the great problems of the universe. They may have grown gray in the struggle of life, but to us they are boys and girls yet. It has not been our good fortune to meet very often with the sons and daughters of our alma mater, with whom we stood in the relation of fellowstudent and classmates but ever and anon there comes a letter from one of them that brings to fresh remembrance scenes, faces and incidents which were not forgotten, but which have been overlaid by intervening events. Strange, too, these letters breathe the same spirit which their authors manifested in those bygone days, when life was young and full of hopes and ambitions. Time may develop and ripen or modify the traits and trend seen in college life, but it can never obliterate them. Sweet and holy are the friendships of youth, formed under conditions which exist in college life. Let the boys and girls who are in college to-day remember that and cultivate the friendship of the noble-hearted and true, and this shall be a tie that will bind them to worthy aims and ambitions all the days of their lives.

We are approaching the season of the year when people are accustomed to remember their friends and loved ones in some appropriate gift which is intended to be an expression of friendship or kindly feeling. It is one thing, however, to make a Christmas gift, and another to make an appropriate one. There are a few simple rules which should always be remembered in gift-making. To any one who is worthy to receive a gift, it is not the intrinsic value of the gift that counts for so much as the spirit in which the gift is made and its appropriateness. Costly gifts as a rule should be avoided. Gift-making should never become a burden, else it loses the very end sought to be gained. Gifts should never be made to persons from the motive that we expect or desire something from them in return. When the making of gifts becomes a sort of quid pro quo affair it has degenerated from its true purpose and ceases to be a token of friendship. It requires a little more time and thought in selecting or preparing appropriate gifts than many of us are able or willing to give to the subject. No doubt, thousands of our readers are now puzzling their heads as to what gifts they will make at Christmas time, and it is possible that a few of them, the younger ones, of course, are wondering what they will receive. We are sure the Easy Chair expresses the sentiment of its readers when it declares its preference for a pair of yarn mittens, given as an expression of love, to a gold watch given as an investment.

Some one has suggested—perhaps it was the pastor of the Garfield Memorial Church at Washington—that we make this Jubilee Year an era of good feeling between progressives and conservatives, and between missionary and anti-missionary; or, perhaps we should say, between those who believe in missionary organizations and those who are opposed to such organizations, but believe in working it without organization other than local congregations. All right. Here is our hand to every man that believes in converting this world to Christ on any plan or without any plan. The anti-society brother who is doing his best to save men from sin either at home or abroad, shall have our prayers and our sympathies. We shall not require him, indeed, we never required him, to agree with us as to methods of missionary work in order that we may regard him as a brother in Christ. We are sure that the Lord is not particular about the plan of missionary work so the work is accomplished. It is the man who thinks he has discharged his whole duty in opposing all methods of missionary work, and is doing nothing himself, that has forfeited the right to the respect and love of his brethren. Let us hope that the number of this class is very small and rapidly decreasing. But there is no reason why there should not be good fellowship among all those who are working in any way to bring this world in subjection to Christ.

As to the conservatives and progressives, these are relative terms. A man may be regarded as a conservative in one community, while he is looked upon as radically progressive in another. The editor of this paper is regarded by some of his brethren as progressive, and by others as conservative. They are both right, for we claim to be conservatively progressive, or progressively conservative, whichever way you may put it. We believe in progress, but in a progress that conserves all truth and all the interests of the kingdom of God. There is a great difference between being conservative and stationary. Most people would class President McGarvey as a conservative, but there is an element among us who regard him as dangerously progressive, and as consorting with those who have deserted the plea of the fathers. So it means nothing to say of a man that he is progressive or conservative, unless you have some standard of conservatism or progression which is generally understood. While the Tennessee organ of soundness berates Bro. McGarvey for his departures from the faith, it, in turn, is denounced by a small Texas sheet for its unsoundness in not insisting on rebaptism. So it goes.

That there should be two classes of minds among us, differing in degrees of conservatism or progressiveism, is inevitable. They are among all religious bodies; they are in all political parties; they are in all business relations. The attempt to obliterate this distinction and make people all think and feel alike, would be as futile as an attempt to make the flowers all of the same color and fragrance. What is needed between these two classes of minds is more charity. The conservative must not think that his more progressive brother, who has a view of any subject which he himself cannot accept, has abandoned the faith and become disloyal to Christ, nor must the progressive brother, who believes he has a new and broader view of truth, accuse his more conservative brother of stubbornly closing his eyes to the light which he is unwilling to receive. Each must understand the other as having such a point of view as makes it quite consistent for him to hold the position he does while being strictly loyal to Christ. This disposition to treat each other fairly and charitably will do away with unbrotherly friction, though there will still remain an intellectual friction, out of which comes progress in religious thinking. Paul, no doubt, was more liberal and progressive, more open to receive new ideas, than either James or Peter, but we would not be willing to dispense with the writings of either from the New Testament canon. The era of good will and brotherly feeling must come from the cultivation of a larger measure of that charity "which thinketh no evil" and which "rejoiceth in the truth."

How to make the best use of Christmas? should be the uppermost thought of every Christian concerning that day. No other season brings with it better opportunities for teaching the love of God for the world in a real practical way. Let the spirit of love and of philanthropy prevail.

Questions and Answers.

In the study of the life of Christ are we to separate his divine nature from his human nature? I have heard it said that Christ was wholly human until the time of his baptism, and from that time forth he has been divine. Is this correct? Enquirer.

No. It is a very unprofitable sort of speculation that seeks to analyze Christ's life, separating between the human and the divine. He was the divine embodied in the human, and lifting up the human to its ideal condition. His was the life of God manifested under human conditions and in human form. The statement concerning his being human before his baptism and divine afterwards is entirely unauthorized by the New Testament and by the facts in the life of Christ. The life he lived at Nazareth prior to his baptism was a sinless, ideal life, manifesting the qualities which set him apart as a unique personality. The life of God was manifest in him from the beginning, but of course, increasingly so as he came to the maturity of his human powers, entered upon his ministry and received the Holy Spirit without measure to fit him for his great work. There is evidence that at his baptism and the reception of the Spirit he came to a fuller consciousness of his Messianic mission than he had done before, but this is very different from dividing his life into two sections, from that point, making the first human and the latter divine. There is no phrase that so fitly expresses Christ's character and personality as the inspired phrase, "God manitest in the flesh," and this manifestion was throughout his entire life.

Does employing a preacher for a few months make him a member of a congregation without depositing a church letter or receiving the hand of fellowship of the congregation; and is he entitled to a church letter when he goes away?

G. O. Coburn.

We should say that no congregation should employ a preacher who does not present a letter showing his good standing in some local congregation. If they have satisfied themselves that he is in good standing, the mere matter of his depositing a church letter or receiving the hand of fellowship is not important. When he leaves the church, if his record has been good, there would be no objection to the church giving him a letter, stating as much and commending him to other congregations. If, however, his character has not been good, such letter should not be granted, even though he had deposited a letter with them and had received the hand of fellowship. The church letter is worth nothing, only so far as it states facts, and that a church letter should always do.

1. Is there anything in history sacred, or profane, that could be construed so as to indicate that the apostles practiced trine immersion?

2. When was the "Didache" written, and what bearing does it have on the subject? Duncan McFarlane.

1. There is not.

2. The "Didache," or Teaching of the Apostles, is a post-Apostolic production of the second century, and makes no claim to apostolic authority. Its direction concerning baptism shows that even at that early date the practice of baptizing into each of the three names of the Deity—Father, Son and Holy Spirit—had been introduced—a result, probably, of the trinitarian discussion of the time. This practice seemed to its advocates to emphasize the trinity of the Godhead. It does not seem to have occurred to them that it militates against the unity of the Godhead.

UNSECTARIAN CHRISTIANITY.*

M. E. HARLAN.

That which called my attention to the topic as discussed in this paper was an address delivered at Emporia at the State Convention of the Y. M. C. A., Nov. 10, 1898. The address was an address of welcome by Dr. Neel, in which he said, "We realize in the Y. M. C. A. better than in any other religious organization, perhaps, the exhibition of true Christian unity. This is what we need more of. The devil wants to see us divided. Nothing pleases him so much as to see dissensions among us, and the merest military tyro knows it is easier to defeat an opposing foe by attacking its ranks separately."

This, with the words quoted from the widely known, sweet-spirited, scholarly Alfred Barnes, the commentator, will constitute my text for this paper. I now quote from Barnes, in his comment on 1 Cor. 3:4-5, "For while one saith I am of Paul, and another I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal?"—"It was improper for the Corinthians to divide themselves into sects and to call themselves by the name of their teachers. We have here a rebuke to that spirit which has produced the existence of sects and parties. The practice of naming sects after certain men began early and was as early rebuked by apostolic authority. Would not the same apostolic authority now rebuke the spirit which calls one division of the church after the name of Calvin and another after the name of Arminius? Should not and will not all these divisions yet be merged in the high and holy name of Christian? Our Savior evidently supposed it possible that his church should be one (John 17:21:23), and Paul evidently supposed that the church at Corinth might be united. So the early churches were, and is it too much to hope that some way may yet be discovered which will break down the division into sects and unite Christians both in feeling and in name in spreading the gospel of the Redeemer everywhere? Does not every Christian desire it? Whose heart is not sickened at these contentions and strifes and whose soul will not breathe forth a pure desire to heaven that the time may come when the united hosts of God's elect shall go forth to subdue the world to the gospel o the Savior?"

These words suggested to me the above title, "Unsectarian Christianity." And what seeming contradictions in the very words! Surely our great Leader, as far as his followers were concerned, was unsectarian. What a contradiction of terms to call him a sectarian Christ! And yet, does not the Lord himself say that our true discipleship is conditioned on having a spirit as his? Such thoughts as these have led men like Neel and Parkhurst and Barnes and Gunsaulus to declare themselves as they have. And if for no other reason than that such men have declared themselves the subject has attached to it grave importance. I would not appeal to these men as final authority, for the ultimate test must lead to Christ's expressed will, and that will alone is final. What does he wish in the matter?

That he desired his people to be united I think no one will deny, for every figure used by him seems to indicate this. There is individuality, but congregational unity; e. g., he says, "I am the vine but ye" individually "are the branches." There is, then, that individuality, but vital unity, not between every church and Christ, but between every true disciple and Christ.

We propose to discuss the question from the following angles: 1st. Does the unity enjoined by Christ and the apostles now exist? 2nd. Is it desirable? 3rd. Is it possible?

I. To get before us clearly what the Savior and apostles meant by unity we must notice their language.

Let us now read John 17:21; 1. Cor. 1:10-11; 1 Cor. 3:3-5. That there is a deepening fraternity developing among religionists no one can deny, and we hail it with joy. Yet, to the mind of your essayist it has not yet reached the ideal state. From nature's great laboratory we learn the difference between adhesion and cohesion, between a mixture and a union. Different elements may mix, but they all will not unite. Chalk dust and sand mix, but they will not unite. Oxygen and hydrogen unite, and that combination in proper proportions produces water. That is union. So Paul argues that from the Jewish and Scythian and Greek elements there came a union and there was a new creation. While their political nationality was preserved there was religiously "neither male nor female, Jew nor Greek," but they were all one in Christ. To the extent we are Christians, to that extent the same relation or union will exist between members of his body, the church, as between himself and his individual members. With them the unity was so deep-seated that if Paul and James were pastors of two churches in Corinth or Jerusalem for a whole year they could exchange pastorates the next year without being called "turncoats." Surely that condition does not exist now. There is no doubt but that we mix better than we used to, but we have not yet reached the "promised land of unity." Some of us are afraid to venture. We say, "There are lions without and we will be slain in the streets." But to me it is clearly outlined up the sunlit slopes of the mountains of divine truth, and there above the mists of prejudice the laggard, dust-stained prilgrims will come at last and the church of God united will clasp glad hands and sing, "Behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." It may not come your way, nor it may not come my way, but come it will in the providence of God, and when it does come it will come God's way.

II. Is it desirable? If I read present-day literature aright the great trend of thought is toward unity. The American Bible Society, the Bible-school Union, the Endeavor Society, have been prophets of

*Read before the Ministerial Association of Topeka, Kan., Nov. 21, 1898.

God in the wilderness crying, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord. Make his paths straight." While there have been some who desired to behead these John the Baptists they are still real vigorous corpses. Said Josiah Strong at the great Endeavor echo meeting last year at LosAngeles, California, "We have had the pan-American Congress and the pan-Presbyterian Congress, but," said he,"thank God the Endeavor movement is a pen large enough for all." Said the learned and eloquent Governor Bob Taylor, at Nashville, Tenn., last July, in welcoming the Endeavorers, "I see in the C. E. a lesson which at last, thank God, the churches are beginning to learn, that in the unity and harmony of Christian Endeavor lies the strength and power of the world. Let us all thank God that this idea of union has dawned on the church as well as the state." This was cheered to the echo by an audience of from six thousand to eight thousand people. Dr. George H. Corey, until about a year ago pastor of President McKinley's church in Washington, said in a paper before Washington ministers in July, 1897, "The Protestant church is so broken into fragments that are antagonistic in spirit and noncohesive in purpose, and nonco-operative in plan, that it can not be said to represent the true spirit of Christ. I do not believe Jesus Christ organized any of these little fragmentary eclesiastical institutions. It belittles him to think he did —his kingdom will eventually overmaster them all."

Dr. William B. Hale, of Massachusetts, in an article in the Forum, after mentioning a long list of silly and ludicrous entertainments to make money said, "The reason of these things is the fact that a hundred and forty sects have fastened themselves upon a people who cannot support them. The divided church is in humiliation and disgrace. Where now rival sects find it necessary to go to the masses with prize texts, bicycle runs for Christ and cyclone evangelist and lantern service, a united church, soberly engaged in its proper work, would find the masses eager to come to it."

The great and good Dr. A. J. Gordon says, "A church divided into sects is not the ideal church. It is not the church which he inaugurated nor for which he prayed in the end."

From my library I could multiply quotations like these at great length on Christian unity. Laughter is not argument and ridicule shall not stifle the voice of God. Can we not catch the trend of thought? The great unmothered, unchurched world to-day, wounded and bleeding at every pore, and yet strong in its sullen demand, is crying out against that bitter competition, that while it may seem to be the "life of trade," is often death to the trader. The battle is on, and when the smoke of the battle is cleared away you will see far up the slopes of Christian attainments, not "competition," but "co-operation," waving her scepter of peace over a people enslaved to Christ. It is not enough to say that "we must have division so that every one may be satisfied," for at least two reasons: 1. The first question that every devout disciple should ask is not, does it satisfy me? But does it satisfy Christ? Is it according to his plan? 2. The great religious unrest argues that division does not satisfy. We hold to our creeds only in form while in fact we do not magnify their tenets of faith. It is true to-day and can be easily demonstrated that you cannot tell what a man believes on credal questions by knowing what church he is with. With the great masses to-day it is not so much what you believe, but what you are.

Is union desirable? Ask our great evangelists. When they go into a place for revival work the first requsite is that they all sink their denominational peculiarities and work together that way as Christians. Question: If it is beneficent to work together that way for a month or six weeks, would it not be well to prolong the condition? Why do they desire to work in that way? They say the world must not see your differences or they will not be so easily reached. How like Christ such reasoning is, for did he not say "that these all may be one that the world may believe?" Christ closely associated the unity of his followers with the conversion of the world. If the working together as one church for one short meeting brings such marvelous results, think with what more than Pentecostal power we might sweep the whole earth if we were that way for a whole decade, a century.

Sometimes we laugh it off by saying,"Yes it is all right to have one church if you all will join my church." But while we laugh men die out of Christ and the question still is unanswered, "Is it desirable?"—not, "How shall it be done?" When once we allow the consuming desire to take hold on us the way will come. One thing is sure: you cannot force it over the wish of men. You can with saw and tackle in the very dead of winter take a pathway of ice off the great lakes, but that does not insure commerce. For as long as the frost-king reigns the way will close up again. But when the conditions are favorable and the sunlight falls like the kiss of tender morning, these icy chains that had clogged the way of commerce break up and again the crystalled beauty of the great blue deep sends a glad welcome to the hardy mariner. Thus the icebergs of selfishness and cold indifference to the will of God have menaced at times the way of our ship of Zion, but as we near the warm Gulf Stream of God's love these shall melt away at last. Brethren, it is true that to the extent that we are near Christ we are near each other, for he is not self-antagonistic or self-contradictory.

III. Is it possible? On this question let me read from Dr. Chas. H. Parkhurst, of New York. He who dared to face the Tammany tiger till it felt the sting of his piercing gaze and left in defeat, has been heard on this great question. He says, "If it is urged that denominations have their grounds in the inevitable differences which exist among men, it is sufficient to reply that these differences are no greater now than they were in the apostolic times when denominations had not begun to be thought of. And yet for Christians to group themselves on any other grounds than those laid down by Christ and to classify themselves under the leadership of an apostle is exactly what Paul rebuked when he forbade the Christians of Corinth to be known by the name of Paul or Apollos or Peter."

Do you say we need different churches to emphasize different truths? But why no emphasize all truth? A good friend said to me once, "We need the Baptists to emphasize baptism, the Methodists to emphasize fervor and the Salvation Army to emphazize lay preaching." But, brethren, baptism doesn't need to be emphasized by me more than by you. The Methodists have merited just praise for their fervor and their firm stand on all moral questions, and for one I thank God for it. But is it just for me to let them do all the emphasizing? That which is worth emphasizing my people need as much as theirs, and I do not regard myself a plagiarist when I insist that a godly, earnest life is necessary. And so we might go through the whole list. "The unity of the church is as certain as the final triumph of God in the earth and will precede it." Every time we pray, "Thy will be done in earth as in heaven," on the wings of that prayer is borne the bud of hope that is destined to bloom into fullest beauty when God's will is done. For none of us believe that there will be denominations or sects in heaven. Then, if we pray that his will shall be done here as there, why not work for the same great end?

Have all the toil and efforts in the past come to us in vain? "In faith, unity; in opinion, liberty; in all things, charity." Let us make these the three great pillars of our plea and let them stand out like the ancient pillars of Hercules. We commit a folly only when, like the ancients, we write upon these pillars, "No more beyond." The way beyond opens up into the Golden Gate of the resistless Pacific of completest victory. Let us make of each victory an Ebenezer with two faces like the Roman god, Janus, one face looking back and the other forward. None but the drone or fogy would be found gazing so intently on the past as to forget that there is a "yet to be." Out of the imperishable, glorious past comes voices that even age cannot make unfamiliar. These voices cry, "Onward, onward, forever!" Hear God and then apply what John says, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." The crawling worm never dreams that it is to become the butterfly with the artist throwing into its wings the delicate tints of the rainbow, that as it rises will flash back gilded beauty. Thus becoming slaves to Christ's will we are but the chrysalis of what we may become under God.

CAN I LOVE MY ENEMIES?

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

V.

For him who would love his enemy there is help in yet another direction.

I believe Prof. John Fiske has said that cruelty is due to a lack of imagination. The explanation of this will appear by a moment's reflection.

Memory preserves for us much of the past. Reason enables us to anticipate much of the future, brings us into connection with the distant, and reveals to us much in the present which lies below the surface perception of the senses. But those extra-sensual perceptions are spectral and shadowy, and are feebly apprehended in comparison with the broad daylight of our sense perceptions. They do not seem real like the passing events of the moment in the midst of which we live. Especially do they fail to touch the feelings like objects which are clothed with the warmth and vitality of the present reality. And yet these things which lie beyond the ken of the senses may be of far greater importance than those actually before our eyes. Esau came home hungry; he smelled Jacob's pottage. These sense appeals took complete possession of him. He had a birthright, but it was away in the shadowy future. He sold it for the pottage, and committed a ghastly folly. Esau knew, but did not realize what he was doing.

To meet this defect in the apprehension of the unseen we are provided with a special faculty—the imagination. This is the realizing faculty, which clothes unseen things with vividness, with life, so that they seem to us real. It is a mistake to suppose that imagination is confined to poets, novelists, et al., and that it is chiefly concerned with the unreal. It is possessed by all, and is necessary to our apprehension of the most important realities. It is chiefly the realizing faculty, and without it even the intellect would stagger and fail in its quest for truth.

The thought of Prof. Fiske would, therefore, be that, while in the infliction of cruelty the perpetrator is aware that he is causing pain, he has no adequate realization of the suffering he is producing; that he knows but does not realize what he is doing, and that if he did he would not do it. He lacks the power to put himself in the other's place, and consequently to feel for him. Just how far this is true I should not like to say, but it is pretty certain that if the suffering were fully realized it would banish much of the cruelty of the world.

Our imagination may often be quickened by the help of others, giving us a strong and living grasp on some unseen reality. No one influence did more to fire the heart of the North against slavery than "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It helped the imagination vividly to perceive slavery as it was. So of Hood's "Song of the Shirt" and Mrs. Browning's "Cry of the Children." Such also is the highest mission of the orator.

But what is most important for us now to consider is another remarkable fact. Our imagination is wont to realize in spots. Many things which lie easily within its grasp we do not realize, and thus go astray both in conduct and feeling. Perhaps I may be pardoned for presenting an illustration of this from my own life.

Childhood and youth were spent on a farm, near which there were woods with game and a small lake with an abundance of fish. When a mere boy I was supplied with a small fowling piece, and learned to shoot. The first fiction I ever read described the adventures of three boy hunters, and this lent an unspeakable charm to the pursuit of the hunter. City relatives visited us each summer to spend sometime in hunting and fishing. These were to me memorable and most delightful occasions. Under all these influences hunting became my most enjoyable pastime in a place where there were few amusements. After graduating from college and engaging in the pursuit of teaching, an occasional hunt was the favorite recreation. On starting upon one of those excursions a now aged preacher who was visiting us said, "Do you think it is right to kill things for sport?" Some commonplace reply was made, and I went; but those words haunted every moment of that day. They had not vividly portrayed the sufferings of those creatures "whose pains are hardly less than ours," but they had given that which set the imagination at work. From that day the pastime of hunting was forever ruined. It had its enjoyable features, but against these there always arose the counter question, How will the game enjoy it? It is sport on the one side; tragedy on the other—massacre, bereavement. Every boy should commit to memory the touching poem of Burns entitled, "The Wounded Hare."

During all these years I had seen the sufferings I was inflicting for my own diversion, but had never realized them because, strange to say, I had not distinctly thought about them. Their realization completely revolutionized my feeling on the subject.

How quickly our feelings of resentment undergo a change when we see our enemy cold in death! Our eyes have given us a new fact about him, and our hatreds fly like things of the night. We knew this would be, before: why did not our imagination make it real to us? Our feelings toward this enemy had left out half the facts.

One of two brothers was taken ill. A physician was summoned and said to the elder brother, who was watching, "I do not think Walter can live." In the night the sick man sprang from his bed, squared for a fight before his brother, and landed a blow. William's first impulse was to strike back, but he quickly thought, "Poor Walter is sick," and then he saw the white face in the coffin, and could not strike. He put his strong arms around the struggling man and bore him to his bed and said with pathetic tenderness, "Ah! Walter, you see I have beat you this time. Wait till you get well and you can try it again." What became of William's impulse of retaliation when all the facts stood vividly before him?

A man has struck you. You raise your arm to return the blow, when lo! a voice: "The man is not himself. He is acting under the spell of a great blindness. His sin is sin, but it is still more a great calamity. Could you see its tragic end, it would break your heart. He has been sinned against more than sinning; and it is chiefly because of this that he is what he is. He has sorrows—sorrows which, could you know them, would touch you with sympathy. He has noble traits and aspirations for a better life, but they are shot down by tempters about him. He may become a noble man and dwell among the redeemed. I have died for him, and we here in heaven are following him with anxious solicitude. Do not strike him, but help us to save him." If you have within you any considerable degree of generous feeling you will be filled with a great compassion. Those who see you will say, "Behold! his face did shine;" and your enemy will go away smitten with a great astonishment. He has been wounded unto life. You have seen the white face in the coffin and you could not strike.

How does parental love master hatred? By dwelling on the erring child's misdeeds? No; it sees the cradle, the innocent face, hears the cherubic laughter, remembers noble traits and worthy acts, sees the tempter's snare, the struggle to overcome, witnesses the beguilement, hears the siren song, sees the spiritual assassination by the minions of evil—and then turns with bleeding heart to the piteous ruin. Yet, every sinner is a son, of whom some mother knows all this. Can you hate him in his calamity? Hatred moves in a great darkness which shuts out the facts.

How did Christ say, "Father, forgive them?" Listen! "FOR THEY KNOW NOT WHAT THEY DO." He does not say, For they are very bad. That would be unnatural. The heart does not work that way. He who could compassionate wickedness as such would not be divine, but only insane. He who could view it without righteous anger would be less than moral. Christ is gazing upon other aspects of that black deed. These men are the victims of a great darkness. They have been demoralized. Sons of God in possibility, what are they now? How awful the vision! how great the calamity! He is moved by the unspeakable piteousness of sin and cries aloud, "O, Father, forgive; they are not so bad as they seem." It is the mother's way. Does he see cradles? Perhaps. Does he hear innocent song and laughter? Perhaps. He does see the good in these men and what they might be, and then seeing what they are, his heart breaks with pity. What he saw in these sinners was a heart-moving spectacle; and what he saw was true.

God's love for the world is not without occasion. His feeling toward sinners is not a blind monstrosity of emotion. There is abundant reason for his feeling as he does, for sin is a most piteous business. It is sin, but it is above all a terrible calamity. Our little dark-closet hatreds do no honor to our manhood, much less to our Christianity.

Faith lets us behind the scenes—shows what God saw and what broke the heart of Christ. Let the whole tragedy of sin, first and last, stare upon you, and you cannot hate. The great tide of Christian love rolling over animosities, drowning wrongs and lifting up the suffering and sin-blackened in the arms of a healing compassion, is the only rational passion in view of all the facts. It is the only natural feeling, if we are to see things as they are. You can hate only by dropping from the heights of faith's clear vision, by allowing heaven's bliss and the awful doom of sin to swim from your sight, by forgetting human weakness and blindness and sorrow, and creeping down from manhood's high estate, with its broad sweep of vision, into the animal's little den of the present and seen, and with all else in eclipse, hugging in darkness your little revenge. The facts will storm the heart if you but see them, and take it captive with a yearning sorrow.

Will it be said that all these facts of the wider vision are, with most Christians, shadowy and indistinct—too spectral to touch the feelings or rain their fire into the heart? and that this is due to imaginative incapacity—a human limitation for which there is no remedy? Rather, it is due to imaginative inadvertence. The realizing imagination is the most affluent of all our endowments. It gets away with us in our sleep and wafts us through a thousand fairy worlds, filling us with delight or rending us with fear. Children see spectres in the dark. The vision of youth is a glorious apocalypse. How it kindles before him, and throws its magic spell upon his heart! The business man has his vision of success achieved. How he lives in it! It is his waking dream, and is more than a match for the toil of the present or the incitements to ease and pleasure. The bereaved mother finds a little shoe; and the scenes of the past are as of yesterday. She hears voices and sees forms long since vanished, and weeps with a fresh sorrow. The imagination is making a thousand things real to us that the eye does not see, and it can also make others. How many common souls have walked before God as seeing the invisible! The martyrs were not poets, yet the future world was more real to them than the present. What we dwell on with interest grows real to us, and we may "by the vision splendid be on our way attended." The palace is ours with its thousand ministries to the heart, if we will but rise above the kennel of the present and the seen. That vision waits on us, if we will but welcome it, that will fill us with a holy compassion and banish all the dark shadows of hate. If we see not these things, we are men of sense, not of faith. He who has a living faith can love his enemies, for he sees that which broke the heart of his Redeemer.

THE JOY OF THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY.

G. A. RAGAN.

This subject suggests its opposite, the sorrow of the Christian ministry, which forms a proper background for the picture.

Like Christ, the true minister is a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." His duty continually takes him among unhappy, wretched and dying men. His path of service ever leads by pools of Bethesda, where suffering humanity lies waiting in the porches of disappointment, discouragement and despair. If he has the heart of Christ he will be "moved with compassion" and his sympathy will find expression in deeds of helpfulness and words of hope. Like Christ, he has wept over the lost, who seem to despise the goodness of God and will not respond to his infinite love.

Like Christ, many a minister has become poor, that through his poverty others might be enriched. Like Christ, he has been compelled to say: "'Foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests,' but I have not where to lay my head as a permanent abiding-place." Many are foregoing the joys of a settled home that they may be ministers of the "manifold grace of God."

Many have to labor under adverse circumstances; fears and selfishness and strife and jealousies within; bitter opposition and dead indifference without; "spiritual wickedness in high places" and unblushing vice in low places.

But all the sorrows which may come to any faithful minister of Jesus Christ are not worthy to be compared with his joy here and his glory hereafter.

What are the bright lines which stand out so conspicuous against the dark background of the picture? What are the sweet ingredients in the cup of joy which the Master puts to the lips of his ministers?

1. The joy of unbroken communion with Christ. His work is such that whether in the study, in the pulpit or in pastoral visitation, he may have at all times a consciousness of "dwelling in the secret place of the Most High and abiding under the shadow of the Almighty.

Here he has learned to sing—

"'In the secret of his presence how my soul delights to hide;
Oh, how precious are the lessons which I learn at Jesus' side!
Earthly cares can never vex me, nor trials lay me low,
For when Satan comes to tempt me, to the 'secret place' I go.

When my soul is faint and thirsty, 'neath the shadow of his wings
There is cool and pleasant shelter and refreshing crystal springs,
And my Savior rests beside me as we hold communion sweet.
If I should try I could not utter what he says when thus we meet.'"

2. The joy of active fellowship with Christ — partnership with him in the glorious work of saving the lost, realizing that God not only "works in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure," but through us to lift up the fallen and strengthen the weak. Here we feel that we are embassadors of Christ, by whom Infinite Love beseeches rebel sinners to be reconciled to the "Father of mercies."

In this relation we have a blessed sense of being channels of God's love and grace to our needy fellowmen. For this purpose Christ says to each of us: "Come unto me and abide in me that I may be in you a a well of water, springing up unto everlasting life," so that out of your Spirit-filled heart may flow "rivers of living water," at whose brink parched souls may quench their dying thirst and live.

3. The joy of unselfish service, the delight of going about "doing good," of ministering unto the needy rather than being ministered unto. "Whose I am and whom I serve," was the motto of Christ's greatest minister. He is the one who said: "To do good and to communicate, forget not." He interpreted, by his own joyful ministry, Christ's words at the well: "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me and to finish his work."

4. Finally the joy set before us, the joy of meeting the Master when he comes, and receiving from his pierced hands "the crown of glory that fadeth not away." What is this crown of glory? Paul said to those whom he had "turned to God from idols" in Thessalonica, "What is our hope or joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy." From his Roman prison he addressed his Philippian converts as "my joy and crown." In this, brother preachers, lies the greatest joy of the Christian ministry.

Illustrating this thought, Theodore Cuyler said in his valedictory sermon at the close of a public ministry of forty-four years: "What Lord Eldon from the bar, what Webster from the senate chamber, what Sir Walter Scott from the realms of romance, what Darwin from the field of science, what monarch from Wall Street or Lombard Street, can carry his laurels or his gold up to the judgment seat and say: 'These are my joy and crown?' The laurels and the gold will be dust—ashes. But if so humble a servant of Jesus Christ as your pastor can ever point to the gathered flock, arrayed in white before the celestial throne, then he may say, 'What is my hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of Christ at his coming?' 'He that winneth souls is wise.' 'They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever.'"

In writing to his Corinthian converts Pastor Paul said: "I have espoused you unto one husband that I may present you as a chaste virgin unto Christ."

He looked forward to that great day when the clouds shall part and the glorified bridegroom shall come to take unto himself his bride. His clear eye saw the dead in Christ arise and join those who were living in Christ. He saw that blessed company, "clothed in fine linen," pure and spotless, with glorified bodies, ascend "to meet the Lord in the air and then to be forever with the Lord."

This vision was ever before him in his ministry. It throbbed and thrilled every fiber of his soul and filled him with joy unspeakable.

His is the "crown of glory which fadeth not away." This is the reward that the Chief Shephead will give his faithful pastors who have rescued his lost sheep and fed the flock of God. This is the crowning joy of the Christian ministry.

National Conference on our New Problems.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Our people are beginning to realize that well-nigh all the questions of government—restrictions of suffrage, parochial versus public education, civil service reform, prohibition, the civil Sabbath, brutal amusements, the opium traffic, colonial government, monopolies, even slavery—have been thrust upon us by the acquisition of our new islands, and therefore a widespread interest has already been aroused by the announcement of a national conference on these themes in Washington, Dec. 13-15, during the second week of the new session of Congress, which promises to be the most interesting and momentous of any session since the Civil War. The speakers who have consented to discuss these themes in the convention include such specialists as Dr. Josiah Strong, Dr. Howard H. Russell, Anthony Comstock, Gen. C. H. Howard, Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, Dr. M. D. Kneeland, Dr. Teunis W. Hamlin, Dr. Frank M. Bristol, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis, Mrs. E. M. Thacher, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, with more to follow. The open discussions, where everybody who knows more than anybody, will contribute the statesmanship of the people to the solution of these problems, will be hardly less important than the more formal speeches. Mrs. Frances Graham, the sweetest soloist of the N. W. C. T. U., will make the music a feature of interest and power. For program and further particulars address W. F. CRAFTS.

A Plea for our Ministers.

The Chattanooga Convention fixed on the third Lord's day in December as the time for the offering for the Ministerial Relief Fund.

Knowing, as I do, the extreme suffering to which our aged ministers are exposed, I wish to enter my plea with the brethren everywhere, that in this happy Christmas time they remember those who are in bonds of poverty and need as bound with them, and that they double their own happiness by sharing with these needy servants of God.

May the Lord put it into the hearts of our brethren to send up to the Board of Ministerial Relief an offering for the poor saints of our Israel.

The Ministerial Relief Board will lack six hundred dollars of having enough on hand to to pay the January pledges to their beneficiaries.

Send all offerings to Howard Cale, 120 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.; and may the deed be twice blessed, blessing him who gives as well as him who receives.

In the name of the King, BENJ. L. SMITH.
Cincinnati, O.

Our Budget.

—C. W. B. M. motto, $90,000 for '99.

—The F. C. M. S. motto, $150,000 for '99.

—The A. C. M. S. motto, $100,000 for '99.

—Their united war cry, 100,000 souls for Christ in '99.

—But the greatest of all wants is more spirituality in the church; more of Christ in the hearts and lives of its members.

—New York and Brooklyn have started an "open-church" movement. The plan proposes an open house every day in the year.

—The eye of the world will now be fixed upon our National Capital for a season.

—The recent storm on the Atlantic Coast was exceedingly destructive to life and property.

—A great fire in the heart of New York City on Sunday night destroyed thousands of dollars worth of property.

—Last Sunday was C. W. B. M. Day. If your auxiliary and church did not observe that day, for any reason, appoint another and aid the work.

—The Missionary Intelligencer for December, cogitating upon the record of church giving for Foreign Missions for 1898, says: "Missouri stands first in the number of contributing churches, 307. Kentucky stands first in the amount given by the churches as churches. Ohio stands first in the aggregate amount given, $14,492.62. Illinois stands first in the number of contributing Sunday-schools."

—A class in the study of missions has been organized in the First Christian Church at Colorado Springs, Col. It contains thirty members. There is a fine interest. The class is collecting a missionary library. Let a similar movement be inaugurated in other congregations.

—The St. Louis Christian Advocate now bears the name of an assistant editor, C. C. Woods, at its editorial head. Dr. Palmore is so in demand in different parts of the United States by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, that we can readily see the wisdom of a fixture in the home office.

—The third Sunday in this month is the day appointed for an offering for the Ministerial Relief Fund. The merits of this fund stand without the demonstration of argument, and the necessity for it is urgent. The appeal should not go unheeded. Pastors and evangelists who are growing old in the Lord's service should not be indifferent about bringing this grace also before the churches. Let there be due and timely consideration given to this subject and a liberal and general offering on that day.

—The new secretary of the Ministerial Relief Fund, D. R. Lucas, of Indianapolis, Ind., has furnished our readers with some interesting literature on that subject in this paper. The churches should not forget that the third Sunday in December will be the first opportunity they have had for a general offering for this ministry, and the united outpouring of love on that day should give courage to our dependent veterans in the Lord's army. Having worn out their lives in the Lord's service in the ministry of the heavenly things for the saints, it is but a small expression of their appreciation of this service to give to them of their earthly substance in return.

—The author of the interesting interview with Archbishop Purcell, in a note to the editor says concerning the Campbell and Purcell debate: "Many years ago I came across a copy of the book in an Indiana hotel and spent a delightful hour in perusing the same. I am surprised that it is not more generally circulated. No novel was half so interesting to me?" The demand for this book in recent years has been such as to justify the Christian Publishing Co. in issuing a new edition of the work, which will soon be ready. It is certainly one of the most notable discussions of the century, whether we consider the standing and abillty of the two disputants or the nature of the themes discussed.

—The interview with Archbishop Purcell, which we published last week, has already awakened a good deal of interest. Two of our correspondents, however, referring to the matter, call attention to the fact that Archbishop Purcell died in 1883, the interview, which is said to have occurred thirteen years ago, must have taken place after his death. Either our correspondent, "I. C.," made a mistake in his dates or else the printer misinterpreted his chirography. The interview took place while the venerable prelate was yet in the body. We are asked also by others if the interview is a genuine one or whether it is a work of imagination. It purports to be a genuine interview by one whose social and religious standing entitles him to our credence. He is, we take it, a Presbyterian in faith, but an admirer of the ability and personal character of both Alexander Campbell and Archbishop Purcell. We presume he would not affirm under oath that this interview was a verbatim report of what was said on the occasion, but the author is sure that what is written fairly represents the sentiments of the Archbishop, and this is the only important matter. Whether the writer, whose initials are not "I. C.," but who wishes to remain strictly in cog., took notes at the time of the interview we do not know, but it is safe to presume that he would write concerning it and speak of it to others until the matter was very clearly fixed in his mind.

—The minutes of the 29th annual session of the Iowa Christian Convention, and 18th of the Iowa C. W. B. M., held at East Side Church, Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 26-30, have been printed and bound for distribution, making a book of 100 pages. The care and extent of details given certainly indicate great care on the part of the secretaries of these societies and thoroughness of organization throughout the state. A copy of these minutes may be had by sending to B. S. Denny, Cor. Sec., Des Moines, Iowa.

—During the last few days what is known as the "Yale Missionary Band" have been holding meetings in this city in the interest of the cause of Foreign Missions in general. This band consists of five volunteer graduates from Yale '98 class, who have started out to devote one year to this work among the Y. P. S. C. E. Their mission is to awaken a deeper interest in Foreign Missions and a deeper interest in the support of college men who are willing to go into the foreign field as missionaries. It is said that under the "Student's Volunteer Movement" there are more than 3,500 students in America who have declared their purpose, if God permit, to become foreign missionaries. Much interest will, therefore, be taken in the work of the "Yale Missionary Band."

—I read N. J. Aylsworth's "Can I Love my Enemies—IV." to my congregation yesterday morning instead of my regular sermon, with comments. I think it is the best thing that can be said on the subject. "Can I Love my Enemies," should be given a permanent place in our literature. J. M. Lowe.

Winterset, Ia., Nov. 28.

—In an eloquent Thanksgiving sermon, delivered at a union service, Cedar Rapids, Ia., by J. M. Rudy, pastor of the Christian Church in that city, he gives the following prophetic reason for devout thanks to our Heavenly Father. We believe with Bro. Rudy that the doctrine "for humanity's sake" will become a rallying cry for the reformers of homeland conditions and the slogan that shall bruise the head of every oppressor and every organized evil in the land. "For Humanity's Sake" is the explanation of the doctrine and death of the Christ:

If the resources of a mighty army and the strength of a great navy are to be drawn upon for the sole purpose of setting common men and women free on a foreign island, we are more than justified in uttering the prophecy that this same doctrine will find a thousand preachers and expositors among the masses where it now has one. If this is our nation's estimate of human beings in a foreign land, why should we not plead for the same estimate of human beings at home? This will be done. The missionary of the cross who has been pleading the worth of life and the value of the soul is henceforth to be reinforced in his argument by the conduct of the United States army and navy, together with the explanation and interpretation of that conduct by great American statesmen.

Herein is the Christian's reason for giving thanks. You are to-day at the grave of the old and in the birth chamber of the new patriotism.

"My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty."

—The Union Signal, Chicago, for Dec. 1, contains a lengthy report of the recent W. C. T. U. National Convention at St. Paul, Minn., including the discussion of the report of the executive committee, in which the abandonment of the Temple was recommended. The vote on the report stood 285 yeas and 71 nays, which lost the Temple to the W. C. T. U. The result, however, created no surprise, as it had been anticipated for sometime previous to the convention. But Mrs. Carse, who has so long and so urgently championed the Temple movement, still hopes to redeem it from debt and make of it a monument still to Miss Willard.

—The Coming Age is the name of a new magazine which will be published at Boston (Pierce Bldg., Copley Square), beginning with 1899, under the editorship of B. O. Flower and Anna C. Reifsnider. It is to be "a magazine of constructive thought," and in this respect will differ somewhat from the Arena, the former magazine founded by Mr. Flower. The first volume of the new magazine is to contain a series of articles from leading men in the various religious bodies, giving the reason for their faith in them. We wish the new venture success.

—We clip the following from a Detroit paper:

Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 28.—Special.—Rev. E. B. Widger, pastor of the Church of Christ, created a sensation in his high-toned church here yesterday by denouncing his congregation as the slowest he ever addressed. He said they had kept in one rut for twenty years and had made no progress in anything. The denomination is the third in the United States, but the local branch has not increased in membership in fifteen years. The pastor ended his talk by tendering his resignation.

Ex-Mayor Stow arose for the congregation and replied vigorously, and the discussion was red-hot. The pastor withdrew immediately after ending the services, and a committee is now considering a new pastor.

The above may or may not accurately represent the event to which it refers. We have no other notice of it. We do know, however, that the church at Grand Rapids is one of the best in the state, in the character of its membership, its reputation in the community and in its sympathy with all our co-operative work. It has had a series of excellent men as pastors, and while its growth has not been rapid, it has made substantial progress, and is a credit to the city and to the cause with which it is identified. Ex-Mayor Stow, who is said to have defended the congregation from the criticism of the retiring pastor, is himself an honor to any congregation of Christians, and a Christian man of moderation, of large-hearted generosity and of wisdom. We cannot believe that there was anything non decorous in the proceedings. No doubt the church will secure a good man for pastor and go forward in its career of usefulness.

That article by you on Governor Tanner is sound to the centre —J. V. Coombs.

—The 33rd annual report of the Cincinnati Union Bethel, a copy of which just came to hand, shows a splendid record of work among river men and their families in their physical, moral, intellectual and spiritual interests and welfare. For a copy of this report send to Jas. F. Taylor Asst. Sec., Cincinnati, Ohio

—We have some reports of meetings that are unsigned. Let those who report meetings, especially those who write high-sounding commendations of preachers, not forget that their reports go for nought if unsigned.

—The responses from all quarters heartily endorsing our word of caution as to the danger of diverting our enthusiasm this Jubilee Year into wrong channels and seeking after contributions and numbers rather than seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, is very gratifying. We regret that we have not space to quote from these letters. They show that there is a widespread and deep conviction among the brethren that the deepest need of our churches and membership, including the ministry, is the putting away of the worldliness, selfishness and half-heartedness and whatever else has hindered the Lord's work in the past, and coming into a closer fellowship with God and with his Son Jesus Christ in an effort to save the world.

—Word has reached this office indirectly of the murder of M. Baghdasarian, the Armenian brother whom the Iowa churches sent to Persia as a missionary. Can any of our readers confirm the report and furnish the particulars?

—According to the following recent telegram to B. L. Smith, Cincinnati, the offerings for Home Missions are going forward by leaps and bounds. A few more such offerings as this will almost create a landslide in the church for Home Missions which would be a grand way to memorialize this Jubilee Year. But here is the message. Read it:

"A Friend" sends us five thousand dollars for the Permanent Fund of Home Missions, the interest of which is to be used to support a home missionary all the time. Rejoice with us!

—Acting under the advice of his physician Dr. Abbott, the widely known pastor of the famous Plymouth Pulpit, recently surprised his congregation and the religious world by announcing his resignation. Dr. Abbott has been doing a vast amount of work as a preacher and editor but it seems not to have been known that his physical strength was faltering under the load. We trust that a partial release of his duties will permit the return of his vigor and extend his years of usefulness in the world.

—Our first page this week presents the face of one who has occupied a prominent place among the Disciples of Christ for over half a century. A son-in law of Alexander Campbell, he was also associated with him in the building up of Bethany College, being one of its professors, and afterwards succeeding Mr. Campbell as its president. He was also associated with Mr. Campbell in the editorship of the Millennial Harbinger. He was a member of the West Virginia Constitutional Convention, and for four years State Superintendent of Public Schools. The University of Virginia conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws. Dr. Pendleton has had no superior among us as a graceful and scholarly writer. He has held an honored place in the councils of our brotherhood for many years. He is a native of Louisa Co., Va., is over fourscore years of age and is now enjoying that quietude which is so welcome to age in his beautiful home at Eustis, Fla., where, amid his orange groves he keeps up his reading and remains abreast of the times. Two of his sons are associated with the Standard Pub. Co., and all of them are following in the footsteps of their honored father.

—My husband joins me in asking you for a continuance of Bible-school and prayer-meeting topics, and we have no objections to the Christian Endeavor; we enjoy reading them.

—In a circular letter being sent out by the C. W. B. M. in the interest of the endowment of Bible Chairs in connection with state universities the following important facts are cited, and correspondingly strong appeals made. The following is a paragraph from the letter which we are sure will be read with interest, and we trust lead many to act in their behalf. The letter is signed by Helen E. Moses, C. W. B. M. secretary of their English Bible Work, to whom all communications should be sent. Her address is 306 W. Delaware St., Indianapolis, Ind.:

Our recent war with Spain is scattering the young men of our country throughout the nations; what is to be their mission, what the message of their lives in these lands? These are vital questions and are before us to-day for our consideration. A chaplain in the recent war, who had given the matter thorough and careful attention, says the highest per cent. of Christians he found in any company was fifty, while in one company numbering one hundred and four but two were members of any church. From such testimony, and there is much of it, we must conclude the Church of Christ will have much to do to meet the need for Bibles and Bible teachers. The Bible Societies and Missionary Boards are recognizing this, and are preparing for larger work than ever before. The women of the Church of Christ, through their organization, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, have for several years been doing a work that goes to the very root of this need, and have been freely giving Bible teaching to the young men of this and other nations gathered in the universities of Michigan, Virginia and Georgia. Because of the permanent need of Bible teaching in the schools where are gathered hundreds, yes, thousands of the most promising young people of our land, it is the purpose of these Christian women to endow this work so that it may become a permanent memorial of their faith in the Word of God as the power given for the healing and saving of this and all nations. This year they propose to raise at least five thousand dollars toward this endowment, and ask a personal gift from you of one dollar, or as many more as you will give. Second, they ask you to do all you will toward urging the importance of Bible reading and teaching among those around you. Third, to send a list of names of those whom you think could, or should, be interested in this work.

PERSONAL MENTION.

W. H. Boles and daughter recently visited Burnside, Ill., with a series of lectures and entertainments that were greatly enjoyed.

E. B. Scofield, of Indianapolis, Ind., called at this office during a recent visit to this city. Scofield and Hackleman are successors to W. T. Sellars' book business. Indianapolis, Ind.

J. W. Hewett, South McAlister, I. T., desires to locate in the South and engage in pastoral work and solicits correspondence to that end.

Prof. W. E. Garrison, Chair of Hebrew and Church History in the Butler Bible College, Irvington, Ind., spent Thanksgiving with his parents in this city.

J. M. Rudy, pastor of the church at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is planning for an aggressive work this winter, by thoroughly arousing the church to a keener sense of its privileges and powers.

J. T. Boone and wife recently spent a few days in this city visiting friends before starting for their new field of labor at Jacksonville, Fla. Bro. Boone reports the church at Memphis, his late pastorate, in a good, active state and well equipped for a forward movement.

A. West, assistant pastor West End Christian Church, this city, read a paper to our preachers last Monday on "Unity Among the Disciples of Christ." The paper suggested some very important facts for the consideration of his hearers.

Joel Brown, field agent of the Christian Orphans' Home, called at this office on last Monday. He is in the city to attend a meeting of the Orphans' Home Board. He tells us that Jesse McKnight, of Peoria, Ill., will dedicate the new church home at Scottville, Ill., the first Sunday in Jauary, 1899. He has a kind word to say of many of our churches upon whom he has called in the interest of the Christian Orphans' Home.

On the unanimous recommendation of the official board of the Broadway Church, Louisville, and of the retiring minister, R. T. Mathews, C. A. Thomas, of Newton, Ky., was called by the congregation Sunday, Nov. 27, to succeed Bro. Mathews. Bro. Mathews will continue to supply the pulpit until Jan. 1, when Bro. Thomas will begin his ministry.

The Broadway Church, Louisville, celebrated Thanksgiving Day by a profuse ornamentation of offerings for the Orphans' Home in the way of fruits, vegetables and other goods. R. T. Mathews repeated his sermon of the state convention on "Religion and Orphans," and a liberal collection of money followed.

J. T. Thompson closes his work at Lathrop, Mo., Dec. 31, 1898. The elders of the church there commend him and his work in strong terms.

Charles A. Young has, we learn, conditionally accepted the presidency of Bethany College. If the condition—whatever it is—should be complied with, it is safe to predict a new lease of life to "Old Bethany, dear Bethany."

S. A. Strawn, pastor of the church at Lowell, Ind., has issued an annual circular letter to the members of his flock, recounting their progress through the closing year, and appealing to their Christian patriotism for greater things for the future, for Christ.

A. J. Ferguson has removed from Saybrook to Augusta, Ill., where he began work for the church Nov. 27th. He speaks encouragingly of the outlook at Augusta and is well impressed with the people he is to serve during the coming year.

R. R. Bulgin, of Scranton, Pa., has resigned his work for the church in that city that he may do the work of an evangelist more fully. The church at Scranton it is said has prospered greatly under his ministry and the brethren were loath to give him up.

A. W. Jones, of Roswell, New Mexico, who has been doing the work of an evangelist now desires the work of a pastor. He is 28 years old and gives excellent references. Churches in need of a pastor will please take note.

The Religious Review of Reviews for November contains a group tinted picture of the International Lesson Committee elected at the 8th International Sunday school Convention, Boston, to provide the uniform lessons for 1900 to 1905, in which group appears the familiar face of Dr. B. B. Tyler, of our editorial staff.

Ellis B. Harris, of Grant City, Mo., was recently ordained to the ministry of the gospel by the church at that place. N. R. Davis, of Skidmore, Mo., preached the ordination sermon and assisted the elders of the church in the ordination ceremony. E. B. Harris is thus following in the steps of his father, W. H. Harris, of Grant City, and begins life with bright prospects of great usefulness.

The cards are out announcing the wedding of Howard T. Cree, pastor of the church at Maysville, Ky., to Miss Lilly Bryan Thomas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Thomas, of Shelbyville, Ky. The ceremony will be performed in the Christian Church at Shelbyville, Thursday evening, Dec. 15, at 6 o'clock. With the aid of the "assistant pastor" the work at Maysville will doubtless be even more effective than heretofore. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST extends its best wishes to the young couple for a useful and happy life.

A MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Rev. C. H. Smith of Plymouth, Conn., Gives the Experience of Himself and Little Girl in a Trying Season—What He Depends Upon.

The testimonials in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla come from a class of people whose words are worth considering. Many clergymen testify to the value of this medicine. Read this:

"By a severe attack of diphtheria I lost two of my children. I used Hood's Sarsaparilla as a tonic both for myself and little girl and found it most excellent as a means to restore the impoverished blood to its natural state and as a help to appetite and digestion. I depend upon it when I need a tonic and I find it at once efficacious." REV. C. H. SMITH, Congregational parsonage, Plymouth, Conn.

English Topics.

A WONDERFUL AMERICAN BOOK.

These letters are upon English Topics and in writing them I rarely diverge from the usual path. At this moment I am tempted to treat on a matter primarily American, in order to show how a great American book strikes an Englishman. By the kindness of the St. Louis Christian Publishing Company I have received a copy of "Organic Evolution Considered," by Alfred Fairhurst, A. M., Profesor of Natural Science in Kentucky University. I am in the middle of the volume and shall only slowly travel to the end. Every page is packed with either fact or argument. The facts are overwhelming and the logic is arrayed in tremendous batteries. I am perplexed to think how any student can read this volume and ever again give the smallest quarter to the Darwinians. The preliminary chapters on Matter, Force and the Method of Creation would form a capital little scientific handbook of themselves. Then follows a fine chapter of 22 pages on Natural Selection. The man who can read those 22 pages and not feel convinced that Darwin and Spencer are annihilated must be as difficult to teach as his simian ancestor according to those biologists. I was myself fully confirmed in my conviction that the Evolution theory was a hopeless fallacy, by carefully reading the great but beautifully simple French work of Quatrefages. That masterly philosopher curiously saved French modern science from the Darwinian deluge false hypotheses. Most people who know anything about modern thought in France are aware that French savants have not generally been carried away by Darwin, Huxley and Spencer, as the majority of English, German and American biologists have. This is about the only intellectual matter in which France has stood by the old theories. If Prof. Fairhurst's work could be circulated in England and if it were translated in German, it would vastly help to promote the flow of the tide which has already turned. Those sermons which Beecher preached shortly before his death, entirely in favor of Evolution from the Theistic standpoint were amongst the most flippantly specious of all his popular and beautiful discourses. They were swallowed with avidity by thousands of English readers. It is a singular fact that the sermons recently preached by Dr. Talmage and which I notice are castigated by the editor of the New York Christian Witness, are taken little notice of here. They are vehemently in condemnation of Darwinian doctrine and therefore they are persistently ignored. But they will quietly affect many minds. The New York Witness editor publishes the sermons and yet growls hideously at what he publishes, and I see he is fighting some of his astonished readers who stand up for Talmage. So the fight is only beginning. I am amused at the cool assumption of many who seem to imagine that nothing more is to be said; that man and the monkey have been indubitably proved to be the great-grandchildren of that disgusting creature, the arboreal tree-climbing quadruped of Darwin's imagination, with its hairy paletot, its big tail and its pointed ears. The truth is that the controversy is only in its incipient stage and therefore I am thankful for Prof. Fairhurst's contribution to the great discussion which can only have one end, that end being the funeral of the vaunted Darwinian doctrine.

THE ORIGIN OF MAN.

Perhaps the most important chapter in this remarkable book is that on the Origin of Man. This is the kind of chapter which would be enjoyed by the Duke of Argyll or Dr. Virchow, who has lately been amongst us from Berlin. Prof. Fairhurst shows that geologically man has but a brief existence. There has been no physical change in man during all the historic period. The oldest known skulls show no difference between primeval man and man as he is to day. According to Virchow, the missing link still remains a phantom. Virchow is the greatest scientist now living and if Germany had listened to his voice he would have saved that country from the blight of scientific as Quatrefages saved France. In this splendid chapter Prof. Fairhurst collates all the evidence on the subject of the Origin of Man worth having. A reader who masters this chapter needs nothing more. This writer seems to have read everything. Huxley, Romanes, Wallace, Dana, Max Mueller, Le Conte, are quoted with enlightening effect.

DARWIN AND THE CANNIBALS AND THE MISSIONARIES.

I am glad that Prof. Fairhurst calls up the story which should never be forgotten, which has often been related with great effect in English, of the relations of Darwin to missions amongst the heathen. When Darwin sailed past certain islands in the Pacific he found them inhabited by cannibals, whom he pronounced to be hopelessly beastial; but twenty-five years aftewards he found these same cannibals converted to Christianity and enjoying the blessings of civilization. In consequence of this astounding change wrought by Christian missionaries he gave annually to the day of his death a subscription of twenty-five pounds to the London Missionary Society. "How many years," asks Prof. Fairhurst, "would it take for even Christian missionaries to convert a tribe of gorillas into man-loving, God-fearing, self-conscious beings, capable of believing that they possessed immortal souls?"

ANARCHISTS IN ENGLAND.

All Americans know that we enjoy in England perfect liberty of the press. Anarchists and other wild revolutionists do not fail to take advantage of this freedom to set up their own various propaganda. But of mad and violent anarchism we have very little. What is more powerful and may some day assume great dimensions is that sort of anarchist communism which does not advocate assassination or any physical force, but openly protests against all forms of public authority and private property. There is a monthly journal called Freedom, now in its tenth volume, which is the organ of this party of which Prince Kropotkine is perhaps the best known leader. The true anarchist according to this journal is no enemy of society, but only of abuses. He is at war with all institutions and all habits which are based on the two principles of authority and property. The authority of man over man is a thing not to be accepted and submitted to, but to be resisted as essentially evil and wrong. "Property is theft," said Proudhon and all these anarchist communists proclaim themselves his disciples. Theoretically the English anarchist does not approve outrage, but it seems to me that he is very much like the Roman Catholics who theoretically does not approve of persecution. He very soon denies his own doctrine when it is put to actual test, when he has an opportunity of showing the wolf under the lambskin. It is quite evident that he has much more sympathy with the perpetrator of crime and of outrage than with the ordinary law-abiding citizen. The former is extolled as a devoted hero in the very same breath as he is called a homicidal maniac, while the latter is abused as a wretched groveler who must earn the contempt of high thinking men by his abject submission to injustice and wrong. Every now and then an English anarchist writer breaks out in bloodthirsty style. For instance, we have in London a revolutionary organ called the Commonweal, David Nicoll's paper, which all the time goes further than the average anarchists think prudent at present. In a recent issue this fiery editor says, "Have patience! From the blood, tears and pain of thousands shall arise an army that shall burn, slay, destroy. Though God would not save, yet shall he avenge them." Following this is a quotation from that arch-anarchist, Michael Bakounine. I will reproduce this, simply for the purpose of showing my American readers what fearful poison is being disseminated for the benefit of thousands of the masses here who are through the hardships of life only too eager to imbibe the venom of this hideous socialism.

"THE REVOLUTIONIST."

"The revolutionist is a man under a vow. He ought to have no personal interests, no business, no feelings, no property. He ought to be absorbed in one single interest, one single thought, one single passion—the revolution. . . . He has only one aim, one science—destruction; for that, and for nothing else, he studies mechanics, physics, chemistry and sometimes medicine. With the same object he observes men, characters, the situations and all the conditions of the existing social order. He hates and despises the existing morality. For him everything is moral that helps on the triumph of the revolution; everything is immoral and criminal that hinders it. Between him and society there is war—war to the death, incessant, irreconcilable. He ought to be ready to die, to endure torture, and, with his own hands, to kill all who place obstacles in the way of the revolution. So much the worse for him if he has any ties in the world—any ties of relationship, of friendship, of love! He is no true revolutionist if these attachments stay his arm. Nevertheless, he must live in the midst of society, feigning to be what he is not. He must penetrate everywhere—among the upper classes as well as among the middle, into the merchants' shops, into the church, into the government offices, into the army, into the literary world, into the detective force and into the imperial palace. . . . He must prepare a list of those that are condemned to death, and dispatch them in the order of their crimes. . . . All reasonings about the future are criminal, because they hinder destruction pure and simple and fetter the progress of the revolution. The brigand is the true revolutionist, the popular avenger, who acts without phrases taken from books. We must have a series of outrages and of audacious and even mad enterprises, strking terror into the powerful, and arousing the people till they believe in the triumph of the revolution."

So much for Michael Bakounine and his beautiful doctrine! Is it possible that seeds of this sort can be plentifully sown without producing a fearful crop? Unfortunately, socialism generally seems to tend in this direction for this reason, that the great majority of socialists are men and women who begin their ideas of reform by reforming God, Christ, the Bible and the church out of existence. I say this with regret, because I know some socialists who are splendid Christians, but are perplexed to know what to do under the present sectarian chaos and unable to see the right way out of it all. For the most part socialists in England cut the ground from under their own feet by their infidelity. W. DURBAN.

New York Letter.

Bro. C. M. Kreidler, pastor of the church at Troy, N. Y., paid our city a visit last week. His work in that city is in splendid condition. He has just entered upon his sixth year as pastor at Troy, and during the five years of his work there the membership of the church has grown from 170 to 563 and seventy have united with them within the past year. The prayer-meetings have outgrown the parlors and now are held in the lecture room, there being an average of about 200 in attendance. The working forces are thoroughly organized and are growing in efficiency all the time. A good index of this is in their missionary offerings. Five years ago they gave $78 for missions, last year they gave $430. They have recently organized a branch work in Lansingburg, a suburb of Troy, and hope to nurture it into a second church. Bro Kreidler reviewed the five years' work in a special discourse at the anniversary and indicated five forward steps which he says the church should take: Larger church attendance, including the children; enthusiastic evangelism in which every member should be engaged; greater interest upon the part of each member in directing aright the influence of the church; a deeper conscience in the matter of Christian stewardship, and more godly living. If these steps are taken greater prosperity will even attend the efforts of the Disciples in Troy.

The Church of Christ at Haverhill, Mass., under the pastoral care of Bro. E. M. Flinn, is greatly encouraged. They recently raised money and paid off a floating debt and this success together with enlarged attendance inspires pastor and people to go forward. They are planning to entertain the New England convention next June in its annual meeting. Here is a note, too, from the Church Leaflet (First Church, Philadelphia,) which has the right ring in it:

There is a growing sentiment among our members that a series of meetings should be held in the church this winter. It is a good sign. If the meetings should be held they will undoubtedly be conducted by the pastor himself, as his experience in conducting meetings would lead us to believe. He is also acquainted with one of the most prominent gospel singers in the United States, who, if we could obtain his services, would cause the church to be as crowded as it was in days gone by. It is earnestly hoped that this feeling will assume proportions that will make the meeting a necessity. Our pastor has been accustomed to conducting large meetings in the West, and we feel that his efforts here would meet with large results.

Bro. J. S. Myers, the pastor, in a personal note intimates that a growing sense of the need of greater achievements pervades the congregation. We hope this contemplated revival will materialize and result in the salvation of many souls.

The pastoral epistle from the Episcopal Bishops read in all churches of that faith in this country on the last Lord's day of October, among other things touches on three matter of more than denominational interest. They say:

Next Whitsunday will be the seventh semi-centennial anniversary of the Book of Common Prayer. And we most earnestly ask that the day may be observed in our churches as commemorating an event which, more than any other single gift of God, has reversed the confusion of tongues by giving to the lips of countless worshipers the one "mouth" in which to show forth God's praise.

We are glad, while insisting upon the importance of keeping the public-school system of education free from political intrigue or denominational intrusion, to urge all the more that it must be complemented and consecrated by more careful and definite training in religious truth in the family and in the Sunday-school, in church schools and colleges, and in the careful teaching of the clergy of the church.

It is good for us to know that the number of persons confirmed during the last three years is 3,500 more than in the like preceding period; that our list of communicants has grown by 63,145, an increase of 10 per cent., and that the contributions of the last triennium exceed those

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Do You Have Rheumatism or Neuralgia?
Are You Sleepless, Nervous, Irritable?
Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

SWAMP-ROOT Is the Great Remedy for Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid Troubles.—To Prove Its Wonderful Merits. You May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Well people have healthy kidneys.

You are in no danger of being sick if you keep your kidneys well.

They filter your blood, keep it pure and free from disease-breeding germs.

Your other organs may need care, but your kidneys most, because they do most.

If you are sick begin with your kidneys, because as soon as they are well they will help all the other organs of health.

The treatment of some diseases may be delayed without danger, not so with kidney disease.

Swamp-Root is the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is a genuine specific with wonderful healing action on the kidneys.

It will be found by both men and women just what is needed in all cases of kidney and bladder disorders, lame back, dull pain or ache in the back, gravel catarrh of the bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, uric acid troubles and Bright's disease, which is the worst form of neglected kidney trouble.

Swamp-Root cures inability to hold water and promptly overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night.

The way to be well is to pay attention to your kidneys.

To take Swamp-Root when you are suffering from clogged kidneys.

This prompt, mild and wonderful remedy is easy to get at the drug stores.

The strong tendency toward organization is one of the religious perils of our time. Almost every religious and moral sentiment, apparently, feels called upon to crystallize and have a president, a secretary and a treasurer. Mr. Theodore F. Seward has come to the front again; this time as the originator of the "Neighborhood Chain" movement. For a few years past he has worried himself, not to say other people also, in pushing his "Don't Worry Circle." His directions to candidates for admission to the order are as follows:

Write to three persons about reporting themselves as links, and ask each to write to three others, with a request that they also continue the work. When practicable, let the three persons spoken to be of a different religious faith from your own. Begin the practice of definitely and earnestly sending out thoughts of love, sympathy and helpfulness each day, if only for a very few minutes. Let loving wishes and prayers first go out to the whole round world, thus surrounding it with an invisible chain of love. Then turn the thought toward friends and acquaintances, especially toward those whom we cherish any unkind, envious or critical feeling. It is well to have a regular time for this daily exercise. There are already many thousand people throughout the world who follow the practice at the hour of noon. The sympathetic association with so many others in spiritual fellowship is an advantage.

This is all good in itself, but the church of Christ with the blessed gospel of God's grace in her hands, is doing or should be doing, this very thing. Why not use this widespread "organization" energy, in the name of Christ simply as members of his holy church?

Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, ex-Minister to Spain was the guest of honor at the Baptist Social Union at the Hotel Savoy a few evenings since, and in an address gave utterance to these words, which merit reading because of the speaker's high official position under our government in Spain:

"The truth," said he, "was told when it was said that I did everything to preserve peace between this country and Spain. I did it at the direction of the President of our country. Peace, I believe, is the purpose of the American people. When war did come, however, your President was as quick, as resolute and as sure in striking a decisive blow to Spain as he had been patient and forbearing before. I need not recount to you the victories that practically swept Spain's navy from the waters of the ocean or the rapid defeat of her troops on the land. But, now that peace has once more been restored, the American people are face to face with a grave question. What is to be done with the Philippines?

"This is a question we must consider intelligently and humanely. Porto Rico is ours by the action of the people of that island. Cuba is ours by r ght of conquest. We will retain it until, as we promised, a permanent, stable and free government is established by the people of the island. That, I fear, will be a much longer period than the President and Congress ever dreamed of when war was declared.

"War and crime have been the rule so long that I fear that before the conditions named can be fulfilled almost an entirely new set of people will have to be imported into the place.

"If we bring our highest courage to bear, and accept the responsibility regretfully but bravely, the same Providence that gave Dewey a victory at Manila Bay will give victory to the highest purpose of this nation, and result in a blessing, not only for our people, but for the entire civilized world."

S. T. WILLIS.

1281 Union Ave.

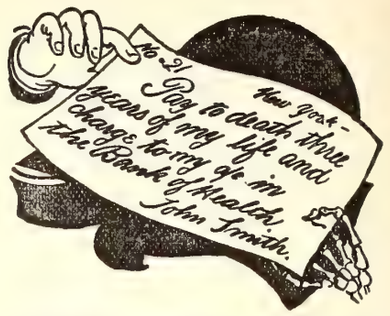
Early Times in Indiana.

In the month of June, 1842, "the elders and brethren of the Church of Christ in Indiana" held a meeting in the city of Indianapolis, in which a general plan for the co-operation of the members and churches of this state was made for evangelistic work. The state was divided into four districts, "the first district to consist of that region of the country lying and being north of the national road and east of the meridian of Indianapolis; the second district to lie south of the first; the third to lie west of the second, bounded by the meridian of Indianapolis, and the national road on the north, and the fourth district to lie north of the third."

An evangelist was selected for each one of these districts and they were selected by ballot, namely, for the first district, Benjamin Franklin; second district, Ryland T. Brown; third district, James M. Mathes; fourth district, John O'Kane. The salaries for the evangelists were fixed at the sum of $460 for married men and $300 for unmarried, for their services for each year. They were expected to make their collections for their salaries at the meetings and by visiting the different churches for that purpose. An address was issued by that assembly with this title: "To the congregation associated on the foundation of the apostles and prophets and Jesus Christ the chief corner stone, throughout the state of Indiana." It was signed by Ryland T. Brown as chairman, and F. W. Emmons as secretary.

As we read this address we discovered that they saw very clearly the necessity for the co-operation of the churches, and the better support of their ministers. In that address we find these words:

"The day of miraculous gifts has passed; we cannot expect that our public laborers can command the stone to be made bread, or that the raven will feed them, like Elijah of old. If this were the case, the greater part of the brotherhood would be cut off from the glory of any active participation in the conversion of the world. But none are to be drones in the heavenly family. It is the duty of every Christian to labor in his appropriate sphere, and if we cannot preach ourselves we can aid in supplying the necessities of those who do, and so be joint laborers in the good cause. This is not only the rational feature of this subject, but it is the statute of heaven, signed, sealed and delivered by the Spirit of inspiration."



The next annual gathering was to be held at Noblesville, in Hamilton county, to commence on Friday before the second Lord's day in June, 1843, at which time the evangelists and delegates from the churches were to meet and report progress and deliberate for future operations. At that meeting in 1843 Barton W. Stone was present and preached his last sermon to the brethren in Indiana. His lovely character, his aged and fatherly advice, made him a unique figure at that meeting. He left there for his home in Jacksonville, Ill., where the next year he passed away to be with the Master and received the reward of his labors.

A venerable mother in Israel who was present at that meeting in 1843 gives many reminiscences of the historic characters among the Disciples attending that meeting. Benjamin Franklin had not yet gained the fame that afterwards made him so well known as a great gospel preacher throughout the entire country and as the editor of the American Christian Review. Dr. Ryland T. Brown, who afterwards became distinguished as a citizen of Indianapolis and as the man who knew more about more things and knew it well than any man in the state. All branches of science, and especially geology, were to him as an open book. He not only excelled in this field, but also in the clear understanding of the revelation that God gave to his people.

Another character at that meeting was John O'Kane, noted not only for his ability as a preacher, but also for his ever-abounding wit and good humor. He was six feet and one inch in height, very straight and slender, which gave him the appearance of being taller than he really was. In the style of the time, his hair was worn long and was black as a raven's wing. His eyes were black and set well back in the head, where at times they would sparkle with mirth, and at other times look out with the piercing glances that betokened woe to an opponent if an encounter should come on the field of polemics. With a swaggering air a preacher once refused to debate with him, at the same time observing that he would gladly discuss the doctrinal issues with Alexander Campbell, or some of the great leaders of the Reformation. Fixing his keen eyes upon him, and pointing his long finger at him in the style of Randolph, O'Kane replied: "You, you debate with Alexander Campbell! Why, if one of his ideas got into your head it would explode like a bombshell!"

He was a man of sarcasm and irony, but with all, a man with a great and tender heart. The times in which he lived made men of conscience tenacious of what they believe to be the truth, and thus made them warriors and oftentimes harsh in dealing with their opposers. It was hard for O'Kane ever to permit an opportunity to go by without a retort if it were possible. A certain opposer of his once met him and extending his hand, said: "Well, Bro. John, I used to think that you were an unprofitable servant, but I think differently now." "Indeed," replied O'Kane, shaking his hand warmly, "that is precisely what I used to think of you, brother, but I have never changed my mind!"

D. R. LUCAS.

Biliousness, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, disturbed sleep, nervousness, headache, giddiness and drowsiness, wind and pain or fullness of the stomach after meals, cold chills and flushings of heat, shortness of breath—these are the blank cheques of physical bankruptcy. Take them to a physician and he will fill them up with the name of some more or less serious disease. Every time that you carry one of them to him you draw out some of your funds in the Bank of Health. Keep it up, and there will soon be no funds in the treasury.

The man who suffers from these disorders and neglects them will soon be in the relentless grasp of some fatal disease. If he is naturally narrow chested and shallow lunged, it will probably be consumption; if his father or mother died of paralysis or some nervous trouble, it will probably be nervous exhaustion or prostration, or even insanity; if there is a taint in the family blood, it will be blood or skin disease; if he lives in a new or a low, swampy country, it will be malaria; if he lives a life of exposure, it may be rheumatism. There is just one safe course for a man to follow who finds himself out of sorts and suffering from the symptoms described. It is to resort to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This medicine makes the appetite keen, corrects all disorders of the digestion, renders assimilation perfect, invigorates the liver, purifies and enriches the blood and builds firm, healthy flesh and nerve tissue. It cures almost all diseases that result from insufficient or improper nourishment of the brain and nerves. Bronchial, throat, and even lung affections, when not too far advanced, readily yield to it.

"I took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for Eczema," writes J. W. Barnhart, of No. 446 De Witt Street, Buffalo, N. Y., "and it completely cured me."

Colorado Convention.

It was held with the Central Church, Pueblo, Nov. 1-6. It was the seventeenth annual session. Seventy-four delegates and visitors were in attendance. B. O. Aylesworth opened the Ministerial Association with an address on "Some things Requisite to Christian Union." The address of the president, Grant K. Lewis, dealt with "Some Responsibilities of the Churches." B. B. Tyler answered the question, "Have we a Scriptural Eldership?" Elmer Ward Cole spoke of "The Preacher of To day—His Opportunities," Leonard G. Thompson on "Fishers of Men" and R. B. Preston on "Beginning at Jerusalem." M. L. Streator closed the association with an address on "The Coming of the Lord." The officers of the association for the year are Grant K. Lewis, president; J. E. Pickett, vice-president; Elmer Ward Cole, secretary, and R. B. Preston, treasurer.

In his address as president of the Colorado Christian Missionary Convention B. O. Aylesworth said that the last year in Colorado mission work was an illustrated souvenir of Christian heroism. The report of the corresponding secretary, Leonard G. Thompson, showed 40 churches with a membership of 4,208; 35 Sunday-schools with 3,602 members; 23 Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor with 700 members, and 19 auxiliaries to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions with 338 members. Nine churches were assisted during the year out of the appropriations from the C. W. B. M., and from moneys raised within the state. Those nine churches raised an average of $11.06 per member for all purposes, and of 51 cents per member for missions. The 40 churches raised for all purposes $31,731.72. Of this sum $1,581.97 was spent for missions. This is an average of $7.54 per member for all purposes, and 37 1-2 cents per member for missions. Counting as the yearbook counts we have 41 preachers in Colorado, but of these only 28 are preaching, and some of these only a part of the time. During the sessions of the missionary convention, J. E. Pickett spoke on "Church Federation—What Is It?" The convention address was delivered by Samuel B. Moore. He was followed by G. W. Muckley on Church Extension, and pledges aggregating $60 per year were taken.

The convention adopted the report of the committee on Plan of Work for the New Year to the effect that we raise $1,000 in Colorado this year for Colorado work, and that the state board apportion that amount among the churches; that a state evangelist be employed for Colorado; that each church support its pastor in at least one meeting during the year as missionary work at some needy point; that we attempt arrangements for meetings at needy places by Eastern pastors willing to do vacation work at the possible compensation; that capable, consecrated young men be sought—men who will succeed, who have succeeded, in the East—who are willing to devote their lives to Colorado work, content with meager support until their work bears fruit; that we appeal to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions for further help for those churches which cannot yet be self-sustaining.

The convention officers for the year are president, Samuel B. Moore; vice-president, J. E. Pickett; recording and corresponding secretary, Leonard G. Thompson; treasurer, A. E. Pierce; other members, B. O. Aylesworth, Grant K. Lewis, B. B. Tyler, R. B. Preston, Mrs. Laura B. Thompson, president of Colorado C. W. B. M., and Miss Sallie Barriger, secretary of C. W. B. M. The trustees are I. E. Barnum, H. Morse, Wm. A. Ellmore. The state board elects its own president and secretary. These offices are filled by B. O. Aylesworth and Grant K. Lewis.

The state C. W. B. M. occupied an afternoon and evening. The speakers in the afternoon were Mrs. Laura B. Thompson, president, Mrs. Kate Updyke and Mrs. F. D. Pettit. The report of the treasurer was presented by that officer, Mrs. M. L. Parks, who also read the report of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Sallie B. Semones, the latter being absent. Mrs. M. L. Parks conducted "A Model Auxiliary." Mrs. B. B. Tyler led the devotions. Miss Lois A. White spoke on "Junior and Young People's Work." The convention address was delivered by Mrs. Minnie F. Boggess, who was followed by Miss White, outlining the mission fields and work of the C. W. B. M.

The Sunday-school Institute was conducted by Mrs. Belle V. Harbert, who spoke on "The Scope of Sunday-school Work," Mrs. Lois Shepherd on "The Beginning of Wisdom," Daniel Ward on "How to Teach an Effectual Bible Lesson," B. B. Tyler on "How to have a Successful Teachers' Meeting" and J. E. Pickett on "The Value and Importance of Decision Day in the Sunday-school."

In the Christian Endeavor session Leonard G. Thompson presided in the afternoon, in the absence of the state superintendent, E. F. Behr, and J. E. Pickett presided at night. Following the report and address of the state superintendent, which was read by the presiding officer of the afternoon, Mrs. Rose Nipher read a paper on "How Develop the Individual?" and Miss Minnie Brown one on "What Should Christian Endeavorers Read?" Grant K. Lewis presented the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses in detail, and Ernest Piper conducted a Parliament of Methods. At night the convention address was delivered by B. B. Tyler, the Christian Endeavor Pledge being his theme. Miss Minnie Blake, of Denver, was elected state superintendent of Christian Endeavor Societies for Colorado.

The Sunday services of the convention consisted of a sermon at 11 A. M., by Chas. A. Stevens, the Lord's Supper at 3 P. M., conducted by M. L. Streator, and a sermon at 8 P. M., by J. B. Johnson.

The music was inspiring throughout, being under the direction of C. C. Pomeroy, with the assistance of Miss Lizzie Noble as organist and a good force of singers from the Central Church. The hospitality of the Pueblo Disciples was abundant and hearty. In the judgment of the writer it was the best Colorado convention since that of 1892. Miss Lois A. White and G. W. Muckley were present for their first time in a Colorado convention, and with the exception of the visit of F. M. Rains, in 1893, it was the first visit of a national secretary to a Colorado convention. Colorado wishes the presence of more of our national secretaries at its conventions. Will they please remember the wish here expressed? The next convention meets with the South Broadway Church, Denver.

Ministerial Relief Items.

The work of the Board of Ministerial Relief has been very properly called "a ministry of love," for it is the spirit of love paying a debt she owes to those whose lives have been given to her service.

Every lover of Christ and his church is pleased at the growth in our missionary work and enterprises and hails with joy the increase in our missionary force at home and abroad. But the question arises, What is to be done in a few years more when these missionaries are compelled, on account of age or disability, to leave the mission field? There is only one way that seems practical to provide for them, and that is, by the Board of Ministerial Relief; a fund given to this board will always be a means of providing for their necessities.

The church must consider the question of her ministry that is to be, and the way she deals with the ministry she now has will settle in a large measure the character of her future ministry. Young men of ability will hesitate to devote their lives to the service of a church that neglects in any way its worn-out and disabled ministers.

One thing is certain to grow out of the work of the Board of Ministerial Relief, and that is a better understanding of the relation of the church to its ministry and of the ministry to the church. The mutual obligations of mutual service and care will make a stronger tie and bring them into a closer fellowship. Instead of the minister being, as many suppose him to be, a hireling working for wages alone, he will be a shepherd to the flock, while the flock will understand that he is simply eating the fruit of the flock.

The third Lord's day in December is the time when every preacher and every church should make an offering in aid of this work.

La Grippe Cured

This modern malady has become dreaded not more for its direct fatality than for the weakness of body and mind it leaves behind it. Prolonged debility, permanent prostration, melancholy and suicide follow La Grippe. For this disease there is no remedy superior to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"The best remedy for la grippe that I know of is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."
REV. JOHN K. CHASE,
South Hampton, N. H.

"My wife and five children were taken down with la grippe, while the disease was so widely prevalent. I dosed them with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and before using quite two bottles my family was restored to health. I know of several obstinate cases of the same complaint which were also cured by this remedy." J. PARMINTER, Paulette, Miss.

It is near the Christmas time and the Christmas time is a time when the heart opens to the cry of the suffering and needy. Surely, this will be heard and heeded by all.

Neglect and forgetfulness are sometimes as great sins as actual deeds of wrong. Jesus says, "The poor ye have always with you," and he makes them his representatives. Many a heart has longed as they have thought of the other days that they might have been in Judea to have ministered to the Christ. But every poor saint is a representative of his, for he himself hath said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my disciples, ye have done it unto me."

"Oh, sons of God, who wear his holy name,
Are we in truth his children even yet?
Can we of these his servants say in lasting shame
We dared forget?"

Twenty different states are represented among the beneficiaries of this society. We asked the missionary secretary of one state, who was sending us a list of the preachers of his state, to mark those whom he thought worthy, deserving and entitled to our aid, and were much gratified on receiving his list to find that without knowing anything of our work he had marked all those to whom we were extending relief in his state.

A minister who was called to attend the funeral of one of our beneficiaries after he had crossed the river, says:

"I realized this morning, as I stood by the coffined form of this aged brother, for the first time the great need of the work in which you are engaged. It is indeed a labor of love. I wish every minister of the Church of Christ could have stood with me this morning over the poor coffin which enclosed the mortal remains of this pioneer minister, and have felt the force of the conditions which were represented.

Could this have been so, greater and more powerful appeals would be made in the aid of the cause you represent and for which you plead so earnestly, and you may rely on me to be one of the staunchest supporters of Ministerial Relief hereafter. I have been careless like many others and neglectful of this work, but will be so no more."

Some persons who do not understand the conditions and circumstances attending the life of the minister of Christ, sometimes think and say that he ought to give more time and attention to looking after financial matters, so as to provide for himself in his old age. But it is a sad fact that the moment a minister begins to do this he loses his influence and power over the very class of men that thus criticised him. Let it once be considered in any way by the people that a minister is engaged in his work solely from financial considerations, and his power as a minister is gone. The fact is, to make money requires consecration and devotion to that work, and no man can be wholly consecrated to two great purposes at once. It would seem that Jesus settled that matter when he said, "Ye cannot serve God and man." Hence, the only sensible way is for the minister to be consecrated to his work. Let the business man be consecrated to his, and let his supply be given to the minister in need. This is Christ's plan; this is the apostolic teaching.

"Well-nigh all our ministers have come from the ranks of the poor. If we go back, Moses was the son of a poor Levite; Gideon was a thrasher; David was a shepherd boy; the apostles were unlearned fishermen; Melancthon was a workman in an armorer's shop; Martin Luther was the child of a poor miner; Carey was a shoemaker of Northampton; Livingstone worked in cotton mills. Scores and hundreds of the best men who have filled the ranks of the Christian ministry have been poor boys with nothing to start upon when they entered upon the work to which God called them; often their salaries have been exceedingly meagre, barely enough having been paid them to keep themselves and their loved ones during their active years in the ministry; then all manner of charities and benevolences have appealed to them constantly. A score of calls for relief pressing upon the preacher, where one comes to the average church member."—F. D. Power.

As a matter of fact there are many churches who are unable to pay a liberal salary to their minister. This being the fact the minister is compelled to make some sacrifice or give up the work, which in numberless instances they have always been ready to do. There are, in fact, very few churches in our land to-day who have not in their infancy been nurtured and cared for by the sacrifice of some preacher of the gospel. It is true, perhaps, that many churches do not pay what they really ought to pay their minister, but we are glad to say there is an inmprovent in this direction. The old story, however, is true perhaps even yet of some of them. A deacon in a prayer-meeting was very earnestly praying and in his prayer said:

"O, Lord, bless our pastor and keep him humble and poor."

He was interrupted by another deacon, who said:

"Amen! that's right Lord, you keep him humble and we will keep him poor!"

Every young minister should carefully consider the question of insurance. At the of 25 years the expectancy of life is about 35 years or a little more. An endowment policy of insurance with a 35 year limit to a person of that age costs but very little more than what is called straight life insurance. One at the age of 25 years taking a 35 year endowment policy would thus receive at the age of 60 years the full face value of his policy. In the meantime, if his death should occur, the same amount would go to his family.

The soldier enlisted in the service of his country goes fearlessly forward, knowing that if he is in any way disabled by disease or wounds, the government that he serves will provide for his wants and see that he does not suffer in his old age. The church should certainly be animated by the same spirit in caring for the soldiers who are disabled in her service.

In the experience gained by a short canvass at the various conventions in behalf of the Ministerial Aid Fund, it has been highly gratifying the cordial and interested manner in which the people receive the message. All they need is to know the necessities of the case and they will supply the means to care for the Lord's poor ones.

It is recorded that when Knowles Shaw the the distinguished evangelist, was killed in a railroad accident, the last words that he had spoken to a companion minister by his side were these: "It is a grand thing to rally men to the cause of Christ." These words sum up in a single sentence the great work of the minister of Christ. Devoted to this great work, enlarging the Master's kingdom, sowing the good seed in human hearts, it is certainly the duty of his brethren to sustain him in the active work, and also as well when he can no longer wield the Sword of the Spirit.

A minister once doing a good work for a congregation was not well supported. He got along for sometime, making a great sacrifice, but finally one Sunday he said:

"Brethren, you will have to pray the Lord to let down a Jacob's ladder from heaven each Sunday morning and evening so that I can go up to heaven in the evening of that day and come down in the morning. If you do not do this, one thing is certain, if I remain among you during the week, I must have something to eat." It is useless to say that after that his wants were well supplied. It is often carelessness and want of thought on the part of the congregation as to their duty.

Covetousness is a sin, but so also is prodigality. Many persons who would consider it wrong if they were charged with covetousness, at the same time spend great sums of money for things that are useless to say the least, and often harmful. In this age of ours the sin of prodigality is as great, perhaps, as that of covetousness.

Bernard de Palassy, the Huguenot potter, distinguished himself by his knowledge and talents. The French King, Henry III., said to him one day that he should be compelled to give him up to his enemies unless he changed his religion. "You have often said to me sire," was his reply, "that you pity me, but as for me, I pity you who have given utterance to such words as "I shall be compelled." These are unkindly words and I say to you in royal phrase, neither the Guises nor all your people, nor yourself, are able to compel a humble manufacturer of earthenware to bend his knees before statues. I worship God alone."

If you are going to do anything for the world, for humanity, for any good cause like that of Ministerial Relief, the time to do it is now. Alexander, being asked how he had conquered the world, replied, "By not delaying,"

Despise not the day of small things, is an injunction of one of the old servants of the Lord. Small incidents sometimes lead to great results. After the battle of Gettysburg a soldier was found dead upon the field holding in his hand the picture of three small children. No clue to his name could be found. In the terrors of battle he had comforted himself with that picture. It was published and by this means the children were found in a village of Western New York. The sale of this picture resulted in the founding of the National Orphan Homestead at Gettysburg, where the Humiston children, the originals of the pictures, found a home, and where their mother was for many years matron.

It is a lamentable fact that some persons give that they may have the applause of their equals for their gifts, but it is best to remember to "let the lips of the poor be the trumpet of thy gift."

In the year 1776 the British Government, by an act of Parliement, placed a tax upon silver-plate. It was reported to the Commissoner of Revenue that John Wesley was evading the law. So they rather peremtorily demanded that he make a return. Mr. Wesley replied as follows: "Sir, I have two silver teaspoons at London and two at Bristol. This is all the plate which I have at present and I shall not buy any more while so many around me want bread. I am, sir, your most humble servant, John Wesley." Perhaps there was never a more charitable man than Mr. Wesley. During his whole life he lived very economically and in the course of fifty years it has been supposed he gave away more than 30,000 pounds. What an example for the wealthy men of our times!

Among the men of our times who seem to rightly appreciate the use of the wealth they have been permitted to accumulate is that of Gen. F. M. Drake, ex-Governor of Iowa. At Chattanooga he gave $5,000 to the Home Missionary Society and since that has given $5,000 to the Foreign Missionary Society. He was the originator that gave $5,000 to the Church Extension Socicty; he has given over $100,000 to Drake University; he also gave $1,000 to the Ministerial Aid Fund; and his other benefactors are many, known only to those who have been recipients. The man who administers on his own estate while he lives will avoid the court and attorney's fees, that often at great cost attend the execution of a will.

Kansas City Letter.

While the Christian world is uniting in thanksgiving for the manifold mercies of God upon his children, we need not think it strange if an occasional note of discord is heard, even in this favored land, where Providence has so lavishly scattered benefactions of every kind. We have been favored with such an exhibition of thanklessness here, on the part of Dr. J. E. Roberts, who styles himself "Minister of The Church of This World." Starting as a Baptist minister, Mr. Roberts soon drifted away from the secure anchorage of the Christian faith and became a Unitarian preacher. After several years' service in this capacity, first in Denver, and then in Kansas City, he became too radical for even that diluted form of religious liberalism, and resigned his pulpit, to the satisfaction of a portion of his congregation. Some of them, however, followed him into the "Church of This World," as he calls the loosely organized society that has gathered around him. He speaks every Sunday morning in the Coates Opera House, and his addresses are usually devoted to attacks upon the Christian faith and hope, such as will compare favably, in respect of brilliant rhetoric, skillful misrepresentation and appeal to prejudice and ignorance, with those of Col. Ingersoll. It is his special delight, on occasions when the followers of Christ are uniting in any service of gratitude and joy, such as Thanksgiving or Christmas, to vent his spleen in tirades of unusual bitterness against the particular cause of their happy remembrance. Last Sunday this gentleman delivered an anti-Thanksgiveng fulmination, which would have been quite funny, if it had not been so sadly untrue, unkind and irreverent. In the beginning of his address he declares that it is his purpose to continue his annual protest against this Tnanksgiving custom, as long as he continues to be a public speaker. What he expects to accomplish by this he does not state, but probably his hopes are as high as were those of the ancient dame who wielded her broom against the inrushing waters, and fated to meet with the same degree of success, no doubt. But he presumes greatly upon the ignorance of his audience when he comes to state his first reason for opposing this custom, namely, that it is "totally un-American." Is he ignorant of the history of Thanksgiving? Does he not know that, since the year 1621, the very year after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers upon the New England Coast, it has been the custom of our fathers to appoint frequent days of thanksgiving for what they believed to be special mercies from the hand of God? Does he not know that the Revolutionary Congress appointed several such days, and that the adoption of our Constitution, in 1789, was celebrated by a day of national thanksgiving, ordered by Congress, and duly proclaimed by Pres. George Washington? Does he not know that, since 1863, this annual Thanksgiving has been observed without the omission of a single year, and that it is as well established and universally observed as Christmas or the Fourth of July? Yes, doubtless he knows all this. But he thought that his audience would not know, so he was bold to say what he must have been aware was untrue to all history. If this nation is not a Christian nation, at least to the extent that justifies its observance of such memorial days as Thanksgiving and Christmas, then it has been sadly misunderstood by the statesmen who have been first to recognize the Divine Hand in our history.

But Mr. Roberts waxes very warm, as his address proceeds, perhaps because he feels somewhat the difficulty of imposing upon the public such manufactured history. He becomes very indignant at the thought that God is thanked for the results of our recent war with Spain, and demands that the credit of our glorious victories shall be given to Dewey and Sampson, and their fellow heroes, and to them alone. Then remembering, perhaps, that these brave men themselves were first to give to God the glory of our victories, he bursts out with this rare specimen of arrogant blasphemy: "I arise to demand that God Almighty be dismissed from the military and naval service!" Poor, ranting fool! Because he has dismissed God from his own heart and pulpit and church, he thinks to expel him from the hearts of our brave soldiers and sailors. Such madness is too pitiful for censure. Let us pray that this man's spiritual insanity may soon be dissipated, and that, like Nebuchadnezzar of old, he may come to realize again before he dies, that there is a God who ruleth in the heavens above and in the earth beneath.

Cincinnati Letter.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—The great conventions meet here Oct. 13-20, 1899, and we are preparing for them.

The 10th missionary district, of Ohio, which includes Cincinnati, is awake to present opportunities. The church at Lockland which was organized last spring has called W. O. Thomas as pastor, and he starts well.

The new church at Norwood, where Bro. A. W. Taylor is pastor, and much beloved, is now in a fair meeting with our district evangelist, Bro. Allen Wilson, they have had 19 additions to date. Bro. J. A. Pine has lately come to Eastern Ave. and even now we have begun to love him. Last Sunday we dedicated a neat house at Fairmont, another suburb, where Bro. J. S. Lawrence and his faithful coworkers have conducted a Sunday-school for two years. The school averages about 125. Two confesssions within a week.

H. K. Pendleton and others are starting in their own "hired house," at Terrace Park. P. Y. Pendleton is now in a meeting at Monteray with five confessions thus far.

Bro. Lawman, of New Paris, expects to plant our cause at Campbellstown, the home of the parents of our Rose Oxer.

Bro. Seaman is in a meeting with the 4th Street Church, Covington, with 29 additions to date. The Central Church has started a misssion Sunday-school on Central Avanue and Walnut Street, each about a mile from the church. Stanley Spraggens superintendent of one and N. T. Purcell of the other. Mt. Auburn is calling for a Sunday-school, and there is a committee to report at the next board meeting what will be done in the rich suburb of Avondale, where we have several members.

Bro. Isaac Selby lately gave his series of lectures at the Central, at invitation of the Ministeral Association, and on Nov. 28 and 29, he is to debate with a representative of free thought from Cleveland. He is a champion, and our city churches should call him for a course of lectures. On Nov. 8th the Disciples of this vicinity held a banquet at the Grand Hotel, enjoying a pleasant evening. Reminiscences of days that are gone, work now being done and hopes for the future were brought before us in happy toasts. Our next monthly conference will be held at the Central Dec. 5th. Preachers' meeting at 10:30 A. M., lunch at 12; reception to our new preachers and wives at 1 P. M.; board meeting at 2 P. M., and at the same hour Sister Moses will address the women.

Two Years More.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: — In your issue Nov. 24th, page 672, in "Open Parliament on our National Conventions," Bro. E. C. Browning begins his remarks with: "The year 1899 will close the most wonderful century of human history." Stop and think a moment, Bro. B. It will not do to close this century of great things so soon as that. If the first century had closed with the year 99 there would have been only 99 years in the century. If the second century had closed with the year 199, there would have been only that many years in the two centuries. So also with this greatest of centuries, if you end it short of December 31, 1900, it will not be complete. For instance, Bro. B., if I were indebted to you $1,900, and would count out to you the dollars in payment and stop with the eighteen hundred and ninty-ninth dollar, you would surely say, "Come now, Bro. W., put up the other dollar." So also the 19th century owes us the full number of years, and must give us two more after 1898.

Fraternally yours, M. WETZEL.

For the Boys.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Rev. A. W. Conner, of Irvington, Ind., has moved our town to begin a good work for our boys. He makes an irresistible plea for the Young Prince. His work here is applauded by every one. Money castle is usually the last to surrender. Mr. Conner took it easily and nearly $1,000 was pledged to build a reading room and gymnasium for boys and young men in our town. Five directors were selected to direct the work. Every church should call for this plea. It will do you good.

Evangelist Wanted.

The Iowa Central District Board which has for sometime been planning to employ a district evangelist now has matters in such shape that the right kind of a man should be able to secure a fair salary, and would be pleased to hear from men who feel capable of organizing, systematizing, "enthusing" and doing the work of an evangelist.

Dedication at Huntington, Indiana.

The Christian Church at Huntington, Ind., has just completed and dedicated a new and elegant church building.

Many years ago the church here, few in numbers and weak financially, built a small, unpretentious house where for many years they worshiped and laid the foundation for the good work that has been accomplished in these later years. Seventeen years ago, while the beloved and eloquent L. Berry Smith was pastor of the church, they built a brick house and worshiped in it until the present year. They have remodeled, and rebuilt it and made it one of the handsomest and most commodious church houses in the city. Bro. W. T. Wells is the hard-working and successful pastor at Huntington. He is in the hearts of the people both in and out of the church and is doing good, safe work.

Lord's day, Nov. 27th, was a day that will be remembered for a long time by the church here. It witnessed the formal opening and dedication of this beautiful edifice. After the sermon we asked for $3,600, the amount necessary to provide for all indebtedness. The giving was prompt and generous. Before the close of the night service the entire amount was raised and there was great joy in that city.

The church at Huntington starts on a new career of usefulness and has better facilities than ever before to do a great work for the Master.

A Good Convention.

Our district convention closed to-day. The attendance was about double what it was last year, but still a majority of the counties in the district were not represented. The papers read, however, and the sermons were of an unusually high order. Any of them would have been worthy of our National Convention. Brethren Clay, Davis and Abbott were present, and were the soul of the convention, as usual.

A Note From England.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON:—Arrived safe on Nov. 19th, and our work at Chester opens very encouragingly. Received a royal welcome from our good brethren here and we have every indication for a great harvest for the Master and a forward move all along the line of Christian work. We have had a large attendance and three confessions this first week of our work, while the general interest is deepening and widening rapidly.

Very truly yours in Him,
J. A. L. ROMIG.

A Word from Oklahoma.

In reply to your request as to what the brethren think of the space occupied by notes and suggestions on Sunday-school Lessons, Midweek Prayer-meeting Topics, Christian Endeavor, Bethany Reading Courses, will say I have been delighted with them and prize them highly. To me they are highly instructive, and to my mind they are leading heavenward, bright lights here and there along the pathway as we journey to the heavenly Canaan. Their spirit is to lead to Christ and anything that will lead to "the Rock that is higher than I," I hail with joy. We need cheery words in this new country, and as we have but little preaching I love to hear the word of cheer in your paper and the success of the cause in other parts of the country, yet hoping and praying for increase of laborers here and the building up of the wilderness and waste places with the rose of Sharon until they may be called "Beulah." God being my helper I will toil on in the vineyard of the Lord as best I can by his assisting grace in the good work, praying that the brethren awake out of sleep.

Yours in the Lord,

Jamaica Printing Press.

TO THE EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—Dear Brother: I am greatly indebted to you for your kind interest and help in obtaining a press to aid us in the work of our missions in Jamaica. At Chattanooga it appeared that the obtaining of the amount necessary for the purchase of the press would not be a matter of any difficulty. Approval of the undertaking was generally expressed. Hitherto I have not received nearly enough, and the response to your disinterested appeal has been small. As I intend to leave this country in another week, intended contributions should be promptly sent. We think the possession of this press will be an important auxiliary in carrying on our work. There will never be a better time for securing it than now. If friends who purposed sending will do so at once it will soon be done. I trust as many as possible will have a share in it.

Your truly,
C. E. RANDALL, Missionary in Jamaica.

It is Bro. Randall's purpose to start a small eight-page paper to be known as "The Jamaica Christian," on his return to Jamaica, if he succeeds in securing his press. This means an advanced step in that island, and those who contribute to this fund will be materially helping to make that step possible. Shall we not hear from a number in response to our call for $1.00 donations?—EDITOR.

Dedication at Eureka, Kan.

The dedication of the beautiful house of worship, recently finished in this city, passed off very pleasantly and successfully the 27th inst. By cash gifts and time pledges all debts are provided for. The day was cloudy and snow was falling, but the house was packed to its utmost capacity, there being by actual count over 700 seated. The music was very fine, the large choir being supported by an excellent orchestra. The giving was rapid and liberal. At 3:30 P. M. the house was filled and a delightful communion service was had. Preaching again at night, and I will stay over until Wednesday.

This splendid building and the great spiritual awakening is due, partly, to a meeting held by the writer last spring, but possibly more to the tireless efforts of the minister, W. E. Bobbitt, a young man of great promise. He closes his three years' work Jan. 1st, and will go to Drake for a few years. He is the most popular preacher in the city, and now has the satisfaction of having completed the largest and most beautiful church building in town. There are here, as there ever have been elsewhere, and ever must be anywhere, some noble men and women without whom no house would be built, preacher employed and paid, or missionary sent out to heathen lands.

The house is wooden, built of the best material and by first-class workmen; has two main rooms, class rooms, basement, good bell, and heated by hot air furnace. The pews and pulpit are of oak, and are very attractive and comfortable. The board have their eye on a man to follow Bro. Bobbitt, and we trust that there will be no break in the good work. There is a very bright future for the church in Eureka.

Methods of Work.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON:—I desire to add my words of commendation for the excellence of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as a religious paper. As I was thinking of its different departments it occurred to me that a regular department of "Methods of Work" would make an excellent column for your paper. The Church Economist, published in New York City, suggested this thought to me. In such a column as this might be recorded the new and varied methods of doing things used by the different ministers. I am sure that it would be very valuable and helpful to have such a clearing house of methods.

We have recently tried in our church a kindergartner department, conducted during the hour of services. A place at which parents, one of whom would otherwise have to stay at home, can leave children from the ages of two to six while they attend services. I think it is a capital idea. It affords the privileges of services to tired mothers, and is profitable to children as well.

Fraternally yours, J. E. LYNN.

Springfield, Ill.

[The idea suggested above is a capital one. Let us have from all our workers practical suggestions on how to do things. In this preachers, Sunday-school superintendents, Endeavor workers and others may help each other. If you have a good thing pass it around. Let us hear from others.—EDITOR.]

"Our National Conventions."

I cannot say that I am one of the "several brethren" of whom answers were asked, to the following questions:

1. What changes, if any, would you suggest in the manner of conducting our conventions?
2. What suggestions have you to offer as to the Jubilee Convention?

But I think that I can fairly respond with "others who have suggestions."

As to the first question, I hardly think it practicable to adopt any stereotyped program for conducting the annual business of the conventions. New occasions will bring new duties and each annual meeting must be considered from the standpoint of its own necessities. It is not likely that any method would suit all at all times.

As to the second question, it occurs to me that on the fiftieth anniversary of the American Christian Missionary Society all reports and papers, especially of a historical character, should be prepared with unusual care and published in a volume as a memorial of the occasion; this volume to include also the annual report of the corresponding secretaries for 1899. As far as possible each person who is living and has held the office of corresponding secretary in either the A. C. M. Society, the F. C. M. Society, or the C. W. B. Society should be asked to write the history of the society for his term of service These pages of history need not be read to the convention, but reported and published in the memorial volume. In order that this part of the work may be thoroughly done the various boards ought to take action soon.

F. M. GREEN.

Kent, Ohio.

[The suggestion about the publication of the proceedings, official reports and leading addresses of the Jubilee Convention, in a memorial volume, is a good one and one we have made to the secretaries, through whom the plan can best be carried out. The publication of such addresses in our religious journals does not answer the purpose, and they can hardly afford the space for them.—EDITOR.]

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The results of John Giddens' work at Mountain View last spring are now manifest in the new church house nearing completion, in which their Bible-school will do regular work after January 1st, 1899.

In the work at home Hugh Puckett is growing constantly, so that the West Side school, Kansas City, is at its best to-day, while the superintendent is planning something new and good for the new year. In our work they heartily co-operate, while at home they are not slack in the better methods. Just right, they are.

At Holden I have just closed my first institute, and the interest was good from the first, while the work of all the membership was so much better than I had expected that I felt much encouraged by it. J. W. Boulton has done such work here as at Tarkio and the results are evident in every department of the church, especially in the Bible-school, in which my heart's interest centers. The examinations were such as gave me great satisfaction, while so many talked of the benefits which came to them. Their giving to our work was so generous that I ought to mention it, while their urgings to return caused some pride.

Thank the many friends for co-operation with us and for the prompt responses to the calls. It so happened this time, brethren, that your treasurer could not raise the money, or you would not have been so persistently dunned, but as it is I must ask that you help until we are caught up, and then I will bear the burden a while longer for you. Have you brought it before your school or church? Will you not do so right away? Now that State Mission Day is past, remember this last work, permitting us to even up with all creditors by next week.

J. C. Henderson, the wide-awake superintendent of Pleasant Grove, near Cameron, is bringing their little school worthily to the front by keeping up with the advanced methods as he learns them, and while in this joins in sending the better plans into the weaker places of Missouri, accepting their apportionment and remitting one-half of same, and I believe every school in Missouri could easily do likewise if only some one would see that it was done.

In St. Clair, at Pape, the brethren keep their school going by constant work, but best of all are happy in it, with no complainings; and have just sent an offering to our work, as is done nearly every year, and it shall return, too.

The Home Department continues to grow in favor as tried, and if you have not begun such take it up immediately. The Monroe City school increased its membership nearly one hundred by it, and all are loud in their praises of its good.

We are nearing the annual changes, but let no school drop its superintendent just because he wants a change. Is he doing good work? Then let him make it better for 1899; so of all other workers. Make no changes except for cause.

Send to this office for the samples needed in your Home Department work.

The school at Clearmont, as also the school at Ham's Prairie, have given us to understand that their apportionments are accepted and will be paid, and we publicly thank them for it and ask, Will not others join the co-operation?

One of the happiest institutes in all my work has just closed at Lawson, a school that has elected their superintendent for life or good behavior, and A. W. Gross well deserves the honor. Every consideration was given to our work, all the time turned over to your servant, all the workers joined in heartily, and everything went merry as a marriage bell. In such happy work do not think your servant would ever tire. In compensation the brethren were most generous to us. The work of J. E. Dunn and E. J. Gantz is creditable to both, and now the church house is as attractive and inviting as it can be, and as it should be. Lawson is doing a great work in all that region, and are especially proud of their minister and his great work in all that territory.

At Pleasant View, Ray, another happy reception was given this work, while the brethren were exceedingly kind to the worker, urging that I come again, so that the storm which followed only sent me in home happy in the Lord. Thank you all. H. F. DAVIS.

Commercial Building, St. Louis.

State Mission Notes.

Since the last notes I have visited Linneus, Rutledge, Nyaconda, Kahoka, Memphis, Downing, Lancaster, Antioch in Schuyler Co., Queen City and Piedmont. At each and all of these places I received a cordial welcome and met with a loving response to my appeals. The more I get acquainted with our ministerial force the more I am constrained to love them. It is the rarest thing, indeed, that one should turn a cold shoulder to me or to my work. True, I find some of the "loyal" brethren sometimes who give me their blessing as they see me go by. But they are learning better all the time. They are beginning to see that those whom they have stigmatized as being heretics of the worst kind are still lovers of God and can preach the old Jerusalem gospel fairly well.

And I do want to say for our churches that I have not yet found one that would refuse to give to the cause of state missions when it was properly placed before them. This leads me to have great hopes for the future of our work in the state. For I believe that the ministry yet more and more are going to be interested in this work, and in fact get so full of it that they will not let their people forget it, and the people will see to it that it is carried on.

I am afraid that the change of Missouri Day is going to work a hardship on our treasury, at least for this year. The churches had got in the habit of taking the collection in January, and to change it to November came on them so sudden that they were not prepared at all. Then it is the season of the year when many of the pastors are in protracted meetings and when the churches are either having or have just had or are preparing for their protracted effort. This often consumes all the ready money the congregations have, and they have none for outside work. We will, however, soon get adjusted to the new order of things, and we can go home from the state and General Conventions full of enthusiasm, and push the state mission collection to the front. In the meantime let no one pass the collection by. If you can't take it in November take it in December, or in the old month of January. The one thing to be sure of is that you take it, and take it at such a time as will bring the greatest good I am led to say this because the treasurer writes to me that he has only recived $5 since the beginning of the month. You can see that we NEED money. We must have it, or else the men in the field will be called in. We have started to secure 100,000 additions in this land during this our Jubilee Year, and Missouri must do her part in this. It will not do to cut down the field force a single man. We want more men; they are ready to go if they can be assured of enough to keep wife and children from want while they are in the field. Brethren, let there be a unanimous response to this appeal. We need your help now. Yours in his name,

T. A. ABAOTT.

Last year's amount included a bequest of $400, $200 of which was turned over immediately to the Church Extension Fund.

This year's amount includes a gift of $5,000 from F. M. Drake. The gain in collections is $499.85.

The Christmas time is coming. We have 70 missionaries under our employ. If there is any time in the whole year when the laborer should have his salary it is at this seeson of the year. This is especially true of those who labor for Christ. Our treasury is now empty. Will not those who owe on life memberships, or directorships, or on pledges, send us the money now? Or if any wish to send us a Jubilee offering, who have not a pledge, send it at once as a Christmas gift to our cause.

C. W. B. M. District Convention.

The semiannial convention of the fifth missionary district of Nebraska met at Odell at 7 P. M., Tuesday, Nov. 15th, with a goodly number of delegates present, representing the different departments of our work. Devotional exercises and introductory remarks by our district president, Dr. Buxton, pastor of Fairbury Church. After the appointment of committees and a short and spicy address of welcome by G. A. Shadle, of Odell, and response by G. R. Dill, we were treated to an interesting, practical and helpful sermon by R. A. Schell, of Hebron, on "The Pyramid of Christian Character." Text 2 Peter 1:5, 6 and 7. The subject was well handled and we trust will bear fruit in many hearts.

The sunrise prayer-meeting of Wednesday, led by G. R. Dill, of Belvidere was well attended and interesting.

The Bible-school session occupied the forenoon, this was conducted by G. R. Dill, who is superintendent of this work in the district. The exercises opened at 9 o'clock with devotional services led by Miss Devore, of Bower, followed by an interesting talk on Sunday-school work by C. A. Phillips. Then followed report of the superintendent showing progress in the work. Answering the questions from the "Querry Box" occupied remainder of the session and proved interesting and profitable. One of the best sessions of the convention was held by our C. W. B. M. on Wednesday afternoon and evening, commencing at 2 o'clock. Devotionals were led by Mrs. Miller, of Diller. After appointing committees to report later Mrs. Younkin, district manager, made a few introductory remarks showing that the responsibility of our convention being profitable to us rests as well with the sisterhood of the 5th district as with the manager, as the carrying out of plans is as important as making them. Let us continue to be the banner district, having for our motto, "Whatever we do, do in the name of Christ and for his glory." Report of manager showed faithful work done with good results.

The symposium, "$90,000 for '99"—"What are your Auxiliaries Doing to Help Reach This?" was participated in by six of our ten auxiliaries in the district. The se seemed to be almost unanimously working for an increase of forces by bringing our work more and more before the people. Our constitution does not debar the brotherhood from the privilege of working with us as members of our auxiliaries. The symposium was concluded by a paper, "Means to the End," written by Mrs. Dr. Andrews and read by Mrs. Dr. Buxton, of Fairbury, which met with hearty approval and was requested for publication.

Miss Griffith, our state secretary gave us a short talk, and among other good things suggested that Nebraska accept for her share of this work, "$2,500 for '99," and that we celebrate in our auxiliaries the silver anniversary of our C. W. B. M. with offerings of silver according to our several ability. Motion of Mrs. Cobbey, of Beatrice, that our district adopt an orphan aged five years, carried, and pledges from societies to raise the necessary $30 per year promptly made.

Then the children were asked to sing and gave us "India," the sweet little song composed by our dear Miss Frost, and in response to a hearty encore, "Come over and help us," and were tendered a unanimous vote of thanks by the rising audience.

In the evening, after report of committee on future work and a paper by Mrs. Cobbey, of Beatrice, "C. W. B. M.—Does it Pay?" which was so full of good things that a motion carried to have it published. The meeting was given over to the other departments of work, and a short time allowed a colored brother from Lincoln to present the cause of his people and ask for help to finish their church building, which is through persistent and hard labor nearly ready for occupancy, about $10 was collected from the audience who recognize in this earnest worker a brother in Christ.

The sermon of the evening was delivered by Dr. Buxton; text, Luke 17:33: "Whosoever shall seek to save his life," etc. Time and space would not permit me to tell of all the good things presented in this sermon, but I believe all were more than ever impressed with the great truth that we must die to self if we would live to Christ or any great usefulness in his service.

The forenoon session of Thursday was devoted to the business of the convention. Receipts from churches showed progress and improvement generally, if we except the one said to be "looking up" only because of lying so flat upon its back!

Election of officers resulted as follows:

President, A. Buxton, Fairbury.

Vice-president, Bro. John Rhodes, Beatrice.

Secretary and treasurer, Miss Sadie Cox, Bower.

Corresponding secretary, J. H. Moore, Diller.

Superintendent Y. P. S. C. E., R. H. Schell, Hebron.

Thursday P. M. was the C. E. session and was both profitable and interesting throughout, closing with a splendid paper by Mrs. G. A. Shadle, of Odell. The evening was devoted to consecration service and the address of corresponding secretary N. C. M. S., W. A. Baldwin, Ulyses, after which the convention adjourned to meet at Crete in May.

Mrs. M. E. King.

Gift to Church Extension.

The Annuity plan for our Church Extension work seems to be growing in favor. Francis S. Smith, of Lock Haven, Pa., who was the first to give $500 to this fund on the Annuity plan, sent another $500 on Dec. 1st. He prefers to see his money work in the Church Extension Fund while he lives, at the same time earning him six per cent., which is as much as he could get elsewhere. He contemplated leaving money to the board in his will; being compelled to use the interest to live on, however, the Annuity plan furnishes him the present means of seeing his money building churches, while at the same time it gives him needed support. At his death the money will go directly into the Church Extension Fund, where he contemplated leaving it, and there will be no contest about it. It would be well for those who are expecting to leave money to this fund in their wills to put it into the fund now on the Annuity plan. An annuity bond will be given by the board, which will be the best of security. For information about the Annuity plan, write to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo Let it not be forgotten that the Board of Church Extension furnishes a catalogue of church plans which are up to date. This catalogue will be sent for 10 cents, and contains seventy-two modern designs, from a chapel costing $600 to a church costing $50,000. The catalogue also contains splendid advice for those who are building. If church plans are ordered from the board, two per cent. can be saved. For catalogue, address

For a Forward Movement.

How can we raise $100,000 and save 100,000 souls for Christ in this the Jubilee Year?

Within the past three weeks I have noticed a great change in all our religious journals. The majority of our ablest preachers are agitating the movement "All Along the Line." While we preach an acceptable gospel which will no doubt add over one hundred thousand souls this coming year, we are compelled to raise $100,000 for Home Missions. This we must do systematically. According to Bro. G. A. Hoffmann, our statistical secretary's report, we have 1,085,615 church members in the United States. The amount given to Home Missions last year was $39,016 or less than 4 cents per member. I am sure we all ought to be able to give 15 cents per capita, which would mean $150,000 for the Jubilee Year. Then let us add another 10 cents per capita for Church Extension, which means $100,000 to assist in building houses of worship. People must be taught that the religion of Jesus Christ costs something. Free salvation, so commonly called, has a tendency toward infidelity and lacks practical sympathy in all our missionary work. Therefore, every disciple of Christ must teach, that "go ye into all the world" implies our money as well as our prayers and sympathy. Some Lord's day morning before communion ask yourself the following questions:

Am I a follower or disciple of Christ?

How much have I done for my congregation?

What have I done for state mission work?

Have I ever given toward the support of Home Missions?

What interest have I in the Missionary Society for Church Extension?

How much of my money have I given for Negro Education and Evangelization?

Do I ever remember our missionaries by giving to the Foreign C. M. S.?

Am I a member of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions? If not, why not?

How much interest do I take in building and endowment of schools?

Do I ever think of the Christian Church Widows' and Orphans' Home?

Do I ever remember the poor old ministers, by supporting the Ministerial Relief? If everybody would take as little intrrest in this God-ordained work, what would become and befall the church of which I claim to be a member in good standing? If we all would give and live more perfectly in line with those who make a living sacrifice the Jubilee Year would make room for a new era in the history of the United States. May God help us to win the victory, is my prayer. Jno. G. M. Luttenbergrr.

ILLINOIS.

Monmouth, Dec. 3.—Knox P. Taylor has just closed a two weeks' Institute here that makes us all happier in the faith. We enjoyed two weeks of his work last year also, and feel like making the affair an annual appointment. The writer rounds out two years' service in the church ending 1898. We have accepted a continuous indefinite call to remain. W. H. Coleman, formerly of Carisle, Ia., has accepted and begun work at Roseville. Alexis church is growing under Bro. Hale's ministry. —C. H STEARNS.

Normal, Dec. 3.—Eight additions to the church at Oreana since Sept. 1st. The third Lord's day in November I preached for the brethren at Argenta, Ill., and ordained Bro. Frank Welton to the ministry.—D. H. SHANKLIN.

Ivan W. Ager, of Chapin, is in a promising meeting at Concord. He is soon to begin a meeting at Literberry.

A. O. Hunsaker is singing for W. H. Cannon in a meeting at Chapin.

Murphysboro, Dec. 1.—Two additions to the church last Lord's day; one by confession and one the widow of a Baptist minister. The work here is moving on nicely. Since I came here two months ago the church has taken on new life, and 85 have been added to the Endeavor in the last six weeks, and 15 to the church. The Sunday-school is growing. Our financial condition is better than it has been for four years. Our Thanksgiving dinner brought us $50, and an excellent program was given in the evening free.—W. H. WILLYARD, pastor.

Blandinsville, Nov. 28.—One more addition to the Old Bedford Church yesterday at regular service.—A. R. ADAMS.

Marshall, Nov. 28.—Our meeting here two two weeks old. Six additions, good interest; will continue one or two more weeks. I can be had for January; might assist in a short meeting after we close here.—C. M. HUGHES, singer.

Cuba.—Just closed our meeting here with 35 additions.—WM. DRUMMET, pastor of Christian Church.

Watseka, Nov. 28.—Another young man made the good confession here yesterday. At a recent midweek prayer-meeting our Junior Endeavorers were with us by invitation—and ere the service closed had a "Scripture spelling bee" to the delight and profit of all present. It took them almost one-half hour to spell down. See 2 Tim. 3:5.—B. S. FERRALL.

Roseville, Nov. 28.—The work here under our new pastor, Bro. W. H. Coleman, starts off nicely. We have a good attendance, excellent interest and five additions during the month of November. We are planning for a protracted meeting soon.—J. F. FISHER.

Pekin, Nov. 28.—Nov. 20th there were eight confessions, one reclaimed and one from the Baptists. One confession and one by letter last Lord's day. A total of 26 additions since last July.—FRED E. HAGIN.

IOWA.

Elliott, Dec. 3.—Began a series of meetings on Nov. 27, M. C. Johnson, of Henderson, Iowa, doing the preaching. We are moving right along; two by statement last evening; congregations fine. Bro. J. is a fine practical preacher of righteousness. Our cause in Southeast Iowa doing well so far as I know. I write on my way to Carson, Iowa, to fill his place.—T. J. REZNOR, pastor.

Modale, Nov. 28.—Our meeting increases in interest; 24 added to date; eight last night. Others to follow, we hope.—W. B. CREWDSON.

Ames, Nov. 30.—We began the work in Ames Nov. 6. During November there were five added by letter and one by confession. H. P. Williams left this church in good condition. The outlook for the winter is good. The five churches of the city begin a union revival meeting on Dec. 5, with Evangelist C. N. Hunt as leader.—JAMES R. MCINTIRE.

OKLAHOMA.

Thomas, Custer Co., Nov. 22.—B. C. Young, from Texas, has been laboring with us for over a week, commencing the 15th. The attendance good, and much interest manifested; three baptisms to date. The brethren much encouraged and built up in the faith. We need laborers in the field. Bro. Young says he will spend the winter in Custer County laboring at various points, where the brethren will help. He will commence a series of discourses in a new place, 10 miles northwest of this place, Nov. 27th. There are a few brethren there, but not organized. Your scribe may assist.—J. H. TRACY.

MINNESOTA.

Sharon.—Report five confessions for the Sharon meeting. Meeting just begun; good interest.—GREGG AND SWEETMAN, evangelists.

MISSOURI.

Ve Lassus, Nov. 28.—Just closed a meeting at Flat River with six additions. Had good attendance, and part of the time more than the church would hold. The meeting was held in the Baptist house. Our people are planning to build soon.—EUGENE BURR.

A. J. Carrick reports one addition to the church at Peakville recently.

Kansas City, Dec. 1.—We are having a good meeting in the 6th and Prospect Church. Thirty-six additions to date.—H. A. NORTHCUTT, evangelist; GEORGE H. COMBS, pastor.

Kansas City, Dec. 3.—J. J. Morgan, of Warrensburg, closed a short meeting with us last night, preaching 20 discourses with 20 added to the church. The results would have been doubled, doubtless, but for the blizzard through which we passed. Our people were greatly pleased with Bro. Morgan.—A. W. KOKENDOFFER, Forest Avenue Church.

Bethany, Nov. 28.—A. L. Jones, vice-president of Central Christian College of Albany, is making a canvass of the church of Harrison County, and is holding a meeting at the Mt. Olive Church, with nine additions to date.—ENOS S. OATMAN.

The preachers of this city reported 20 additions to the various churches last week.

INDIANA.

S. A Strawn, pastor of the church at Lowell, in his recount of the year's work just closed, says: "Our Sunday school has held its own; Senior Endeavor grown from 13 to 47 and about $50 raised; a Junior Society numbering 42 and over $25 raised; Ladies' Aid several months since had raised $202 and still they are going forward. Our prayer meeting has increased from 10 to 30 and 40, and growing spiritually. Our zeal in misssions is growing and we have given to our different missionary organizations over $102 and so far this year there has been 38 confessions and accessions.

Bloomfield, Dec. 2.—Closed a meeting at Paxton, Nov. 29 with 10 accessions. Bro. J. P. Davis, 605 South Fourth St., Terre Haute, did the preaching. He is sound in doctrine, scholarly, especially well versed in history and literature. He is a favorite with the young people and cultivates spirituality in the church. He might be obtained in a few meetings if written soon. Address him at 605 South Fourth St., Terre Haute, Ind.—T. A. COX.

Hopedale, Nov. 28.—Have recently closed a three weeks' meeting with the Spring Creek Church, White County Ind.; three confessions. —A. W. GEBRES.

Franklin, Nov. 27.—Yesterday at Mt. Gilead a noble young man was buried with Christ in baptism.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

KANSAS.

Halstead, Dec. 3.—Our meeting is still in progress with 22 accessions to date. The meeting will continue indefinately. House is crowded every evening. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation.—L. B. COGGINS.

WASHINGTON.

Carson, Nov. 23.—W. V. Boltz, pastor of the Christian Church at The Dalles, Oregon, closed a protracted meeting on the 18th inst., that was the most successful that has ever been held in this valley. There were 21 that obeyed the gospel by confession and burial with Christ in baptism. In addition to the above we have seven Disciples that came here from other parts and that were members of other denominations that united with us, making in all a class of 31 Disciples as the result of Bro. Boltz's labors at this place. Bro. Boltz organized our little band by appointing elders, deacons and deaconesses. After giving us good and wholesome instructions for our future guidance he returned to The Dalles to make ready to take the field as an evangelist. We hope that Bro. Boltz will receive the hearty support and encouragement of the Disciples wherever he may go, as he is well equipped for the work possessing the essential qualifications of an evangelist in a high degree. He is strong, aggressive, logical, drawing conclusions and making deductions that carry conviction to the minds of those that hear him. He is also a very good singer and a very social fireside preacher. We heartily recommend Bro. Boltz to brethren desiring the services of an able evangelist.—C. C. WETHERELL, elder.

KENTTCKY.

Morganfield.—Wallace Tharp, of Crawford, Ind., has just closed a meeting with us which resulted in 36 added to the congregation. Twenty-five were by confession and baptism and 10 by letter and statement. Five were from the denominations. Bro. Tharp did the congregation much good and impressed the community at large as being an able, earnest preacher of the gospel. I have added to the congregation 25 in my regular work, making 61 during the year. This we have done with one-fourth of my time given to this congregation.—R. V. OMER.

KANSAS.

Indepenpence, Nov. 28.—Twelve accessions yesterday; nine confessions; 19 to date.—J. V. COOMBS.

Halstead, Nov. 28.—Our meetings still continue. Eight accessions to date. More to follow.—L. B. COGGINS.

I closed last night a short meeting with the Bethany Church, Parsons, with nine confessions. One deferred baptism until my next visit.

IOWA.

Newton, Nov. 25.—Our work here still grows. Two additions on Lord's day, Nov. 20, by letter, and the outlook for this congregation is brighter than ever before. We are hoping, praying and working, and must go forward.—J. C. HAMAN.

Winterset, Nov. 26.—Our meeting closed Nov. 22nd with 22 additions to the church; 11 confessions, three from Congregationalists, two from Baptists, two from Christian (New Light), one by statement, one from M. E.s, one from Presbyterians, one from Adventists. —LOWE & LANDRUN.

Humeston, Nov. 24.—Two baptisms and two by letter added recently to Humeston church. —H. P. DYER.

Sewal, Nov. 18th.—Just closed a series of meetings at this place, conducted by Bro. D. L. Ammons, of Seymour, Ia. The immediate result, five additions by baptism, four reclaimed and one from the U. B. Church. The Christian Church at Sewal was organized about four years ago by Elder H. Rice, of Seymour. We owe much to his excellent and untiring labors. For the past two years we have had the services of D. L. Ammons for one-fourth of his time. We have now engaged him for the third year. He is a sound and able workman. He is now called to his old home in West Virginia to conduct a series of meetings there before returning to his work at this place.—F. M. STEWART.

MICHIGAN.

Shepherd, Nov. 21.—Closed a meeting at Sumner last night with five additions. The Ferris church has hired Bro. H. M. Willis, and it is hoped that satisfactory arrangements can be made so that he can preach for the Sumner church. I go on to a new field tomorrow. Remember the fifth district M. C. M. S. at the throne.—MEADE E. DUETT, district evangelist.

ITALY (Florence).

Florence, La Bella, is a city of the Middle Ages, differing little to-day, except in the dress of its people, from the Florence beloved by Dante and the Della Robbias. It is famous for its palaces and for its collection of paintings, sculpture, and the manuscripts resulting from the genius, thought and power in Florence during the time of the Medicis.

Ruined by the vice and luxury of that reign, the Florentines have since made little progress. Their chief manufactures are of silk and plaited straw.

The photograph reproduced in another column shows a Florentine woman of the industrious middle class stitching a straw hat into shape by means of a Singer sewing machine. Although the average woman cannot correctly judge the comparative merits of different sewing machines, so far as mechanical construction is concerned, she has a nice appreciation of the difference in their work. The fact that Singer machines always turn out good work is the main reason why they are preferred by the women of all nations.

Rest.

MOLLIE H. TURNER.

An universal cry for rest
Goes ever upward sobbing,
From tortured nerves and weary brains
And hearts that ache with throbbing.

Amid life's trials, toils and tears,
We mutely bend and wonder;
Amid the wreck of cherished dreams,
We worry, shrink and ponder.

The demon Doubt doth stab our faith,
And leave it weak and bleeding;
We stagger blindly in the gloom,
God's promises unheeding.

The Prince and power of the air—
The Evil never dying—
Unceasing haunts our struggling steps,
And revel's o'er our crying.

While God seems far—so far away,
He can not hear our praying—
And in the dark our aching steps
From hope and Heaven are straying,

When lo! a voice steals on the ear,
Like Heaven's own music falling,
"Come unto me, despairing souls,"
The voice of Jesus calling.

"I'll fill your hearts with joy and peace.
All you so heavy laden—
Come unto me, I'll give you rest
From weariness and labor.

And take my yoke and learn of me,
For I am meek and lowly,
You shall find unto your souls,
With me the Pure and Holy."

Through Difficulties.

BY ALFRED BRUNK.

(CONCLUDED.)

"Hello, Ashton," cried a young man across the street; "remember to-night."

"What does that mean?" asked Mary.

"Oh, some of us boys are just going to have a little lark to-night," replied Henry, a little shamefacedly.

As they went along the street, Henry pointed out the places of interest, and dilated upon the wonderful growth of Westphalia, and predicted for it a great future. Stopping before a large, substantial frame building Henry said, "Here you are at last," and she was ushered into tne home of Richard Small. Richard and his wife gave her a hearty greeting, and plied her with questions concerning the homeland.

"I would have sent the carriage to the depot for you, but Henry declared he knew you would enjoy the walk after so long a ride," said Richard.

"And so I did, immensely," said Mary. "What a thrifty, busy place this seems to be!" she added with enthusiasm.

"You are right," said Richard. "Everybody is making money. Two railroads have their roundhouses and shops here, and another road has been surveyed through the town. As for me, I am doing very well. My little boot and shoestore has grown into a large clothing and shoestore, and my mining property is panning out very well. But here, Mary, is some one you don't know," he added, as a little curly-headed girl, about four years of age, appeared in the doorway and rubbing her eyes as if she had been asleep.

"Come, Irma, and get acquainted with your new cousin," and Mrs. Small picked up the child and brought her toward Mary. Irma drew away bashfully.

"What a pretty child, Anna," said Mary, kissing the little girl, and in a short time the two were fast friends.

About two o'clock that night Mary was awakened out of a profound sleep by a heavy stride in the hall and, listening intently, she heard some muttered oath, in a voice which sounded much like her brother's. The next morning Henry slipped away to the store without meeting his sister. When he came home to supper he tried to evade her, but she was watching for him and demanded an explanation of the preceding night's affair.

"It wasn't anything, Mary; nothing at all," said he, but finally admitted that he and some of the young men had been on a drunken spree, and that that was not the first time. "But, Mary, what is a young fellow to do? All the boys here drink, and besides, it don't hurt a fellow if he don't take too much. Don't you be afraid that I will ever let it get the best of me." But his heart smote him when he saw the look of sadness upon her face.

On Sunday morning at the breakfast table she asked: "Where do you attend church?"

Richard looked confused, his wife blushed and Henry laughed outright. "Well, Mary, you are a tenderfoot, sure enough, to ask such a question as that in Westphalia," said he. "That will do for the slow, poky people back East, but we are progressive here, I can tell you."

"That's enough, Henry," said Richard, recovering himself. "There are some very good churches in town, but they don't reach the people, from some cause. We went a few times after we came here, but the services were so uninteresting that we quit going altogether. I wish it was otherwise, for saloons and gambling houses are multiplying, and some of our boys are getting pretty wild," and he looked significantly at Henry.

At Mary's request they went to one of the churches, and while there was considerable ostentation and pride, the services were lacking in heart-moving power, and Mary longed for the simple home services instead.

"Mary," said Richard, some days after her arrival, "I need a bookkeeper. Are you qualified for the position? If not, there is a good business college here which will prepare you for the work in a few months."

"No, I am not qualified, but will fit myself for the position without delay," said she.

Andrew Rogers was a young man of talent and refinement, who had come from New Orleans and opened a law office in Westphalia. Being on intimate terms with Richard Small, he became acquainted with Mary and was much impressed with her modest, unassuming ways, combined with an unconquerable spirit of independence.

"Miss Ashton, I have often wished that I were a Christian in the Bible sense of that term. In the course of my law studies I have examined the law of Moses thoroughly, also the sayings of Christ and the arguments of Paul. Moses is the basis of law in all civilized countries, Paul's closely knit arguments are unanswerable, and the life and sayings of Christ are unassailable. But the churches of to-day, or at least all that I know anything about, are builded upon dogma and human pride, and not upon Christ and the Bible; so instead of being attracted to them I am driven further and further away."

"I know nothing of law, and but little of churches," said Mary. "But I know a man who lives and preaches like Christ; I mean my old pastor, Mr. Sharon."

"I would love to hear him," said he, candidly, but believing in his heart that Mr. Sharon was only the ideal of a young and inexperienced lady, and that he would prove to be just like all others that he had heard.

After Mary had finished her business course and had been duly installed as bookkeeper in Mr. Small's store, she said to Mrs. Small one day: "Anna, Mr. Rogers has asked me to become his wife."

"And of course you told him you would," replied Mrs. Small.

"No; I told him I could wed no man who is not a Christian."

"Why, Mary, you are foolish. You will never get married here, if you take that stand. All the best and brightest young men here are out of the church."

"I can't help that. I will not marry out of the church," said Mary, decisively.

"Richard," she said one day, soon after this conversation, "I wrote Melville and asked him to see if Mr. Sharon would come and hold us a meeting. Here is his reply."

Richard took the letter and read as follows:

DEAR MARY:—Your letter in regard to the meeting was handed to Bro. Sharon, and he said that he would go, but would expect the people there to furnish a large hall or a tent of sufficient size to accommodate all who should desire to hear the gospel; that there must be no chance of a shut-down just as the people are becoming interested. Or, if lumber could be had, he could put up a temporary tabernacle, and would stay just as long as prospects were good for winning souls to Christ.

Your cousin,
MELVILLE SMALL.

"Hooray for the parson!" shouted Henry. "Now we will have long-faced sanctimoniousness, for sure."

"Well, it will cost a good deal, Mary," said Richard. "His fare must be paid, hall rent or a tent to be provided for, or a tabernacle must be built. Then there are lights, songbooks, organ and all that; I don't see how it can be done."

"Richard Small, I am ashamed of you!" she exclaimed, impetuously. "You are just like your father, only not so bad. What did you have when you came here? A little old boot and shoestand! Now you own the finest and largest store in town, have a fine home, have a large interest in the best paying mine in the state; blest with health, blest with fine prospects, could burn up thousands of dollars of money and scarcely miss it. Thousands of sinners here going to perdition, and my own brother among them, and you, poor, poverty-stricken tramp, can't do a thing to stem the awful tide of iniquity! God have mercy on your poor, stingy soul!" She turned away, and like an enraged queen, left the room.

"How's that?" asked Henry, as soon as he caught his breath. "Comes out mighty plain, seems to me. But I guess she's right. If I belonged to the gospel band I think my money would belong there too," and he went to the store whistling something that sounded suspiciously like "Old Hundred."

Richard and his wife looked at each other in dismay.

"I didn't know she had that much spunk," said Richard. "But she is right, and she have the meeting."

CHAPTER IV.

"'Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, but when the desire cometh it is a tree of life.'"

Mr. Sharon came, and it was decided that a tabernacle would be the best under all the circumstances, which was accordingly built. He began by telling what the Bible is, marking its proper divisions; unfolding the different dispensations; tracing God's hand through the preparatory stages until Christ's church was an established fact; presenting the apostolic method of induction into that church, and that each individual was personally responsible to a personal God. The novelty, simplicity and power of the preaching attracted large throngs of people, who were astonished, and many were convinced. Numbers of persons ere long began to flock to the cross and obey the gospel.

Andrew Rogers drank in every word. It was a restatement of an old theme to him, with the difference that now it was so intensely personal. Every argument, every statement of fact, every appeal seemed to thrill through his being and clutch at his heart to impel him to obedience.

"Why don't you go forward, Rogers?" asked Richard one day.

"I hardly know," he replied. "I believe it every word, but one thing that holds me back is that people would think I did it just to get Miss Ashton to marry me."

"Nonsense, Rogers! Let people say what they will, you have a soul to save and can't afford to lose it just because somebody might talk."

"True enough, but it would place Miss Ashton in an embarrassing position," he replied.

The meetings were drawing to a close. Two persons who were dearer to Mary than all others had not confessed Christ. They were Henry and Mr. Rogers.

It is the last service and the invitation has been extended, but no one has responded. Mr. Sharon steps upon the platform to give his farewell talk to that anxious assembly.

"Kind friends," he began, and hesitated. The stillness of death pervaded the entire auditorium, and every eye was fixed upon him: "This has been a great meeting, large numbers have obeyed the gospel, hearts are rejoicing to-night who never knew happiness before. I doubt not that angels have hovered near, and hastened to the Crucified One with the glad news of your return. But in the midst of all this rejoicidg, my heart is sad to-night; there are some here who are very near the kingdom. How can I leave you, knowing that you are not saved, and that your hearts may never again be melted to tenderness by the sweet story of the cross as they are to-night? No, I will not, I cannot leave you thus."

Earnestly did he plead with them to accept Christ.

The audience arose to sing. Mary was at the organ and could see both Henry and Mr. Rogers, who were near each other in the rear of the room. Mr. Rogers' face was firmly set, and he stood still as a statue of stone. She saw Henry glance anxiously toward him and start forward. Instinctively her hands dropped from the keys, she arose and met him, threw her arms about his neck and wept. Then remembering the occasion, she sat down and hid her face in her hands.

The meetings have closed. Henry and all others who confessed their faith in Christ have been baptized and the minister has returned home. One of the railway companies has given the church a fine lot in a beautiful section of the town, upon which to build a house of worship; the contract has been let and a substantial stone structure is reared; the new congregation has secured the services of Carl B. Brandlett, a scholarly young minister from Chicago, and popular sentiment is with them.

Mary is quiet and reserved, and performs her daily duties in a mechanical manner.

"Henry," said she to her brother one day, "you have a gift for public speaking; why don't you devote that gift to God and the church?"

"I have thought of it, Mary," said he, "but I tremble in view of the terrible responsiblity resting upon the minister of the gospel."

"Yes, Henry, there is a great responsibility, I know," she replied. "But who do you think will receive the greater reward, the one who knew his duty and performed it not, or the one who did the best he could, even if he did occasionally make a mistake?"

"Why he who did his duty, of course," Henry replied.

So he decided to enter a well-known Bible college that fall, and if he needed more funds than he possessed, his sister should assist him.

The time to dedicate the new house of worship in Westphalia is near. Mr. Sharon is on hand to preach the dedicatory sermon.

"Now, Mr. Sharon, what do you think is my duty under the circumstances?" asked Andrew Rogers in a confidential talk with Mr. Sharon.

"Why, sir, I think it is your imperative duty to obey the gospel. Let people make out of it what they will. If your motive is pure your conscience will be clear and God will vindicate you in time; hesitate no longer."

"I believe you are right, and although it is Saturday afternoon, I will wait no longer. I believe that Jesus is the Christ and desire to be baptized at once. What do you say?"

"It shall be as you wish," said the faithful man of God, and informing Richard Small and wife, Mary and Henry, and a few others. The baptism was performed that very afternoon, but Mary was not present.

Some days after the dedication Mary astonished her friends by announcing that she was going to visit the old home again.

Everybody was delighted to see her back in Dry Valley, and surprised her not a little by making a heroine of her on account of the great work that had been done in Westphalia. After a pleasant stay of two months, she went to Booneville, expecting, after a few days' visit with Melville and his wife, to return to Westphalia. The next day after her arrival at Booneville she received a letter from Herny which was as follows:

"DEAR SIS:—I am off to-day for school. Sorry I could'nt see you before going away. I expect to hear from you often, for you know a fellow will get homesick. Just had a long talk with Rogers; he is the most practical Christian I ever saw; he didn't tell me, but he has paid the rent of several poor old women and sick and crippled men, and has done many other kind and charitable acts. But his talkwith me was about you; he said you were the best girl he ever knew, and of course I had to agree with him there. Then he said he could never love another as he has and does love you, and I like a simpleton said, 'Why don't you tell her so?' It seemed to shock him, and then he said, 'I will!' Give my love to uncle's folks and keep lots for yourself. Pray for your struggling brother, HENRY."

She looked up from the letter, her eyes swimming in tears, and saw—Andrew Rogers.

We will not stay to hear the conversation, but there can be no harm in going with them a few days later to the parsonage and seeing them married. After the ceremony the godly pastor and friend said:

"Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, your own lives illustrate the fact that all noble efforts ennoble and beautify our lives. Nor does this law end with earth, for its effects are clearly apparent in the home of the redeemed. Hence the immortal words concerning those who were arrayed in white robes: "These are they which came out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

Do Your Best.

The signs are bad when folks commence
A-findin' fault with Providence,
And balkin' 'cause the earth don't shake
At every prancin' step they take.
No man is great till he can see
How less than little he would be
Ef stripped to self, and stark and bare,
He hung his sign out anywhere.

My doctern is to lay aside
Contentions and be satisfied;
Jest to do your best, and praise or blame
That follers, that counts jest the same.
I've allus noticed that success
Is mixed with trouble more or less,
And it's the man who does the best,
That gets more kicks than all the rest.

A Trip to Programville.

A friend of mine was so put out because the convention did not go off to suit him that he concluded to make a trip down to Programville, to see if the fault lay there. He found all sorts of things being grown for the convention market, some good, some poor.

He learned that Farmer Hometalent never goes off his own farm for seed or stock. As a consequence his corn finally runs to nubbins, and his stock shrinks smaller and smaller until they become runts. The stuff that he takes to convention market would be much improved in quality if he would only exchange seedcorn with his neighbors and import new stock.

His neighbor, Farmer Catchall, goes to the other extreme of trying every new seed the agricultural department sends out, and every odd or fancy breed of stock advertised. He litters the convention market with all sorts of freaks and fads, from oratorical mushrooms to tropical parrots and musical sensitive plants. But he is very proud of the newest things because they are new.

Farmer Crowdtherow's idea of convention market is that it ought to be crammed so there's a continual strain and agony to get through it. He raises good stuff, but he always overloads his wagon and breaks down before he gets to market, or else does not arrive there until next day. He cannot be made to realize that there can be too much of a good thing, and that no one has yet found a way of packing more than sixty minutes in an hour.

Then there is Farmer Wisdomtooth who tests the new things on his own table before he takes them to market. He imports the best things from all parts of the globe, but keeps his accounts closely, and sticks to the staples that pay. His stall in the market is a delight to see, and if all Programville were like him, convention market would never be surfeited or stocked with trash. He says that his success is due to his looking at everything through two pairs of spectacles—prayer and common sense.

My friend is trying to persuade the agent for these spectacles to make a thorough canvass of Programville, in the interests of convention market.—C. E. World.

Thanksgiving Gifts—A Petition.

O, thou great and gracious God! Grant that none of us may ever forget that we are pensioners upon thy bounty; that it is from thy liberal hand and loving heart we receive our daily necessities and blessings. In answer to our daily prayer, "give us this day our daily bread," thou hast richly blessed us in basket and in store. Out of the fullness wherewith thou hast blessed us, help us in turn to bless those who to-day are struggling to keep the wolf from the door. May we not forget the words of Holy Writ: "Charge them that are rich in the world, that they do good, that they be rich in good works." May the words of our dear Lord come to us with renewed power to-day as he says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my disciples, ye have done it unto me;" thus teaching us that he is identified with every child of woe and want, and that the outheld hand of the poor is his treasury awaiting our gifts. They are thine, O Lord, and we are thine, and in thy name we minister unto them. May the gift be blessed to us as well as to them. In this day of our fullness and gladness, we commend to thee all who travel the road—the hard road—of poverty; who sit around a scanty board and whose eyes rest pitifully upon children hungry and cold. May they not be forgotten of us as they are not forgotten of thee in heaven. Let the mercy and pity of the God of men, of families, of nations, rest upon the sick, the suffering, the sorrowing, the tempted, the troubled, the disappointed, the dying. Magnify thyself in the darkness to all such, and let thy grace be greater than all human want, and may souls buried in the depths of night know how much greater and sweeter is light than darkness. Dear Father, gather us all to thy heart, and make us to feel the presence of thy everlasting arms—arms that can crush the universe, yet in love supports and protects thy feeblest child. Hear, O Father, and grant us our petitions, we humbly beg in Jesus' name. Amen! FRANK W. ALLEN.

"Yes my friends," exclaimed a teetotal lecturer, "there are many excuses for the glass. The sick man says he must have his glass to make him well; the shivering cabman must have his glass to make him warm; the hard-working mechanic must have his glass to make him cool. But they lie, friends. Don't believe the workman who says he can't work without his glass. I defy any one to mention to me a workman who connot work as well, and better, without his glass than with it."

A voice at the back of the hall made itself audible: "I'll tell yer one."

"I defy you to do so," said the lecturer. "I defy you sir," he roared.

Then the voice observed: "The glazier can't do without his glass."

The lecturer continued that oration at a decided disadvantage.—Golden Hours.

That Button.

"I have a plan," said Jennie Weston the next morning, which was Sunday, "that will help us to get up a little band, right in our town, of the Advance Society."

"Let's hear your plan," replied George.

"It is this: you and I, who are the only ones here who know of this society—except mamma, of course, but she don't count—"

"Why is it that mammas never do count?" inquired Mrs. Weston, who had overheard this remark.

"I mean," said Jennie, "you are quite an old lady, you know, and so of course you won't care to bother about us children."

"It is true I am quite old," replied the lady, "since I am almost thirty-eight. But even if I should live to be forty I never expect to lose interest in children. But I have a plan, too, and we will see which one does the most." Then she left the children alone.

"It is strange how mamma cares for the things we care for," observed Jennie. "I know when I am grown I will be so full of grown thoughts that I will forget I was ever young. It does take a terrible time to grow, don't it? Between you and me, George, I think children are nuisances, anyhow!"

George only laughed at her, because he was fond of being a boy, and was in no hurry for the time to come when he would have to sit on chairs half the time and be serious, and always look busy. But Jennie every once in a while had a state of feelings which, if they were not "the blues," were at least a pale indigo. Whenever she had these feelings, which happened after particularly trying and unpleasant events—she felt an insatiable longing to be grown. The reason she wished to be grown this morning was that she had broken her fine china saucer—a present from her grandmother, who lived in the country. "This is my plan," she said. "Let us both promise to ask some one to join the society; let us ask some one every day, until we get up a little band. Then we can meet, every once in awhile, and talk about what we are reading and about our department in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST."

George agreed, and as it lacked some time till Sunday-school he stopped at Jim Dancy's house, to ask Jim to join; for he was in the habit of stopping for Jim, that they might go on to the church together. As he was a friend of the family he went around to the sitting room door, which was at the side of the house. "Come in," said the voice of Mr. Dancy.

George entered. Mrs. Dancy was reading a paperback novel. She looked up, smiled in a lost kind of way, and then continued to read. She kept her forefinger in her mouth, so it would be damp enough to turn over the pages just as quick as she was ready. Her hair was not done up, and she wore a wrapper. Mr. Dancy was seated in his rocking-chair, also reading a novel. He wore his high fur cap, which he always put on as soon as he had eaten his breakfast, whether he stayed in the house or not. The dining room door was partly open, and George could see that the dishes had not been touched since this literary pair left the table. The Dancys were old people, at least their hair was turning white, and they had gotten so used to novel-reading that when their son Jim was born, they didn't know what to do with him. So Jim had to learn to do a great many things for himself.

"Where is Jim?" asked George Weston.

Mr. Dancy laid his finger on the last word he had read, as if he were afraid it would get away, and then looked up. "I don't know where that boy is," he said, starting to scratch his head in perplexity. But finding his fur cap on his head, he changed his mind, and fell to reading again. Mrs. Dancy was very uneasy about the heroine of her story, because her buggy had just been upset, and she hadn't learned if the heroine had sprained her ankle, so the hero would have to carry her into her palatial residence. But she took time to say, "Did you look in the barn?"

George went to the barn and found Jim Dancy sitting on a sack of corn which he had dragged out on the smooth plank floor, so the sunlight would fall upon him and keep him warm. He was sewing a button on his Sunday suit. "Hello, George," he said, "going to Sunday-school?"

"Yes, I came by for you. I didn't know you sew—and on Sunday, too."

"I do when it's necessary," said Jim. "Which do you think is wronger, to stay at home, or sew on the button and go to church? Do you think I'm doing this because it's fun?"

George did not commit himself by deciding this question of ethics. He said, "I want you to join the Advance Society. Jennie and I belong. We are going to get a lot of boys and girls in it, and have a regular good time."

"Get out of my way while I thread this needle," said Jim. "All right, I guess I'll go in, if it will accommodate you. What do you have to do?"

"Why don't you run the thread through the hole?" inquired George, watching the process with much interest.

"Why wasn't I born a woman?" returned Jim Dancy. "You keep still, and I'll get this thread through before that hole knows what I'm after. Ha! There she is! What do you do in this society?"

"You become a member on agreeing to do five things; one is to read—"

"I'm not in," said Jim, prophetically.

"—five pages of history," persisted George.

"Nuck," said Jim, which was his way of replying in the negative. "If that society sewed on buttons or did something useful I might join. But I may as well tell you now, George Weston, that I don't believe in reading. I have ssen too much of it in my time."

"May be you have seen the wrong kind of reading," suggested George Weston.

"It's all alike," interposed Jim Dancy. "You take a person that loves to read, and what does he do? I say to you, what does he do?"

"Well, what does he do?" demanded George.

"That's just it," said Jim. "He don't do nothin'—nothin' but read. If the house gets on fire—but you know what happened here!" Now, this is what Jim alluded to: One afternoon the flue caught on fire, and it seemed that nothing could save the house. The neighbors came from all around, and carried buckets of water up to the roof. The neighbors were not pleased when they found Mr. Dancy perched on the garden fence, his cap on his head, and his novel in hand. But Mr. Dancy was so near the end of a chapter that he could not lay down the book till he found how it was going to turn out.

"I've just thought of something!" cried George, slapping his knee. "You listen, Jim Dancy. We're such good friends, it's no use pretending your folks don't overdo the novel business. Now, a person addicted to the novel habit is bored by history and poetry. Here's a scheme. Make your folks promise to read an amount of history and poetry every day before they get out their novels. What will happen? Why, they'll keep putting off and putting off the solid reading, and in that way they will get to tending to things. 'Cours they'd rather sew on buttons than to read poetry. It'll work like a charm!"

"How'll you make 'em promise? They would laugh at any such agreement. If we were to kidnap 'em, and ransom 'em on condition they read such stuff, it might work. But how can a boy kidnap his papa and mamma?"

"Keep still," said George Weston, "I'm thinking!"

If you can't guess how this story "turns out," you can read the next part in two weeks. Next week I am going to give the names of some of our members, with their ages, the places where they live, and extracts from their letters. In this way you get acquainted. So look out for next week, and cut out the piece and paste it in a book; in this way you will get, after awhile, the names of all the members of our Advance Society. Monday before last there were 95 members. Growing, aren't we? Some true funny stories reached me too late to publish last week. But I am saving them. Now, I want every member to write to me at once on this subject: "Favorite Books and Authors." Name the ten books that you like best (you needn't name the Bible; I take for granted that stands first). And name your three favorite authors. If you are older than fourteen, name the books and authors you preferred before you became older. I hope every one who reads this will write to me upon this subject; I want to make an article out of the letters. Now, children, be fair with me, and name the books you really like, and not those you think you ought to like, such as Shakespeare. Get your parents to write out the list they preferred before they were fifteen, and send it with your list. If you have never read ten books, name as many as you have, that you think are best. I want to find out what kind of books children love—not the kind they think they ought to read, but the kind that makes them have a good time.

*THE FALL OF JERUSALEM.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The reign of Jehoiakim was the last notable period in the history of Judah. The eleven years from 609-597 were marked by a steady decline in the real prosperity of the country and in moral and religious life. But there was a semblance of grandeur in the extensive building enterprises of the king, who erected numerous palaces and other buildings in Jerusalem. He endeavored to pose as a patron of architecture and the arts. This policy, however, was carried out only at the expense of great burdens upon the people, who were already taxed to the last degree to pay the enormous tribute due to Babylon annually. Jeremiah himself reproved the king for his extravagance and warned him that the mere building of costly structures was a means only of weakening the kingdom unless these operations were founded in righteousness (Jer. 22:13-19) Against the three kings who followed Josiah the prophet spoke words of reproof, warning and regret. Of Jehoahaz he said that it was useless to mourn for the dead Josiah, but for his son Shallum or Jehoahaz they well might weep, for he should be carried away never to return (Jer. 22:10-12). Then came the reproof of Jehoiakim to which reference has just been made, and following this the sentence upon Coniah, or Jehoiachin, the next king, that he should be cast out as a despised thing, childless and alone (Jer. 22:20-30). In fact, the reign of Jehoiachin, which continued only three months, in the year 597 B. C., scarcely more than sufficed for the experiences of the first seige of Jerusalem which resulted in the deportation of a large number of the princes and officers of the kingdom, including the king and his family, together with many of the sacred vessels of the temple (2 Kings 24:8-16). These were taken to Babylon, as were also many of the artisan class, who were useful in metal and woodwork. This was the second deportation from Jerusalem, the first having occured about 605 B. C., during the reign of Jehoiakim (2 Chron. 36:6-7; Dan. 1:1-2). Nebuchadrezzar placed upon the tottering throne of Judah a third son of Josiah, named Mattaniah, an uncle of Jehoiachin, and his name he changed to Zedekiah.

This king came to the throne at a time when the tangled threads of Judah's political fabric were past straightening. The seeds of political disintegration and moral corruption had come to maturity, and the fruit was bitter. Perhaps even a strong king would have been unable to meet the emergency, and Zedekiah lacked all the sterling qualities which could have availed to save the kingdom. Like many of his predecessors the king was a compound of good and bad qualities. He was more favorably disposed to Jeremiah than Jehoiakim had been, but he was between two fires. The court party was opposed to the prophet with a deadly hatred. They clung to the idea that Jerusalem was capable of taking care of itself even against Babylon. Against this false hope it was the ungracious duty of Jeremiah to protest even at the expense of being regarded as unpatriotic and pessimistic. Such predictions began in the very opening of Zedekiah's reign (Jer. 27:28). The word Jehoiakim in 27:1 is an evident miswriting for Zedekiah, as is shown in verses 3 and 12, and 28:1. It was the confident expectation of the people that those already carried away into captivity would soon return. Jeremiah showed this to be impossible of realization by writing a letter to the captives in Babylon warning them against the hope of an early return and advised them to settle in their new homes and make the best of the situation (Jer. 29). The king was troubled by these opposing forces in his capital. He was afraid of offending the court party by appearing to regard Jeremiah with favor, and on the other hand he was alarmed by the prophet's evident certainty as to the fate of the city. Several times he sent to consult Jeremiah as to the probable outcome of the situation (Jer. 37:3; 38:14). When thus asked for his advice, Jeremiah frankly counseled the king to give up the city and go out and surrender himself into the hands of Nebuchadrezzar (Jer. 38.15 18). The king was half persuaded to follow the prophet's counsel, but fear of his court on the one hand and of ridicule by the Jews who were already in Babylon on the other held him in check, and thus halting between two opinions he disregarded Jeremiah's advice after having broken his oath of allegiance to the Babylonian king (2 Chron. 36:11-13). It may well be imagined how difficult was the situation of Jeremiah during this time. The court party hated him bitterly because he was preaching the uselessness of defense. They claimed that he was weakening the hands of the men of war, and secured his imprisonment and well-nigh caused his death (Jer. 38). In all these perplexing experiences the prophet maintained supreme confidence in two facts: first, that Jerusalem was certain to fall into the hands of the Babylonians; and second, that it was just as certain to be restored after a period of desolation, when the exiles should return from Babylon and repossess the land. In this confidence he even purchased a piece of property to which he had the right of redemption in his ancestral city of Anathoth (Jer. 32:6-15). The most serious danger that menanced Jeremiah resulted from his attempt to leave Jerusalem and visit his new possession. He was accused of desertion to the Babylonians, which received color from his whole attitude during this period. In vain did he protest his innocence. He was scourged and put into prison, from which he was only rescued by the kindness of the king (Jer. 37:11-21). Thus the details of Jeremiah's tragic and fascinating story are gathered from the disarranged materials of the book which bears his name. He had seen clearly that the old covenant was insufficient and had never been kept; that Israel was umfaithful and her future could only bring purification through suffering. A new nation and a new covenant were necesary (Jer. 31). No repentance of serious nature could be expected now. Even the promise to liberate the slaves in Israel which had been made under the spur of fear when the seige began, was broken, and the slaves again put into service as soon as the pressing danger was over by the temporary withdrawal of the Babylonian troops. Jeremiah protested against this in vain (Jer. 34-8-22). The time of repentance was past; nothing remained but the final tragedy.

This tragedy is set forth in the lesson. The cup of Israel's transgression was full. A long course of sin brought at last its inevitable consequences. The seige of Jerusalem by Nebuchadrezzar was only one of a long series of similar transactions by which this king enlarged and established two kingdoms and terrified his enemies into obedience. But no similar deed of his was of equal importance in the religious history of the world. That ninth day of the fourth month, which was kept as a perpetual fast-day in the later life of the nation, was the final blow to the old national history and the ushering in of a new period. The attempt to escape on the part of the beseiged was only partially successful. The flight of the king toward the Jordan was intercepted and his few companions were dispersed. The king himself and his family were taken to Riblah, far to the north, where the princes were slain and the unhappy king was blinded and carried in chains to Babylon, where he came to an unhappy end. The horrors of the seige and the desolation which followed it are graphically told in the little book of Lamentations, which has ever been associated with the name of Jeremiah, though of its original authors nothing certain is known. The exultation of Judah's enemies, especially the Edomites, is remembered in many an indignant impercation of the Old Testament (Obadiah, Psalms 137:7), and the hope of the future was that a time of vengeance would come upon these triumphant and insulting foes (Isa. 63:1-6). The subsequent story of Jeremiah's life, as well as the fate of those who remained in Jerusalem where he chose to stay, is given to us in Jeremiah 40-43, with which words the tragedy of Judah closes.

Christian Endeavor.

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 18.

HOW TO ENJOY OUR RELIGION.

(Neh. 8:8-12; 1 Peter 4:3, 12, 13.)

One of the first requisites of the enjoyment of religion is that the religion should be intelligent. Unless one understands his Bible, how can he enjoy reading it? Every Christian, then, should make all possible effort to get an insight into the true meaning of the Scriptures, should adopt what facilities are at his disposal for Bible study.

Again, in order thoroughly to enjoy religion it should never be made to go against reason. No one can be in a happy state of mind who is attempting to swallow some religious belief that is too big to be swallowed. God has given us reason, and by means of it he has taught us to test everything that comes before us. Let us, then, not be afraid to exercise that reason and to test religion as we test all things else.

Nor, again, should we ever offend the conscience, for if there is anything in our nature which it pains us more to offend than to offend reason, it is to offend conscience. How unhappy, how hard is the way of the transgressor! There can be no happiness, no joy, where the conscience is not at peace. Calamity cannot triumph over us; troubles outside ourselves cannot gain the victory over the indomitable soul, only one's conscience can make him unhappy and afraid. The one way to be happy in one's religion is to work at it. No one can merely profess a moral Christian standard without living up to it and be happy in the profession. To enjoy religion one must live up to its high standards.

This brings to our minds naturally the requisite of earnestness. Dr. Arnold gave his boys but one rule, "Be earnest." The Bible had already given that rule, "Do with thy might what thy hands find to do." It is only by thus throwing oneself with all one's power into his pursuits that he can truly enjoy life. James Whitcomb Riley said recently in a public address that all literary men he had ever known were men whose work to them was p ay. They did not work under the scourge and the spur; it was a joy to them to work. "They work," said he, "as amateurs, and not the business of their lives." Mr. Kipling calls it "the joy of the working." If only Christians would work at their Christianity as men work at their professions, it would add much to the joy of living. Earnestness, tension, attention, striving, pouring one's soul into one's religious life, will bring the joy.

Strange as it may sound, James tells us "to count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations." May we not, then, find something to enjoy in the very obstacles of the religious life? Obstacles add to the zest of life. Obstacles! To the well-trained hunting-horse, hedges, ditches and fences are there purposely for him to leap. Difficulties! They are but the pawns, knights and bishops with which the opponent plays his game. There would be no joy or zest to the playing without them. Who would be a jellyfish, floating about in every current and zephyr of the tropic seas? Who would not rather be a dolphin, dashing against the northwest storm, Gulf Streams or tidal waves, from end to end of ocean. Temptations, difficulty, will only add to the joy of our lives. The best things in the world to do are things that are hardest.

Frank R. Stockton has written for The Youth's Companion an anecdotal article on new lines under the curious title of "The Wolf and the Wheelbarrow." There is not only an actual wolf and a real wheelbarrow in it, but lions, a lion tamer, a famous tragedian and some interesting ob'ects of natural history.

India, or the Land of the Trident.

W. J. LHAMON.

India has been called the "Land of the Trident," because in every Siva Temple there is a three-pronged fork, representing one of the Hindu triads. It has been called the "Wonderland of the East," and Mme. Ragozin is quoted as saying of it, "Another world; a world in itself. That is what India pre-eminently is, and therein lies the charm." It has been estimated that within its boundaries the United States, East of the Mississippi, minus Ohio and Indiana, could be placed twice over, and that the New England States would have to be nine and one-half times as large as they are to cover it. The majesty of its mountains and the beneficence of its rivers are unsurpassed. Mount Everest is "earth's highest measured elevation," and the River Ganges brings down annually "enough fertilizing mud to fill so many fifty-ton freight cars as would reach two and a half times around the world."

This land was peopled primarily by race cousins of ours. Two branches of the noble old Aryan family started from their ancestral home, one traveling West and North, the other East aud South; the one becoming modern Europe, the other modern India. It is a strange and very interesting providence that after so many centuries, the Western Aryans in the persons of Englishmen should go back and conquer the Eastern Aryans in the persons of the Hindus, and that Europe and America should unite in carrying the gospel together with a Christian civilization to these ancient relatives.

Their need is great. Into this land there is crowded a population of not far from 300,000,000; 208,000,000 of whom are Hindus; 57,000,000 are Buddhists, and above 9,000,000 are animistic, attributing a personal soul to inanimate objects and to the forces of nature and worshiping the things so personified.

Relatively to our standard of living the conditions in India are dreadful. The houses of the poor are mud floors; they have no chimneys and usually no windows; they are as a rule not above twelve or fifteen feet square, and they cost from fifteen to eighteen dollars. The clothing of children up to eight years of age is conspicuous by reason of its absence. A Hindu proverb says, "Children and the legs of a stool do not feel the cold."

It is estimated that a man and his family can earn on an average five cents a day. "Food and grains can be bought at two pounds per penny; clothing is scanty and cheap; fuel costs nothing and house rent is scarcely known."

The Shastras define the position of the wife as follows: "A woman has no other god on earth than her husband. When in the presence of her husband a woman must not look on one side or on the other. She must keep her eyes on her master to be ready to receive his commands. When he speaks she must be quiet and listen to nothing besides. Let her words, her actions and her deportment give open assurance that she regards her husband as her god. Than shall she be honored of all men and shall be praised as a victorous and discreet woman."

Of the total populated of India only one man in every nine can read and write, and but one woman in a hundred and seventy-three can pass this double test. As regards letters they are a nation sitting in darkness.

The gods of India are more numerous than her people. Water and rivers and plants and mountains and animals and tools and jewelry and ancestors are worshiped. Nothing could be more sacred than snakes and monkeys, unless cows and ancestors. As to the gods most venerated, great differences seem to exist in the opinions of students. We are told that the worship of Ganesa, god of the demon host, is all but universal. Again we learn that the cow is the most sacred object in India. Again we are informed that ancestor worship in some form or another is the beginning, the middle and the end of what is known as Hindu worship.

The doctrine of transmigration has much to do with this teeming idolatry. "Even a flea may enclose the soul of some person who was a sage or a saint." This theosophic teaching has had all over India the baleful effect of degrading the human kind and not helping the animal kind.

The entire Brahmin caste is deemed divine, and the living members of it are objects of worship. A common saying is:

> "All the world is subject to the gods;
> The gods are subject to the holy texts;
> The holy texts are subject to the Brahmins;
> Therefore the Brahmin is my god."

Among the estimated 330,000,000 gods of India three are held in special reverence; Brahma the omnipotent, Vishnu the preserver and Siva the destroyer. The gods are worshiped through the mediation of priests with prayers, sacrifices, festivals, pilgrimages and offerings, and the whole system of religion is vitiated by the thought of merit and the spirit of selfishness.

Of the doctrine of transmigration, named above, Mr. Beach says, in his excellent little beok entitled, "The Cross in the Land of the Trident," "This doctrine of Hinduism pursues the soul after death. It is based upon the belief in immortality, and professes to explain the differing conditions of those born on the earth. One's lot is due to merit or demerit in previous stages of existence. Through 8,400,000 births one reaches at length the glad time when individual existence is absorbed in the divine. What wonder that a common saying is, "Existence is misery," or that a Hindu poet has said:

> "How many births are past I cannot tell;
> How many are to come no man can say;
> But this alone I know and know full well,
> That pain and grief embitter all the day."

Further information about the religion of the Hindus may be had from the chapter on Hinduism in the Handbook of Fields and Forces. Toward the teeming and idolatrous millions of India the hearts of many Christly people have been turned. Many missions have been opened and some of them have been eminently successful. The handbook will show what our own missions have done. Another quotation from Mr. Beach may be taken as a fitting conclusion of this essay. "Mr. Kidd urges from the standpoint of philanthropic altruism the administration of the affairs of India from the temperate zone. How much more ought the love of Christ constrain the American Christian to give himself to the spiritual welfare of the Hindu!"

BLAKESLEE.

Died, in Los Angeles, Cal., on Nov. 9th, 1898, Lucy E. Blakeslee, wife of H. B. Blakeslee, aged 69 years, 3 months and 24 days. For many years the writer knew Sister Blakeslee at Lincoln, Neb., where she with her husband and family were faithful members of the Christian Church. Bro. Blakeslee will have the sympathy and prayers of a great number of friends in his great sorrow.

The burdens of life were heavy,
But her faith gave strength to bear,
As she patiently trod the narrow way
Till called and released from care.

She left her loved ones weeping
As her soul was borne away,
But looking above with the eye of faith,
They will meet in an endless day.

DETWEILER.

It is sad, when the nation is in the midst of Thanksgiving festivities, that any family should be called to the bedside of a devoted husband and father to bid him a last farewell. At two o'clock Thanksgiving Day, Henry F. Detweiler was called to his eternal home. Bro. Detweiler has faithfully served the congregation at Mina, Kan., as an elder since its organization, four years ago. Was born Jan. 5, 1832, married to Mary H. Hillyer, Feb. 12, 1859, united with the Christian Church, 1866. Funeral conducted Nov. 26, by the writer.

DILLS.

Sister Elizabeth Dills died at her home near Armington, Ill., Nov. 8, 1898, in her 69th year. Her maiden name was Darnell. Born Jan. 3, 1830. At the age of 17 she gave her heart to Christ, with whom she walked in lowly fellowship 52 years. June 1, 1848, she was united in marriage to Thomas H. Dills. She was a true Christian, a devoted wife and beloved mother. She leaves a memory better than great riches. Her children rise up to call her blessed. An aged husband, two sons and four daughters and many friends mourn their loss. Through a lifetime of self-sacrifice this good woman has gone to her reward.

C. A. HECKEL.

ENGLAND.

At his home in Burrton, Kansas, September 11, 1898, of paralysis, S. J. England, at the ripe old age of 79 years and 4 months. He died with the blessed assurance of a home eternal, having been a member of the Christian Church 44 years. He was a devoted worker in the church in Kentucky, in Holton, Kansas, and in Burrton where his home has been for many years. His mother, who was Hannah Mershon, was one of the first converts to that church in Northeastern Kentucky and all her children, of whom he was the last, lived and died in that faith and he also lived to see all his children and many of his grandchildren brought into the fold. He was born in Bath County, Kentucky, married near Grayson, Carter County, to Clarinda Everman, Dec. 27, 1837, with whom he lived 60 years. She with seven children are left. He was quite a prominent character in Northeastern Kentucky, being a member of the state legislature at the beginning of the Civil War, where he cast one of the votes that kept Kentucky from seceding. In 1864 he moved to Girard, Illinois, where his son and two sons-in law, F. M. Jacobs and T. W. Ramey, all ministers, were preaching the gospel. In 1870 he moved to Kansas where he has since lived. He was one of the few remaining old-style Southern gentleman noted for generosity and hospitality, without an enemy, although active in public life and pronounced in his views on all subjects; in short, one of God's noblemen, whose life has made the world better. I cannot close this tribute to my dear old father's memory without alluding to the grand old songs of Zion which he loved so well and which find no place in our books of to-day, such as "The Angels that Watched Round the Tomb," "How Firm a Foundation," "Come, Let Us Join our Friends Above," "Why Should We Start and Fear to Die?" "Broad is the Road that Leads to Death," "Time is Winging Us Away," and many others. Methinks I hear his voice now, so rich and full of pathos even in his old age, singing them as we so often did at home when they were no longer sung in the church, having been replaced by our modern music. So many of our songs seem frivolous in comparison. Sometimes it seems there is no place in the church for old people with the young people's societies and everything done to suit young ideas, but blessed be his holy name there is room for them in heaven. He was wholly prepared and waiting for the summons, as his health had been poor for three years. I close with one of his favorite quotations:

"Life is a scene of conquest, not of rest,
Man's is laborious happiness at best;
On this side of death his dangers never cease,
His joys are joys of conquest, not of peace."

FULLER.

Emma Caroline Moore was born October 19, 1862, in Chautauqua County, New York. Departed this life November 15, 1898, aged 36 years and 26 days. Her mother died when she was seven years of age, and after which time she lived with her grandparents in Pennsylvania until the year 1881, when she removed with them to Nebraska. She was united in marriage to Charles W. Fuller, Jr., in June 8, 1887. She joined the M. E. Church at the age of nine and was a member up to the year 1888, when she joined the Christian Church, living a devoted Christian life to the day of her decease. She leaves a husband, father and three brothers to mourn her loss. The funeral of this noble Christian woman was held in the Christian Church in Ashland, Neb., where she had been one of its most active members for several years For several years she suffered with cancer, but not till a few months before her death did she fail to attend all the services of the church. Bro. Fuller has lost a devoted wife, the church a valued member, whose place will be exceedingly difficult to fill. The community has lost one who was always ready for every good work. A great host of friends attended the funeral in attestation of the high esteem in which this saintly woman was held.

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel,

Catarrh of the Stomach.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drugstores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. These tablets can be found at all drugstores.

About those Departments.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I am sorry you did not state to your readers my reason for objecting to the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Departments in our papers. I have visited many Sunday-schools and Endeavor Societies, and I have failed to find any that were not well supplied with helpful literature. Such being the case, I do not see the necessity for filling the columns of our church papers with these departments. These special writers crowd out many other contributors who ought to be heard. Your own company furnishes literature to a vast number of schools and societies. Why the necessity of filling several columns in your paper with these departments? SIMPSON ELY.

We are not specially concerned with Bro. Ely's reasons for thinking these departments unnecessary, but with the fact of his so thinking. If our readers do not wish them, then we do not care to publish them, even though the reasons for not wanting them are not good. But, as Bro. E. has seen from the responses, allowing that those who have spoken represent those who have not spoken as well as themselves, a great majority of our readers do find them useful. We are grateful to Bro. E. for having called out these expressions, for they will encourage us to try to make these departments more useful than ever.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I know that your Sunday school, Endeavor and Prayer-meeting departments are a great held to many isolated or shut-in Disciples, and hope they may continue in your highly valuable paper. If I were going to suggest anything it would be to keep the idea of thorough, systematic work in our Sunday-schools before our people more frequently.

MRS. M. L. ELLINGER.

Ottawa, Kan., Nov. 22.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Relative to the discussion pro and con. the utility of your space, I beg leave to add my testimony to that already received. As to the Sunday-school department, the weekly lecture by Prof. Willett is like an oasis, sparkling with originality in the midst of a dreary desert of commentaries. His vigor of expression and pithy style would be surely missed if omitted from your columns. We have far too little of this originality as it is. Your (or let me say our) C. E. and Quiet Hour columns need no defense from my pen. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST satisfies. D. C. TREMAINE.

Harrisville, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1898.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—By all means continue the departments in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We work in prayer-meeting, Bible-school and Christian Endeavor and study these columns with much profit. We think the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST becomes better with each year. LOU M. LANE.

Praised by the Soldiers.

The following appeared in the Times-Union, of Jacksonville, of Nov. 21:

Rev. T. H. Blenus, pastor of the Christian Church, of Jacksonville, who has been doing considerable and practical work among the sick soldiers has not been forgotten by them, a letter having been sent to President McKinley, a copy of which has been received here. The letter reads:

Jacksonville, Fla.

Second Division Hospital, Camp Cuba Libre, November, 1898.

To Hon. Wm. McKinley, President of the United States:

Dear Sir: On the departure of many of us from the Second Division hospital of this camp, where we have been under treatment, some of us for a number of weeks, we desire to express our appreciation of the kind treatment that we have received from those in charge of this hospital. Ample provision for our wants has been made, and we have had splendid and untiring attention from sergeons and nurses. While others have complained, we have had no reason to do so. The citizens of Jacksonville have shown the kindest and deepest concern for our welfare and have done very much for our comfort. Among many others we feel it our duty to mention one who has been unstinted in his visitations and untiring in his ministrations since last June, when the hospital was first opened here. We refer to the Rev. T. H. Blenus, pastor of the Christian Church at Jacksonville. This gentleman deserves the thanks of hundreds of our boys. In season and out of season he has ministered in love and kindness to the sick and dying, until his name has become common to all, and his presence in the hospital a source of encouragement. We cannot but feel that such continued and unselfish labors of love should call forth from us words of commendation and should be known to the Chief Magistrate of our beloved land.

[Signed] A number of the boys of the Second Division Hospital, Seventh Army Corps, Jacksonville, Fla.

The above copy of the original letter to the President was sent from Washington to T. H. Blenus by President McKinley, through the surgeon general.

Publishers' Notes.

The Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899 is on our table. It grows brighter and better as the years come and go. We have used it for thirteen years, and now start in for the fourteenth volume. It is pure in doctrine, full in explanation, pointed in application, and we trust international and general in circulation. —The Christian Index, Des Moines, Iowa.

Write to the Christian Publishing Co. for their catalogue, from which you can select an appropriate book for a Christmas present to your friends. A good book is "medicine for the soul" of the careful reader, and a gift of this kind is a constant reminder of the donor. A large number of good books are found published in this paper. Make your selection and send in your order before the holidays.

The study of the lives of Bible characters is both interesting and profitable. Important lessons can be gained from the careful study of such characters as King Saul, King Jehu and Queen Esther. We have recently published three books which deal with the lives of the above prominent characters. The authors and titles are as follows:

"In the Days of Jehu," by J. Breckenridge Ellis. 189 pages. Cloth. Price, 75 cents.

"King Saul," by J. Breckenridge Ellis. 281 pages. Cloth. Price, $1.

"Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis. 132 pages. Cloth. Price, 75 cents.

All of the above books are 12mo. in size and are bound in the latest style cloth binding. They are excellent books to place in the hands of the young. The minister can find in them material for sermons.

The Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, by W. W. Dowling, has, in addition to the lessons for the year, three well-printed maps, the life of Jesus in regular chronological order, and a dictionary of proper names. Many of the lessons are illustrated by scenes from the times in which they were written. The book also contains very helpful opening services for the Bible-school. The lessons are well analyzed and presented in excellent form.

The author, W. W. Dowling, is so well known as the most experienced and capable writer on the Bible-school subjects and lesson commentaries that any new annual coming from his pen is always expected to excel. In this our great army of teachers will not be disappointed. It is certainly an excellent addition to the many volumes already produced. —Register-Review, Kansas City, Mo.

All Sunday-school superintendents and teachers will be greatly assisted in their work by the study of our Lesson Commentary. In order that you may help them in their work, and also show your appreciation of their efforts in the Sunday-school, you should make them a Christmas present of the Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, prepared by W. W. Dowling, and published by the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo. In this book will be found the most thorough treatment of the Sunday-school lessons for 1899. All phases of the subject are discussed and the best scholarship of the world quoted. The Lesson Commentary for 1899 will be a helpful and appropriate Christmas present for any superintendent and teacher.

It is bound in dark green cloth, has red edges, contains over 400 pages and the price is $1, postpaid.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxv. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, December 15, 1898. No. 50

CURRENT EVENTS.

Tho session of Congress which opened on Monday of last week has much to do and little time in which to do it. March 4th is the limit to the short session. There are certain matters of a more or less routine character which must be dealt with and appropriation bills must be passed. These will probably occupy most of the time and energies of the session. In addition to these, there will probably be legislation for the permanent increase of the army, this being considered by the administration as immediately necessary in view of the increase of our territory. Provision for the establishment of a permanent government for Hawaii may also be expected at an early day. These things must be done to avoid an extra session of Congress immediately after March 4th. There are other topics of importance to be considered, but, pressing as they are, they will not be allowed to interfere with the course of these necessary measures. An anti-scalping bill has already been passed by the House; a pooling bill will very likely be introduced; and the Nicaraguan Canal bill, according to Senator Morgan's promise, will be brought in early in the session. But it is not probable that Congress will in the present session undertake to deal with the complex problems of the organization of governments for our new possessions, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

Emperor William opened the new session of the Reichstag on Tuesday, Dec. 6th, the day after the opening of Congress. The Kaiser's speech from the throne touched cursorily upon several of the international topics of the day, calling attention to the speedy resumption of friendly relations between the United States and Spain and remarking upon the perfect neutrality which Germany had maintained between the two combatants. It is interesting to note at a single glance the Kaiser's warm approval of the Czar's proposals for disarmament, and the introduction into the Reichstag, with imperial sanction, of a bill providing for the increase of the German army on a peace footing slightly over half a million rank and file.

President McKinley's message has evoked a volume of comment commensurate with the importance of the topics with which it deals and the expectancy with which it was waited. The document makes no revelation of any unexpected general plan or policy on the part of the administration. Hence it has been received at home with approval or disapproval, according to the individual's preconceived approbation or disapprobation of the Presidential policy. The English papers generally approve of the message, considering it a clear, moderate and satisfactory statement of a wise policy, and seeing, in the declaration for an "open-door" policy in the East that America is "in line" with British purposes and will co-operate with them. Doubt is expressed only in regard to the clause referring to the Nicaraguan Canal, whether there is not a failure to recognize England's rights as guaranteed by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The French press, for the most part, expresses satisfaction and is not disposed to question our right to become a world-power, but it adverts, in the grieved tone of one who has lost confidence in humanity, to the fact that "as regards Cuba, the President's declaration is almost identical with the declaration of Great Britain when she entered Egypt, where she remains. Attention is called by the German papers to the fact that the President fails to reciprocate in any very definite fashion the warm expressions of desire for an Anglo-American alliance which have come from official sources in Great Britain.

As to the Nicaragua Canal, the President takes a decided position, that its construction has become a necessity and that "our national policy now more than ever calls for its control by this government." There is reported to be an understanding with Great Britain which prevents this from being construed as inimical to British interests. At any rate there has been no sign of anxiety on that point in any official quarter. Within less than a year the concession will expire which was granted by Nicaragua to the Maritime Company, through which the committee intends that the United States shall construct and control the canal. Other and conflicting concessions have been granted to a rival company which, if they hold good, would shut off the Maritime Company from the chance of renewal. The Senate committee has reported to the Senate its decision, that the second grant was illegal and that by it Nicaragua endangered its friendly relations with the United States.

The United States Army is quite sure to be reorganized, but it is not so sure whose plan will be adopted for the reorganization. General Miles has formulated a bill embodying his plan, which he has presented to Secretary Alger to be presented through the proper committee. This plan provides for the increase of the standing army to the ratio of one soldier for every thousand of population in the United States and two for every thousand in our foreign possessions, making a total of approximately 100,000 men. These are to be divided among the various arms of the service as follows: 15 regiments of cavalry, 14 regiments of seacoast artillery, two regiments of field artillery, two regiments of engineers and 50 regiments of infantry. The Miles bill proposes also the re-creation of the ranks of general and lieutenant-general, the former to be the rank of the military head of the entire army, the latter of the commander of each of the two army corps. The Hull army bill, formulated by the chairman of the House Committee on military affairs, is said to represent the views of the administration. It also provides for a total of 100,000 men, but differs from the Miles bill in several particulars; for example, in providing for only one lieutenant-general and no general, and in abandoning regimental formation for artillery. The latter bill has been introduced into the House.

The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury contains a good many statistics, but they are not dry statistics. Such figures as the following have a deep significance as indicating the commercial activity and prosperity of our country during the past year in spite of the war. The statistics are for the fiscal year of 1898, the twelve months ending June 30. During this period, for the first time in our history, has the value of our exports of products of field and factory averaged more than one hundred millions per month. For the first time also we have exported more manufactured products than we have imported. The total exports for the year were more than double the total imports, leaving a balance of trade of over six hundred millions in our favor. The unprecedented excess of gold importations over exportations for the past year represents a part of the balance of trade. Foremost among Secretary Gage's recommendations is a repetition of his former suggestion for the gradual substitution of bank notes for greenbacks, by the retention of all the greenbacks which come into the treasury unless gold is offered in exchange for them. The same plan of monetary reform is commended by the President in his message.

A few evenings ago the British Ambassador at Paris, Sir Edmund Monson, took occasion in an after-dinner speech to make a general address to the French people, which was not marked by the customary diplomatic reserve. He assured the French people that England bore no grudge against them, but warned them against a continuance of their policy of nagging and irritation and against attempting to thwart British enterprise by petty maneuvers. He called attention to the Fashoda incident as disproving the familiar allegation that British diplomacy is noisy but ineffectual, and pointed out the fact that such exasperating though petty provocations as the plan of establishing French colleges as rivals of Gen. Kitchener's projected institution in the reconquered Soudan, might make it necessary for Great Britain to abandon her policy of forbearance—to the sorrow of France. The French papers at once resented the speech, and have become more furious about it, now that it appears that the ambassador's threatening words were not a mere "post-prandial indiscretion," but were inspired by his government. Lord Salisbury's responsibility for the speech is still, however, no more than a hypothesis. But Mr. Chamberlain, British Secretary for the Colonies, in a speech two days later, uttered a similar, almost identical warning to France against the "policy of exasperation." Mr. Chamberlain also announced the consummation of a definite understanding between Great Britain and Germany, comparable to that existing between France and Russia.

So far as can at present be ascertained the intention of the administration is to extend the United States tariff regulations to Porto Rico, but to maintain in the Philippines an open door for the commerce of all nations, giving ourselves no advantage over others. The justice and propriety of the former cause in regard to Porto Rico seems obvious enough. If it is to be really a part of the territory of the United States it must be joined to us by commercial as well as political bonds. With the Philippines the case is somewhat different. The example set by the other powers in the Orient, notably Great Britain, in granting equal privileges to the trades of all nations in the Chinese ports which they control, cannot wisely or courteously be ignored. It is true that our tenure of the Philippines will be of a different sort from the hold which England, for example, possesses on the Yangtse district of China, and will involve a more distinct right to a policy of commercial exclusiveness if we cared to inaugurate it. But if we are going to enter into the complex situation which constitutes the Eastern question, we cannot afford to appear as the champions of any narrower policy than Great Britain, whose plea for the commercial "open door" is the most hopeful feature in the mass of Oriental complications. The Spanish peace commissioners have asked that Spain be allowed equal commercial privileges with the United States in Porto Rico for a period of five years and in Cuba as long as we shall control it. The request is supported by the citation of the treaty by which Florida was transferred from Spanish to American hands, in which place equal trading privileges were granted for twelve years. There was a similar provision in the purchase of the Louisiana territory from Spain. A strong and plausible statement of the case has been made and the point is under consideration.

Gov. Tanner, of Illinois, has been indicted by grand jury on the charge of "willfu neglect of palpable duty as an officer and malfeasance in office." This indictment was made by the grand jury which has been sitting at Carlinville, Ill., since Nov. 9, investigating the causes of the riots at Virden, Oct. 12, and placing the blame for them. F. W. Lukins, manager of the Chicago-Virden Coal Co., is indicted for murder and manslaughter on three counts, and fifty-two other persons are charged with more or less seriously criminal participation in the disturbance. The indictment of the governor is based on the proved fact that the sheriff, foreseeing trouble, had asked for troops, that the manager had begged the governor to send troops to preserve the peace, and that the requests had been refused, although it was evident that order could not be maintained among the miners without militia. It was a close vote on the indictment of the governor, 13 to 10. The foreman of the jury is quoted as having uttered these words: "I considered Gov. Tanner the best friend to the laboring man in the state of Illinois, and I for one did not vote to indict him." We repeat our former statement, that the question is not as to the sincerity of Gov. Tanner's devotion to the interests of the laboring man, but relates solely to his obedience to the constitution under which he holds office. Few laboring men would care to assert that even their best friend could not conceivably exceed his authority or come short of his duty as an officer. The words of the foreman of the grand jury may or may not be a true estimate of Gov. Tanner's attitude toward organized labor, but in any case they are not pertinent to the question before the jury. The indictment has been made, but there is a considerable probability that the judicial machinery will slip a cog somewhere and that nothing will come of it.

UNITY IN EDUCATIONAL WORK IN MISSOURI.

The Educational Conference, which met in Moberly on the 6th inst., and adjourned at noon on the following day, came to a most happy termination. There was a feeling widespread among the brethren of the state that because of conflicting interests there could be no possible agreement on lines of educational work, and that the conference could have no other result than to accentuate the differences already existing on this question. The result, however, shows that the Missouri brethren are capable of better things. There do exist, no doubt, these differences of opinion concerning the most profitable lines of educational work, but there was enough of the spirit of unity and brotherly love among the brethren who convened at Moberly to triumph over individual differences and preferences, and to secure substantial unity of action.

The proceedings will, no doubt, be reported in our religious press by the secretary of the conference. It will suffice here to say that, after the preliminary matter of enrollment of delegates, numbering about 100, and the arrangement of an order of business, the first session closed and the conference adjourned to meet at 7 o'clock. At this meeting it was proposed to discuss and decide upon the wisdom of selecting one or more institutions upon which to concentrate our efforts at endowment until they had become adequately endowed. When the session had been opened by devotional exercises, a series of resolutions were introduced in the interest of unity and cooperation which had the happy effect of securing the unanimous approval, at last, of the entire conference. These resolutions set forth the fact that, while in the judgment of this conference it would be unwise to attempt to limit the benfactions of the brotherhood of the state to one or more institutions to the neglect of others, there were certain pressing needs which at present claim our attention.

The resolutions recommended, therefore, that an effort be made to secure a minimum sum of $50,000 for Christian University at Canton, in view of the work that it had done in the past and was capable of doing. This amount was subsequently changed to $100,000. It was further recommended, in view of the needs of the Bible College at Columbia, that an effort be made to erect a suitable building, as early as possible, upon the lot which had been purchased for its use, and this enterprise was commended to the liberality of the brotherhood of the state. It was still further recommended that the Female Orphan School at Fulton should be relieved from its financial misfortune as early as practicable and be otherwise aided in fulfilling its beneficent misssion.

An educational board, afterwards denominated as an executive committee, of seven brethren representing these various interests, was appointed to foster our educational interests in the state and to carry out, through and with the co-operation of the trustees of the institutions above mentioned, the foregoing recommendations, and to report to the next annual educational conference, which is to meet in connection with our next state convention.

Earnest and fraternal speeches were made by many brethren, setting forth the importance of these various educational interests, and the utmost liberality of spirit prevailed. President Lockhart made a ringing speech in behalf of the Bible College, at Columbia, while one of the steadfast friends of the Bible College not only upheld the claims of Christian University for recognition, but volunteered a pledge of $1,000 to its endowment fund on the basis of $100,000. In this sort of an atmosphere the spirit of sectionalism or local interests gave way to the larger conception of a united brotherhood working harmoniously together for the different departments of its one common work. It was not forgotten that we have other institutions in the state, such as the Camden Point Orphan School, which is out of debt and doing a good work, and Central Christian College, at Albany, which has a good building with a small debt, and Christian College, at Columbia, which under its present management has outgrown its old quarters and is planning for new and magnificent buildings. These are all factors in our educational work, and whatever can be done for them will be hailed with pleasure. But it was felt that for the time being the institutions previously referred to had the most pressing claims on the brotherhood of the state, and that our first duty was to look after their needs.

There was a morning session on Wednesday to talk over matters of detail and to agree on the members of the executive committee, all of which was harmoniously arranged. The closing moments of the conference were devoted to earnest thanksgiving to God for the manifestation of His presence and power over the hearts of the brethren, and invoking His blessing in carrying out the plans which had been agreed upon. The final song, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," was sung with great spirit, and Hon. J. W. Alexander, the president of the conference, pronounced it adjourned.

This was a happier issue than any of us had dared to hope for, but no doubt there were earnest hearts that sought God's blessing and guidance upon this conference. It would be wrong to close this brief sketch of what we trust may prove a most important meeting without acknowledging a debt of gratitude due to the church at Moberly for its hospitality in furnishing lodgings for the delegates of the conference, and especially to the ladies for the splendid meals which they served in the church. Bro. Briney and his flock deserved the vote of thanks which they received from the conference for their kindness.

In conclusion, may we express the hope that the brethren who were not present at the conference may accept its conclusions in the same spirit of brotherly love and of magnanimity which marked its proceedings, and that we may all seek to carry out its purposes in the same spirit of unity and of earnest devotion to our educational interests in the state. We have never been in as good condition in Missouri as we are now for a great forward movement in the endowment and equipment of our schools. The brethren understand each other better than ever before. The importance and scope of the Bible College work at Columbia were never so fully understood nor its work so unanimously endorsed as at present. Christian University has never put itself into such close and sympathetic touch with the brotherhood of the state as it has done by its recent action. The disappointment and chagrin which many of the friends of the Orphan School at Fulton felt over its financial mismanagement in the past are giving place to the feeling that the school itself is not to blame for this, and that under wiser supervision, and with the purpose of holding it more steadfast to its original, benevolent aim, the institution must be relieved from indebtedness and helped forward in its Christlike mission.

We appeal, therefore, to the wealthy and well-to-do brethren and sisters in the state to help these institutions to do their work. Let us not trust our means to the legal technicalities of wills, but administer upon our own estates and see the work of God prospering under our liberality ere our eyes are totally eclipsed by the on-coming shadows of death.

SPIRITUAL LIFE—HOW DEVELOPED.*

II. PROCESS OF SPIRITUAL GROWTH.

Paul said concerning his own experience: "That life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself up for me"(Gal.2:20). If there be any who say this life of which we speak cannot be lived here in the flesh, Paul asserts that it can, and that he lived it. He tells us, moreover how he lived it: "I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God." It can be lived in no other way. Faith is the soul's vision. It is only as the soul sees Christ, the Son of God, and yields itself to Him in loving obedience that it can share in that life which has been the wonder and admiration of all the ages. Faith perceives the royal qualities of Christ's character, the amazing love and grace which He offers to men, and lays hold on Him. We cannot expect the spiritual growth of our members without an increase of faith. This increase of faith can be secured only by being loyal to the conscience—the light which is in us—and conforming to every known requirement of duty; by a diligent study of God's Word and the daily efforts to practice it. The more one practices Christianity, the more he will believe in Christ, and the more he believes in Christ the larger measure of his power, grace and life he will receive.

The result of loyally following one's faith is to give to that faith a degree of certitude that amounts to knowledge. Hence Paul could say: "I know in whom I have believed." This harmonizes, too, with the words of Jesus who, in His great intercessory prayer, said: "And this is life e ernal, that they should know Thee, the only true God, and Him whom Thou has sent, even Jesus Christ" (Jno. 17:3).

The knowledge of God and of Christ referred to in this passage as "life eternal" is not, of course, a mere intellectual apprehension of God and of Christ. It is an experimental knowledge; that is, the knowledge that comes from hearing to God's voice, through faith, and loyally obeying that voice. This is perhaps the highest of all knowledge, because it is based upon the highest part of our nature and on the noblest activities of which the soul is capable—faith, hope and love.

There is one condition of spiritual growth that we feel needs to be emphasized because the neglect of it often leads to disastrous spiritual results. The note of reality should be in every religious experience, claim or profession. There should be the utmost harmony between our words and our actual religious desires, purposes and attainments. To profess more than we feel, and to claim more than we actually possess, religiously, is to play the part of a Pharisee, and may become a species of conscious or unconscious hypocrisy. There is the greater danger of this from the fact that our knowledge of what we ought to desire and purpose and be always runs ahead of what we do actually desire and purpose and are. There is no quality of Christian life more to be desired than genuineness. There is a temptation, of course, in some natures, to err in the opposite direction and to publicly discredit their spiritual state in a way that, if done by another, would subject him to the charge of slander. While avoiding all pretense of being better than we are, it is equally our duty, if we are to be genuine, to gratefully acknowledge any strength which God may have given us to achieve the victory over the evil that is within us and without us. If we will but recognize the source of all our spiritual blessings and power, and the true standard of spiritual measurement, there will be little danger of our falling into spiritual pride.

This heart-searching endeavor to be genuine and to rest on nothing but reality in religion is the best preparation for real, effective prayer, without which the soul can never rise to that spiritual altitude for which it was intended. Sincerity is as essential an element of prayer as faith is, and without it it is impossible that there should exist that consciousness of our spiritual needs which alone makes prayer possible. There is no better place in which to gauge the spiritual life of a church than at it prayer-meeting. It is not only in the number of prayers offered, but especially in the kind of praying, that we learn the real spiritual stateof the church. On what plane do these prayers move? What are the things for which the petitioners ask and for which they give thanks? What of the spontaneity in the prayers? What faith do they manifest in God's willingness to grant large spiritual blessings? What reaching out is there after higher and better things and greater victories in behalf of truth and righteousness? Is there in the prayers the genuine note of confession of sin and the spirit of repentance? A preacher should study the prayers of the membersof his congregation like a physician would note the symptoms of his patient by feeling his pulse, taking his temperature and examining his tongue, to ascertain his physical condition. Said Mr. Spurgeon, after talking with a minister for sometime, whom he had not met before, "Let us kneel down and pray, for I never feel that I know a man until I have heard him pray." Any one who has heard Mr. Spurgeon pray has never been in doubt as to the source of his wonderful power and success.

The problem of promoting the spiritual growth of a congregation, with which every conscientious minister has to deal, is largely the problem of how to get his members to pray more and to pray better. One of the ways of accomplishing this end is to get them to attempt some kind of religious work, for nothing discloses to one so clearly his spiritual needs as an effort to do some work for God, and this consciousness of spiritual need is one of the chief incentives to prayer. As we are more apt to pray genuinely and to make confession of our actual sins and ask God for the precise things that we need, when we pray alone, pastors would do well to insist on the importance of the "Quiet Hour," or at least a quiet quarter of an hour in each day, when the soul can be alone with God and with the great questions that affect its eternal destiny.

It is to be feared that in the hurry and bustle of our modern life the reading of God's Word and other religious reading is sadly neglected. The soul, like the body, must have its food in order to grow. Whatever can be done by ministers and others in getting our membership interested in Bible study and in the reading of religious journals that will acquaint them with the current work of the church today, will be most helpful in promoting their spiritual life.

Finally, the nature and value of worship should be impressed upon the minds of the members, and the whole order of church services should be so arranged as to develop reverence for God, and to cultivate the spirit of devotion. The music of the congregation, both as to the character of the songs and the character of the singing, and the prayers, and the observance of the Lord's Supper, the reading of God's Word, and even the receiving of the offerings of the people, all should be done with a view of promoting the spiritual life of the members.

But when all this is done we must be patient and wait for growth. It is in the spiritual as in the material world—"First the blade, then the corn, and then the full corn in the ear." We must be patient with ourselves and with each other. The very mistakes which we make may be the rounds by which we ascend nearer to God, for it is on the stepping-stones of our dead selves that we rise to higher things. If we can only be sure that God is dealing with the soul, and the soul is responsive to God's dealings, we may wait for the rest.

Let us never doubt for a moment the divine purpose declared in the Word of God to conform us who believe to the image of Jesus Christ. This He will surely do if we yield ourselves to the leadings of God. "Beloved, now are we children of God, and it is not yet manifest what we shall be. We know that if He shall be manifested we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is. And every one that hath this hope set on him purifieth himself even as He is pure."

THE MODERN PESSIMIST.

For many centuries the Devil declined to write his creed, or to express himself in books; but he has changed his mind of late years, and has commenced freely to paint pictures, write novels, and occasionally to to perpetrate a poem. He lends himself to the popular fiction of the pessimist school, puts himself forward in the form of decadent art, and has presumed to enter the lofty realm of poetry, hitherto devoted to good causes. His next literary effort will be the production of a Bible, or else he will expurgate and translate to suit himself, God's Bible. Satan is the author of pessimism, for no one but he could originate the idea that the life God created and the world he organized were failures. The philosopher who declared that this was the worst of all possible worlds was guilty of blasphemy, for he expressed the opinion that God was a failure and the Devil a success.

A typical pessimist is afflicted with mental strabismus, moral if not physical indigestion and a bad liver, or he is the victim of an incomplete development. He takes an exaggerated view of the worst side of life, unrelieved by the best side. Existence is hope unsatisfied, desire unfulfilled, joy unrealized, pleasures promised that melt like Dead Sea apples on the lips, or mock the vision like the mirage of an Eastern desert; life is pain, disaster and ultimate failure. This is an old view, because sin and Satan are old. An echo of it reaches us from the far distant age of the patriarchs, and it comes through a woman when her son had married against her will. When Esau married against her wishes Rebekah exclaimed: "I am weary of my life, what good shall my life do unto me." "My soul chooseth death rather than life," was the piteous plaint of Job in his troubles. "Let the day perish wherein I was born," said the afflicted patriarch. Further down and in times of higher knowledge, Elijah the prophet cried, "It is enough, now take away my life, for I am not better than my fathers." "I hate life," said the author of the book of Ecclesiastes, in one of his pessimistic moods. "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity, saith the preacher, and there is no profit under the sun," said he in the same frame of mind. There has been plenty of this feeling in literature and in history. "The happiest hour of life is the departure from it," said Calanus the Hindu companion of Alexander the Great. "Life is a continuation of misery," said Acosta the Portuguese. "I doubt," wrote Seneca, "if any one would accept life if he knew what it would cost him." "The blessings of life," wrote Pliny the elder, "are not equal to its ills, even though the number of the two were equal, nor can any pleasure compensate for the least pain." The great Oriental religions, professed by the majority of mankind, regard life as an intolerable burden of misery and sorrow, to be escaped from in the extinction of Nirvana, to be ended up after a long and weary succession of transmigrations through animals and degraded beings, in the absorption of the individual soul back into the essence of the universe. Hence the saying of Calanus the Hindu, "The happiest hour in life is the departure from it."

It is one of the strange things in these modern days of our Western life, in this New World of bouyant hope and abounding vigor, that philosophers, scientists, novelists and even poets are trying to bring back to mankind this old pagan night of Eastern pessimism, in their dolorous croakings on the dismal question: "Is life worth living?" The nasty French novel of the period, elaborately expounds this dank and dirty philosophy of animalism and negation. Grant Allen's New Hedonism, which is a revamp of the old pagan notion that pleasure is the chief end of life, is a quadrilateral, the four corners of which are Atheism, Pessimism, Free Love, and the denial of a Future Life. It is not singular that a philosophy which begins by making life all pleasure should end by making it all pain. After the fitful round of license and youthful indulgence, the pessimistic poet comes in thusly on the home stretch:

"What is the existence of man's life
But open war or slumberous strife?
Where sickness to his sense presents
The combat of the elements;
And never feels a perfect peace
Till Death's cold hand signs his release?

"It is a very weary interlude
Which doth short joys, long woes include.
The world, the stage; the prologue, tears;
The acts, vain hopes and varied fears;
The scene shuts up with loss of breath,
And leaves no epilogue but death."

Pessimism as a mood may be pardonably engendered by insupportable temporary conditions, as in the case of Job and Elijah; as a disease it has its roots in atheism; its essence is disbelief in God and in man. It sees the disorder in the world, and doubts the existence of an eternal order; it sees the lawlessness in society, and questions the reign of law; it sees confusion among men, and doubts the possibility of the higher unity. Its chief trouble is its superficiality for lack of insight. It sees evil, but has no eye for remedies. It can diagnose the world's disease, but can not see the remedial elements that the Maker of the world has provided for its cure. A theory of life based upon a perception of injustice and unrighteousness and prevailing wrong, that fails to recognize the means and possibilities of redemption, is deficient at the most essential point of a sound philosophy of human existence. A view so destitute of insight and sympathy, is destined to be smitten with permanent sterility. Some one has truly remarked that if Christ had been a pessimist, the mighty power which had flown from him to the ends of the earth would not have touched his nearest follower. There is neither heart nor hope nor help in pessimism, it is at best and in its purest form a blind protest against wrong.

The belief in a divine order being worked out in an imperfect world, in a divine salvation being wrought out in a sinful race, is the optimism of the Word of God. The true optimist is often at one with the pessimist in affirming that conditions, for the time, could scarcely be worse; but instantly parts company with the pessimist by adding that there is a power in the world that can make them better, and a capacity in man to co-operate with that power. The Christian view does not affirm that things are right and that man has no moral disease, but it does say that there is a power in the universe, not ourselves, that makes for righteousness, that in view of a reigning God and a supreme moral order and the capacity for recuperation in man wrong will be righted, sin destroyed and the world made a better place to live in.

Hour of Prayer.

THE VISIT OF THE WISE MEN.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Dec. 21st, 1898.

And they came into the house and saw the young child with Mary, his mother; and they fell down and worshiped him; and opening their treasures they offered unto him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh.—Matt. 2:11.

One of the pictures indelibly engraved upon the heart of humanity, never to be effaced by the hand of Time, is that of the wonderful Babe of Bethlehem lying in a manger, in the arms of his wondering mother Mary, and visited by adoring shepherds, and later by sages from the East who come to worship, and who lay rich gifts at his feet. It is a picture that strikes the imagination, that touches the heart and quickens our whole religious nature. It is a holy place and a holy time. Poets artists and historians have each sought to interpret to us the wonderful significance of this scene. They see in it the meeting-place of heaven and earth, the union of humanity and divinity, God manifest in the flesh. In this lesson we are specially concerned with the visit of the wise men from the East.

Who were these wise men who came from the East? We do not know. The important fact is that they were wise men, who were studying the times in which they lived, and who were looking for the coming of a King who, in wisdom and in power, was to minister to the needs of the human race as no other king had ever ministered. There were many men, perhaps the great majority of men at that time, who were looking for no king or prophet. They were satisfied with the world as it was, and were absorbed by their little pursuits and ambitions and petty plans. But both in and out of Judea there were a few choice spirits waiting for the dawning of a new era for the race. This expectation was born both of the prophetic word, which promised deliverance, and of the manifest need which they saw for the coming of a great Deliverer.

These men who came from the East were not of the Jewish race, but they had doubtless heard, perhaps from captive Jews, or it may be through portions of the sacred ritings with which they had come in ontact, that the world's great Prophet and edeemer would be born among the Jews n Judea, and they came in search of this hild of promise and of hope. The inci- ent shows that the expectation and the esire for a coming King was not limited o the Jews. There was a feeling that this oming King had a mission, not for the ews alone, but for the entire race. These ien who dwelt afar, gazing into the deep lue heavens by night in order to read in s sublime scroll the Will of the Supreme Iind, saw what they regarded as the star hat was to guide them to the new-born ing. Following its leading they were rought to where the young child lay.

The incident of Herod's jealousy, stirred p by their inquiry as to where the prom- sed King of the Jews was to be born, and is scheme to murder this Child of prom- se, is in most striking contrast with the ruly worshipful visit of the wise men rom the East. Herod was looking after is crown and throne and power and osition—his own selfish ends; but these ise men were looking for a new era, a righter hope for humanity, and desired to orship at the shrine of Him who had ome to introduce such an era. How dif- erent are the motives which actuate men n this life, and how truly men are meas- red by the motives which animate them!

Is it not true that from that first visit f the wise men from the East to the pres- nt time the truly wise in all nations nd races have sought to find Christ, and aving found Him, have offered Him wor- hip? Why should the wise seek Christ nd offer worship at His shrine? Because Ie is humanity's only hope. It is He that rought life and immortality to light. It as He that unbarred the tomb and made t the gateway of the life beyond. It was Ie that showed us the Father, illustrating n His own life and teaching the character f God. It was He that revealed to us the 'ather's will, and demonstrated in His own ife the wonderful possibilities of humanity, ndwelt by the Divine. It was His hand hat turned back the dolorous tide of the ges, and brought in the new and brighter ra of joy and hope and progress. It is He hrough whose atoning death and gracious ntercession we receive forgiveness of sins nd reconciliation with God. It is He who is binding men of all nations, races nd languages of earth into a glorious rotherhood.

No wonder, then, the wise men of the East brought their gifts of gold and frank- ncense and myrrh, and what was even nore precious—the tribute of adoring earts. The marvel is that so many even et, after nineteen centuries of glorious Christian history, neglect to seek Christ nd bring to Him fragrant offerings of ove and devotion. May this Christmas- ide, with its holy influences and hallowed nemories, win many hearts, not simply to he Christ-child, but to the throned and ceptered Christ, who is to-day King of kings and Lord of lords.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who wert once the lowly Child n Bethlehem's manger, but who art now xalted above all thrones and princi- alities and powers, we come to Thee to- day with our incense of praise and thanks- giving and our heart's sincerest love and adoration. We thank Thee for Thy visit to his earth, for Thy lowly birth, for Thy poverty and suffering and tender ministries in our behalf, and Thy cruel death on the cross in order that we might have ever- lasting life. Accept the homage of our hearts to-day, dear Lord, and draw us into closer and sweeter fellowship with Thee in all Thy ministries of grace and truth to our sinning and sorrowing race. For Thy Name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

Henry Watterson has been delivering an address to the Patria Club in New York City, in which he said some wise things; but about the wisest utterance in his speech was that concerning the danger of this country from the love of money. Mr. Watterson is not alarmed about expansion, but he says: "That which seems to me to bode real evil to the state, which is not affected by these new possessions, is that which comes from within, and passeth in show. The great menace is in one sentence—money. Not hard money or soft money, but simply money in its relation to the moral nature of the people. . . . . It is the one thing universally used and abused, universally coveted and reviled." Further on he added: "Find out a nation's sin and you will find out its danger. The danger which hangs over us is the relation of money to the moral nature of the people. The advice: 'Put money in thy purse,' has become too much the gospel of the country. The trial of the trade-mark is over us all. Again, the statesmanship which is to lead us up the steep inclines to glory must ally traditions and progress and get closer and closer to the moral nature of the country."

Mr. Watterson shows himself something of a prophet in these utterances. The man who sees no danger to the country and no danger to the moral welfare of the people in the love of money, in the unscrupulous methods resorted to for getting it, as well as in the too general failure to use it wisely, even when honestly gained, cannot be credited with a very clear moral vision. The love of money is, as the apostle tells us, "a root of every evil." It is a root if not the root of the liquor traffic. It is a root of the social evil. It is a root of the gambling mania, of strikes, lockouts, industrial strifes, monopolies, political corruption, and whatever other evil afflicts the church and the state. It is not money in itself that is evil, but it is the love of it, for its own sake, and the bad use of it, that is doing all the mischief. Well it would be for the country if it would heed the voice of this political prophet as to the perils of wealth. The trade-mark is not the highest mark of national greatness, nor of social, intellectual or moral progress.

The Bible is full of warnings against covetousness, and its prophets and apostles admonish us faithfully on the subject. Christ's example and teaching leave no doubt as to what attitude He would have His followers assume toward money and money-getting. The principle of stewardship is clearly set forth by Him, according to which we are not to claim anything as our own. We are simply holding property in trust for God. We are required to use it for the benefit of mankind, and are taught that every man will be called into judgment and will be required to give an account of his stewardship. The imperative duty of every man of means, above the actual necessities of himself and family, is to begin at once to administer on his estate, and to use it for the furtherance of the interests of the kingdom of God. We have no right to die rich and take the chances of having the honest gainings of a lifetime squandered for unworthy objects. If God has blessed us in our business pursuits, He is thereby submitting us to one of the severest tests to which character can be put—the test of prosperity. He means to see whether we will be faithful in the "few things" He has committed to us here, so as to test our fitness for larger responsibilities in the life to come. Alas, how many have been "weighed in the balances and found wanting!"

Recurring again to Mr. Watterson's speech, he said concerning the changes brought about by the war: "Our new responsibilities will steady rather than endanger us." This is a hopeful view to take of the situation, and one that is not without support both in reason and experience. Many a young man has been made steady by having responsibilities laid upon him. The making of character lies not in shunning but in bearing responsibilities. We do not see why it should not be as true of nations as individuals, for a nation is but an aggregation of individuals. Dull, indeed, must be the moral susceptibilities of the American people if they do not understand that these larger responsibilities which have come upon us in consequence of the recent war, demand on our part a deeper sense of moral obligation and a greater effort at self-purification, in order that we may meet these new responsibilities that are upon us. We believe that this must necessarily be the effect, if the church of God is awake to its duty and its opportunity. It is a time in our national history when every moral force should be exerted in behalf of righteousness, of strict honesty and of political purity. Not only should preachers and teachers in the Sunday-school do this, but the great army of teachers in the public schools, colleges and universities, and editors of secular as well as religious journals, and statesmen all should unite their efforts in behalf of that righteousness which "exalteth a nation," and to the putting away of that sin which is a "reproach to any people."

Questions and Answers.

1. Does the Bible teach that when a sinner is converted to Christ and surrenders to him, it is impossible for such an one to ever fall?

2. Does the first ten verses of the 11th chapter of Isaiah refer to the second coming of Christ or to his first coming?

3. Tell us how Jesus was "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," if buried Friday, and what does the "heart of the earth" signify? W. H. Barclay.

Crookston, Minn.

1. It does not. On the contrary, the Bible exactly harmonizes with human experience and observation on that subject. It does teach, however, that so long as one clings to Christ it is impossible for him to fall away. It is useless to refer to any passage in proof of this position, as we would cite the whole New Testament. Every command and every warning and every exhortation to steadfastness presupposes the possibility of falling away from our first love.

2. We should say that the Scripture referred to has reference to the advent of Christ and the triumphs of his kingdom, including his whole reign and culminating in his complete triumph, or what is called the second coming.

3. The Jewish custom of referring to a part of the day as the whole of the day, or to any event occurring on the third day as having occurred after three days and nights, is sufficient to account for this scriptural phrase. "The heart of the earth" signifies simply the burial of his body in the earth, with perhaps a reference to the descent of Jesus in Hades, supposed by the ancients to be somewhere in the depths of the earth.

How are deacons and elders of the Christian Church made such in the state of Missouri? Do the churches keep up the practice of ordination as taught by Alexander Campbell? R. E. Casey.

Alamo, Tenn.

We fear that very many congregations in the state have no formal ordination of these officers. They are simply elected to these positions, and in many cases the election occurs annually. The practice of annual elections has had the effect of doing away in many places with the custom of ordination. The annual election has been resorted to to rid the congregation of undesirable material in its board of officers in the least objectionable way. When a church, however, has the men selected whom it feels sure are suitable for the positions to which they have been selected, it would be better for them to formally ordain them for these positions to hold office as long as it is mutually agreeable.

---

1. What is the prevalent view among the Disciples of Christ concerning the personality and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit?

2. What part or agency has the Holy Spirit in conversion? J. C. Sargeant.

Kimball, O.

1. The Disciples of Christ believe in and teach the personality of the Holy Spirit, and that it dwells in the heart of the Christian. The degree in which the Spirit guides and controls the life of the Christian depends upon the willingness of the believer to be so guided and his conformity to the will of Christ.

2. The Holy Spirit is the agent in every conversion under the gospel. "And when He is come He will convict the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." The Holy Spirit operates through the gospel on the printed page, and especially as preached by men full of the Holy Spirit, and through the lives of Christian people, and perhaps in other ways that we know not of.

1. In what sense did Jesus ascend into heaven?

2. If as an embodied personality, and he shall so come again, how shall those on the side of this globe opposite to his appearing, behold him?

3. If heaven is not a substantial place, and Christ no longer an embodied personality, how are we to understand the Scriptures that so speak of him and the place of his abode? Trouble Seeker.

1. He assumed the glorified form and entered into that glory of which He had divested Himself in order to dwell in the flesh and manifest God to men.

2. This question presupposes that there will be an appearing of Jesus on one side of the globe different from that on another side. We know Christ is coming now all around the globe wherever His gospel is preached. We take it for granted that our glorified Lord will not be troubled by the rotundity of the earth in manifesting Himself to all who dwell upon the globe.

3. Heaven is, no doubt, a "substantial place," but it does not follow from that that every place where God rules supreme and where Christ's character is reproduced in the lives of the people may not become a part of heaven. May it not be that the "new Jerusalem," the Holy City, which John saw descending from God out of heaven, is to be built here on earth, and this is to be a part of the dwelling-place of God and filled with righteousness and glory? We may not know where we shall be any more than what we shall be, but it is enough to know that we shall be with Christ and be like Him.

THE NOONDAY OF THE SOUL.

L. H. STINE.

II. THE ÆSTHETICS OF LIGHT.

Light is beautiful wherever it is seen. Whether seen in the face of the refulgent moon, in the sparkle of the quenchless stars, in the unrivaled play of colors in the film of the soap-bubble, in the changing purple of the mother-of-pearl, in the gorgeous rays of the plumes of birds, in the gay tints of the evening cloud or in the spangles of the dewdrop trembling on the rosebud, light is always a "thing of beauty." Indeed, it is the "first of painters." Its pictures adorn with numerous "emblems of instructive duty," the walls of Nature's Temple. The flowers, that never come and go without a promise, form a beautiful picture of the "Children of Summer"—the favorites of heaven. They are beautiful because they are the guileless children of light. At this writing the trees are ladened with pendent cones of ice, and the dauntless beams of the declining sun are firing every twig, transforming the chaste crystals into gems of beauty, radiant as are the diamond and the ruby. Sporting with their precious jewels, they are richer far than blossoming trees. One can never know the immortal beauty an icicle conceals in its leaden-like core until a ray of sunlight smites it with a scourge of fire. The rainbow, bright pledge of peace, is a matchless work of art. A summer morning, the fairest sight in the realm of nature, "furrowing all the orient into gold," is a scene of thrilling beauty and is made so by the salute of the golden sun. Shelley sings of the beauty of night, through whose cold lustre rolls the cloudless moon, and it is Byron who, looking upon the snow-shining mountains when the stars are forth and the queen of night spreads her sacred mantle over the solemn scene, is enraptured with the "starry shade of dim and solitary loveliness," a vision beautiful enough for angels to behold, and there he learns the language of another world." Proud day, born out of eternity, calm and bright, like a "dove of heaven" bearing glad tidings from the last, fit emblem of the noonday of the soul and the exquisite prototype of "God's eternal day," is beautiful; because it is blessed by the grace of sunshine.

Light is not only the painter that makes the world beautiful; it is also the undying artist that bestows its choicest gift of beauty on the soul. Behold sweet charity the bond of perfectness, the fine "virtue of the heart" that renders "blessings for curses;" the lowly man, "nameless in worthy deeds," whose robeis "humility, the mother of meekness" (Gregory of Nyssa), and whose life grows out of the "ashes of self-love and on the grave of pride" (Rambach); the soft purple hue of the lowly violet "hid among its leaves and known only by its fragrance;" the patient man bearing with a calm and serene spirit the lot assigned him, nor murmurs at the load laid upon him; the benevolent man whose soul feels a pleasure in voluntarily risking something to serve an honest man that has gained one's heart; the sympathetic man that lives not in himself alone, but feels himself related to another and is capable of suffering on account of the sufferings of an enemy" (Cousin), and the merciful man whose mercy, "nobility's true badge," seasoning with lenity his spirit of justice "droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven," blessing alike "him that gives and him that takes." Here is the image of a saint at whose feet the pious heart reverently bows. He believed in the light and in it he humbly walked, and with true alchemic power light of life transmuted the base materials of his nature into the pure silver and gold of a radiant moral beauty.

It was light, the master painter, that working according to ancient design produced the beautiful lives of Theresa and of Francis of Assisi. The life of John the disciple "whom Jesus loved," at the time of the composition of the Fourth Gospel was woven of the tissues of the "Light of the World." It was the excellent beauty of the "true light" that made Madame Guyon an object of reverence and of admiration. It was the light of the coming glory that translated the life of Paul out of its environment of prejudice and intolerance into the spiritual sovereignty of Christ's love and fashioned it after the likeness of the Son of Man. The lives of John and Paul are masterpieces as spiritual works of art. Their beauty charms one's senses. One pauses to look upon their brows inspired with lofty views and to behold their upraised hands giving to God each flying moment, and sees in their forms of surpassing beauty the image of their divine Original.

"In order to arrive at this perfect beauty," says Plato, "it is necessary to commence with the beauties of this lower world, and the eyes being fixed upon the supreme beauty, to elevate ourselves unceasingly toward it by passing, thus to speak, through all the degrees of the scale, from a single beautiful body to two from two to all others, from beautiful bodies to beautiful sentiments, from beautiful sentiments to beautiful thoughts until from thought to thought we arrive at the highest thought." One must begin with the beauties of the external world to arrive at the beautiful of the soul. Let one ask the morning star what report it gives and one will discover in it a herald of the gracious dispensation and the dawning of the day of unspeakable glory in hear that trust and hopes. Let one consider the life of the raven, incapable of sowing and reaping, and he will find in it an illustration of the providential care of God over one in the way of one's duty that is blessed with the capacity of forethought and with the means of providing for future necessities. Let one behold the cloistered cheek of the lily's grace withholding from the sun its "pensive beauty," then will one perceive in the flower of "virgin light" with its charms unveiled, an emblem of Jesus and an image of the saint. Let one listen under a bright sky to the eloquent teachings of the wind, then will one hear whisperings gentle, tender and reinspiring of the life-giving Spirit. Let one gaze on the draperies of golden clouds that fringe the sinking sun and one will discover prophetic gleams of the sunrise of heaven. Ponder on the peaceful, hopeful life of an acknowledged saint and one will find the picture of saintship painted in one's heart.

To one seeking to arrive at the perfect beauty of Jesus, a magnificent night should mean more than a time for the "mystery of folded sleep." A tree, an image of man, a symbol of immortality, should mean more to a mind growing into the likeness of Jesus than material for so many cords of wood, for so many rails, or for so many feet of lumber and should speak to it in various tongues of "God's first temples." After a long period of experiment and trial a forest king should tell one how man learned to "hew the shaft and lay the architrave," also to spread the span of some vast cathedral roof to "gather and roll back the sound of anthems." To him that holds "communion with her visible forms," Nature speaks a "various language" of delicacy, tenderness, affection, providence, love and hope.

For the attainment of the highest beauty of character it is necessary to see the highest object of beauty and worship at its shrine. "The sentiments of the beautiful," says Cousin, "may be awakened in each one of us before any beautiful object;" but what object is it that awakens in the soul the sublimest sentiments of the beautiful? Let Plato answer: "At the extreme limits of the intellectual world is the idea of the Good which is perceived with difficulty, but, in fine, cannot be perceived without concluding that it is the source of all that is beautiful and good; that in the visible world it produces light and the star whence the light directly comes; that in the invisible world it directly produces truth and intelligence." In the language of Plato and in the diction of the English Bible the Good is God and God is the Good. God, therefore, is the master object for the soul to behold in order to arrive at the goal of perfect beauty. Some sentences back I sketched in brief outline the poraiture of a saint, but how became this saint so like the "beauty of the Lord?" The answer is at hand: the light that evolves order from confusion, that restores essential distinctions that are lost, that brings back the cheerful variety of character that alone gives joy, and that creates the whole man anew in the image of the Sinless Man shined into his heart to give the illumination of the "knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." "The face of Jesus Christ" is the object one sees. Yet, another verse from Paul: "But we all, with unveiled face reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Lord the Spirit." One is transformed from beautiful character to beautiful character by beholding in the perfect life of Jesus the beautiful character of the Lord. Plato in his philosophy of the beautiful, and Paul in his doctrine of spiritual optics agree in their theory of attaining the "beauty of holiness."

David with his harp tuned to the higher harmonies, sings of "the beauty of the Lord," and Isaiah, borne on the wing of a swift and vigorous hope, grows rapturous over the prospect of beholding the "King in his beauty." God is the ideal of beauty. "God is, par excellence, the beautiful—for what satisfies more our faculties, our reason, our imagination, our heart! "He offers to reason the highest idea, beyond which there is nothing more to seek, to imagination the most ravishing contemplation, to the heart a sovereign object of love" (Cousin). The beauty of the Lord consists doubtless in the "combination of his various attributes in one harmonious whole." When seen in succession, the colors of the rainbow are beautiful; but they have a "special beauty that, arising from no simple tint, is the result of their assemblage," and consists in their blended radiance. It is this harmonious blending of attributes that gives to the king his entrancing beauty. "The most probable theory of the beautiful," to quote again from Cousin, "is that which composes it of two contrary and equally necessary elements, unity and variety. Behold a beautiful flower. Without doubt unity, order, proportion, symmetry even, are in it; for, without these qualities, reason would be absent from it, and all things are made with a marvelous reason. But, at the same time, what a diversity! How many shades in the color, what richness in the least details!"

Think of the variety of the graces of Jesus. The best things the world possessed found their way into his life. Out of every realm the world came with choicest gifts and crowned his life with every virtue. The animal kingdom endowed him with the courage of the lion and the wisdom of the serpent, with the innocence of the lamb and the willingness of the ox for sacrifice or for work. With a soul in every leaf and speaking words a childlike mind can understand, the "wilderness of sweets" gladdened his sight with the purity of the lily and the constancy of the hyacinth. Speaking a melodious language taught them of God, the "feathery people of mid-air" sung to him of the trust the fowls of heaven feel, and of the meekness of the murmuring dove. The unfolding stars that crown the shadowy night mantled him with their quenchless light and sung their sweetest influence on his soul of unbounded desires, of unlimited power, of undefined limits, and of infinite variety, then became his life transparent as the air he breathed, and serene as the beautiful sky that canopied him. The looms of heaven wove from linen clean and pure his immaculate robe of righteousness, while the thorn bush, rooted in the earth, furnished the crown for his first coronation. God gave him the plenitude of the divine nature, and the reason of man culminated in him, "in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge hidden." Jesus is the all-gifted one. Heaven is powerless to add another grace to his perfection, and the world finds all its best things represented in his comprehensive life.

Think, too, how perfect were the virtues of Jesus. His love was not mixed with the dross of remorseless hate. His faith was not stained with a single shadow of doubt. His purpose was transparent with conscious sincerity. His benevolence was purely disinterested as his humanity was without hypocrisy. Instead of being framed around a self-centred aim, his life was built around the needs of the human race. Every virtue was perfect in itself. It was free from defect.

Think, again, of the completeness of the life of Jesus. not a virtue was lacking, nor was there an abnormal development of a few virtues at the expense of all the others. The law of proportion was in full force in the building of the character of Jesus, and because it was a harmonious life it was a beautiful one.

Jesus is the only heroic person known in history of whom it can be said he was perfect and complete. "Noah was a righteous man and perfect in his generation," yet the indelible stain of a drunken debauch defiled his blameless life. Abraham was the incarnation of an illustrious faith, yet his surprising distrust of God showed itself in deliberate and premeditated equivocation and fraud. Moses was proverbial for his meekness, yet he was hasty and impassionate. David, the king, was a man after God's own heart, yet he was adequte to arts and strategems for cruelty and crime. Solomon, though he excelled all the other kings of the earth in moral wisdom, was a man of painful and fatal errors and became an old and foolish king. John, "the apostle of love," was the fervid disciple, yet his spirit was exclusive and he sought to accomplish the triumph of the kingdom of the Son of Man by a resort to cruel power. Peter, the impulsive disciple, was impetuous in his affections, yet he was timed in his resolutions.

When once the "King in his beauty," the Lord of Light, is enthroned in the dominion of one's soul to direct it, to restrain it and to inspire it, as Theon of Smyrna imagined the sun to be sphered in the centre of the universe, his royal light combining the graces of the heart in one harmonious congress of virtues, translates one into the exquisite beauty of a child of light.

Then the child of spiritual beauty is secure. It will not come into judgment. Heaven sees in it the image of itself, and the whole wide world of truth, of beauty and of good conspires to defend the realization of its own ideal. Xerxes, the Persian, when he destroyed all the temples in Greece, caused the temple of Diana to be preserved for its beautiful structure. The soul that has the light of life shining in it, and is irradiated with the beauty of holiness, will be preserved from age to age for the excellent glory of the temple of art.

THE SPIRITUAL BENEFITS OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

T. H. BLENUS.

The Author of our being has so constituted us as to feel certain impressions of mind at the sight of certain objects. The slightest circumstance recalls a departed friend, the smallest relic acquires a value. Around us the flowers of the field impress us with their beauty, and the wonderful magnificence of the stupendous works of God fill us with awe and admiration. Applying the same principle of our being to religion, our thoughts cannot be fixed upon evidences of infinite goodness and everlasting love without feelings of emotion. When we engage in the hallowed exercises of spiritual devotion we counterwork the power and influence of earthly objects, and retiring from the world and its temptations we shut out from the heart every intruding guest that would distract attention or disturb us in approaching our Heavenly Father. Like Moses of old we are made aware that we stand upon holy ground, and consequently put away from us all worldly affections and human desires. No act of divine worship in the Christian religion is more solemn or more sacred than that of the Lord's Supper. The most serious and solemn transactions in the plan of redemption are suggested by this institution. The occasion demands on the part of the participant a suitable frame of mind. It is no place for the touch of a profane hand. In this observance the Christian commemorates that scene in which the earth trembled and the sun veiled its face, as the Son of God became the world's Redeemer. It conveys to every faithful follower of Christ the grace of the New Covenant in view of which he is called upon to banish from heart and mind all worldly passions, unholy desires, feelings of anger and wrath, and with profound reverence and the deepest gratitude to sit at the table in a perpetual covenant never to be annulled. As the bow, bent by the Almighty hand, appears in the cloud as a memorial that the world has been saved from a deluge, and a signal that it shall be preserved from any other, so this commemorative institution in the church is a token of a divine covenant of eternal salvation. It is to be feared, and very much to be regretted, that with many persons this solemn and important privilege is looked upon more as a mere matter of form than an act of true, binding, faithful and consecrated devotion. To all such this bread is not the bread of life, nor this cup the cup of blessing. When Jesus wept at the grave of Lazarus the Jews exclaimed, when they saw the manifestation of his sorrow, "Behold how he laved him!" When the child of God comes to the Lord's Table he comes in contact with those emblems which represent his Lord, not shedding tears of sympathy alone, but shedding his blood for the lost and ruined of earth. We have much greater reason here to exclaim, "Behold how the Son of God loved humanity!" It is here that we remember the "Man of Sorrows." It is here we remember the cruel taunts and scourges of his persecutors. It is here we think of the patience and meekness of the Lamb of God. Here we thankfully acknowledge the work of the Savior in canceling the handwriting against us, fixing it to his cross and there leaving it as a trophy of his wonderful and complete victory. We see him sheathing the sword of the cherubim which turning every way guarded the tree of life, and we behold him opening to us the gates of heaven and landing us through the portals to eternal joy. Through this institution we enjoy the promise of a city which cannot be shaken, a kingdom which cannot be moved, and a crown that fadeth not away.

The Religious World.

Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip.

Three conventions were held in November. We note a few important matters developed by the conventions.

First. The desire for federation among the churches in undertaking this work for the men of the country. It was felt that no one denomination by itself is able fully to handle this problem. The hope for the future lies in united effort. The matter of federation was more specially mentioned because many independent Brotherhoods have been started largely copying the original society. It was felt to be a matter for congratulation that the success of the Brotherhood had put so many rival organizations into the field. Strong resolutions were adopted by these conventions urging all men's societies to come under the Brotherhood.

Second. The moral effect of the recent war and territorial expansion was noted. Again and again it was evident that the delegates looked upon the present period of national history as an ethical crisis of the highest moment. The hope was expressed that perhaps the Brotherhood could assemble the leading men of the 19 denominations in which it is found in a sort of national congress to discuss the situation.

Third. The internal matters of the chapters received due attention and encouraging reports were heard from every side. The two rules of prayer and service were again acknowledged as the basis for united action. Chapters were urged to pray, not only for unconverted men, but especially for their own pastors that men might be reached through the power of the preacher. The discussion of the Rule of Service was more valuable than ever. It was clearly shown that the great problem of all now to be solved by the churches of our country is, What shall the men of our churches do and how shall they do it? It was again pointed out that if the men who so largely control the wealth of the churches could be set on fire with the zeal for God's house many other problems would at once be solved. The rule of service in its broadest interpretation is respectfully submitted to pastors as quite likely to develop the desired zeal.

Fourth. Pastors of these denominations and of the churches generally were requested to inform themselves upon Brotherhood work by writing to the Rev. C. E. Wyckoff, Irvington, N. J., who mails literature upon application.

The National Christian Association is the title of an incorporated association which was organized in the city of Pittsburg, Pa., in 1868, by representatives of seventeen orthodox denominations. It holds that faith in Christ is the sole ground of acceptance with God; and that grace received by faith is the sole power of regeneration. It believes, moreover, that Satan is the god of this world and the god of all false religions; and that the lodge system denies Christ and worships Satan. Its object is to keep the membership of the churches out of secret organizations, for these among other reasons: 1. Because they are declared to be organized on a basis so necessarily broad as to exclude the idea of Christ as the world's only Redeemer; 2. Because they substitute in their claims and in the minds of many of their membership, the secret society of the Christian church; 3. Because of the relation of the obligation of these secret orders to the oaths and decisions of courts. The association has its principal place of business at 221 West Madison St., Chicago.

The recent meeting of the Baptist Congress in Buffalo was not marked by the interest which has characterized some previous sessions, and notably those held in Chicago a year ago. The topics discussed, while important in and of themselves, and involving in some instances the consideration of fundamental truths, were not of a nature to awaken popular enthusiasm, or arouse emphatically expressed differences of opinion. While the views set forth might be regarded in some quarters as "advanced," there was such general unanimity as to make the majority of sessions almost tame. The Baptists of Buffalo for some reason did not feel attracted to the congress in any great numbers, and as there was a small attendance from outside the city the congregations were in marked contrast with those of Chicago. We do not sympathize with the opinion that the congress has performed its mission and might well be allowed to rest under its monument dedicated to past services. So long as there are different views of doctrine and pratice held in the denomination by men equally spiritual, scholarly and conscientious, there is reason for the maintenance of a platform for the discussion of these views, for the elimination of discord and the search for the truth. The small attendance is not, as will be argued doubtless by some persons, due to the approaching collapse of the Baptist Congress idea, but to a failure to give proper publicity to its meetings, to too rigid cutting out of popular subjects, and the failure to provide subjects upon which there may be the expression of conscientiously divergent views.—The Standard.

The missionary committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church has just held its annual meeting in Providence, R. I. The report of the treasurer showed that the receipts for both Home and Foreign Missions, from all sources, had been $1,181,789.43, and the disbursements $1,196,802.61. The appropriations to Foreign Missions had amounted to $626,201.90; to Home Missions, including "domestic," $447,615.21. The incidental expenses, including $21,917,85 paid as interest, amounted to $59,377.62; office expenses, $10,968.94, Publication Fund, $22,395.54; salaries of missionary bishops and secretaries, $30,243.40. There had been an increase in the contributions amounting to $49,848.-

66. The indebtedness at the close of the year, November 1, was $201,156.06. But this has since been reduced to less than $20,000, and it is expected that this balance will be provided for before December 1. The contributions of some of the states are as follows: Ohio, $97,765.74; Indiana, $51,-498.85: West Virginia, $9,320.56.—Journal and Messenger.

Special Help for the Sunday-school Teacher.

Among many other problems the Council of Seventy, working through the American Institute of Sacred Literature, is considering that of the needs of the Sunday-school teacher. Within a year several plans will be announced, all of which depend upon the willingness of the teacher to become himself a pupil under competent instruction. One of these plans is now ready, namely, a Correspondence Course in the Gospel of John. (The International Lessons are upon this Gospel from January to July, 1899.) The work will be conducted by a skilled instructor by means of weekly or fortnightly recitations, returned with corrections to the student. Only the most necessary books are required for the study—a Bible, a small commentary and a series of inductive studies. To those teachers who desire it the instructor will also give some special hints concerning methods of class work. The fee for tuition is as small as consistent with the work of an individual instructor. Every teacher and every Sunday school superintendent should inform himself fully concerning this plan. Such information may be secured by addressing the American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill.

Current Religious Thought

In discussing the "Task of the Modern Jew," in the Menorah, the Rev. Samuel Schulman says:

The task of the modern Jew, therefore, is to identify himself with the forces which make for better and a purer humanity. To whom, if not to him, ought any appeal for more social justice come with force? For his religion demands it of him, and he, least of all, if consistent, ought to shrink from the examination and conscientious study of every criticism that is made upon the absence of righteousness, upon the presence of undeserved suffering, upon the crying need in all civilization. Yes, the practicability of every religion will, in the future, be tested by the amount of encouragement it gives to its professors to solve the all-overshadowing problem of how to bring more justice and love between the classes of the human society, and judging from the past, judging from the feeling of responsibility that has been inculcated in every Jew for his brother, judging from the magnificent institutions of benevolence which Judaism has already called into life, the modern Jew is well prepared and educated to enter this field of work, and in co-operation with the noble men and women who are in the vanguard of all the churches, to vindicate the immortal truth and practical righteousness of his religion.

Prof. Clyde W. Votaw, Ph.D., of the University of Chicago, has an interesting article in a recent number of the independent from which we reprint the following introductory paragragphs:

The passing of religious denominationalism is no longer a matter of faith only. If the division of Christians into many sects, large and small, was the inevitable consequence of the Protestant Reformation, it has at any rate become clear that such division cannot continue. For all branches of Christianity are in essence Christian. The lines of seperation are, therefore, drawn upon things which are not essential. And it is the obvious duty of those who profess the Christian religion to subordinate unessentials in which they may not agree, in order that they may unite in the essentials upon which they do agree, for the building up of God's kingdom among men. We have come slowly and stubbornly to the realization that this is our duty, but now we know it. And the condemnation and extinction of denominationalism is sure.

Christendom is divided upon three main lines; government, worship and theology.

The several types of church government are the counterparts of the several types of political government which history has produced. From rigid monarchial government to thoroughgoing democracy is a long journey, but at each of the many stages along the way certain braches of the Christian brotherhood have taken up their stations; so that the Christian army is deployed in companies from one end of the route to the other.

Now the political ideal of mankind is government of, by and for the people—pure democracy, universal suffrage. Some nations are in process of realizing this ideal. Its counterpart in religious government is independence and self-management of the individual churches by the suffrage of the individual members. As political government becomes ever more democratic the world over, so ecclesiastical government passes increasingly into the hands of the church members as a whole. The future unquestionably has in store for us the ultimate triumph of true democracy, both in politics and religion. This means the extinction of every kind of church government which is not of, by and for the individual Christians. This will not bring exact uniformity, for popular government is capable of variation in method. But denominationalism, so far as it rests on different systems of government, will be done away with. The twentieth century will see wonderful advancement toward the popular control in state and church.

The following from Rev. John W. Chadwick in the Treasury for December is worthy of the most considerate attention, bearing as it does upon the present alarming manifestation of indifference toward public worship in the churches:

I do not believe that a great many people of intelligence and culture who are withdrawing in these times from the public ministration of religion are taking a line that will be altogether satisfactory to them as time goes on. Their own religious thought and feeling are enriched by many beautiful survivals of their early training—the faiths and hopes their parents cherished tenderly. It will be different with their children, who have been subjected to no such training, who have had no such inheritance. For them the earth and sky will still be beautiful, and daily work will have its noble stress, and love will shed its natural splendor on their hearts. But there will be no uplifts for them of heart and will to the supernal glory which is beyond the farthest stars, no thrill to the great names which heretofore have overtopped all others in the march of time. Or, what is likelier, discovering in themselves some void which is not filled by business or literature or art or social gayety or household cheer, they will illustrate that law of rhythm of reaction, of which Mr. Spencer makes so much, and react from their negation in religion to something very positive—say, the Roman Catholic Church. The religious indifference of cultivated people is a kind of spiritual breeding tank to furnish converts to that or some other equally irrational system of belief. Their children are as soft as putty in the hands of the first man who comes along with any strenuous conviction or colossal fad.

Ministerial Relief Fund Needed.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I have seen several notices of Dr. J. B. Crane's death. It pains me to hear of his death, for in 1888 my first year's ministry after having finished my course of study in the Kentucky Bible College, I was associated with him at Pierce City, Mo., and he was so much help to me. He gave me advice that I expect to heed through life, and I have books in my library purchased at his suggestion. I looked upon him as a man of rare learning and ability. He was a physician, preacher, author and poet in one. He graduated with Garfield and taught him and his wife French. Now what I want to say is this, that notwithstanding ths above, he told me that as a preacher he was a failure. That he could preach to the supreme satisfaction of all who heard him, but he could not get any place to preach. And when I knew him he was in abject poverty, sleeping on the floor and his great library, such as a close student would and could select in a long lifetime, had just been sold under the hammer for almost nothing, and it was only by his son and son-in-law working at the limekiln that they were enabled to buy bedsteads and get up off the floor. When such a thing is possible, there is something wrong. Now it is too late to assist Dr. Crane any, but we have many living elderly ministers who are English, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, German, French and especially Bible scholars, and good preachers who are upon the shelf because it may be that their hair is prematurely gray. We have what we call a ministerial relief fund and it is difficult to raise money for the same. Many of our elderly ministers are failing financially and if nothing is done will finally be subjects of the relief fund, are now abundantly able physically, mentally and spiritually to sustain themselves and possibly as long as they live, or lay up sufficient while they are able to keep them when they fail, provided they can get places to preach. The relief fund is indispensably necessary when they are not able to help themselves, but so long as they are able and want to help themselves, let's give them an opportunity. Their preaching may not be so full of zeal to excite people into the church who may be just as easily excited out, but their work, what they do, is broad, deep and permanent. Let's help the living, not wait till they are dead and laud them.

L. SWINDLE.

Glendora, Cal., Dec. 1, 1898.

The Cause at Lawrence, Kansas.

I have been in this beautiful university town a few days, assisting Bro. Charles M. Sharpe in a meeting. There have been so far about twenty additions to the church, mostly by confession. Bro. Sharpe is six months into the second term of service with the congregation, having been recalled to the pastorate from Illinois. He is a brilliant preacher, scholarly, chaste and effective. He graduated in June '97 from the university here, receiving his Master's degree, and is most highly commended by all the faculty and known by many of the students, who hear him with delight and profit. He has a large Bible class in Sunday-school, composed, for the most part, of university students, and just now he is taking them through a course of studies in the life of Christ.

I have had the pleasure of leading the chapel exercises at the university on two occasions. Here is a great school with 1,100 pupils enrolled. Here is where we ought to have a large and influential church. The possibilities of influencing a large number of students and indoctrinating them with a pure faith are great. We ought, by all means, to have a Bible Chair in connection with the university. The chancellor and faculty would favor such a movement. There is enough wealth among the Disciples of Christ in Kansas to establish a chair. Who will be the first to move in this matter. The church here numbers about 250 and has a fairly good building free from debt. The brethren are not rich, but are making an heroic effort to support Bro. Sharpe, who is generously laboring for much less than he is worth. It is his desire to make this the work of his life. I am just in from the union Thanksgiving services held in the Presbyterian Church. Bro. Sharpe preached the sermon, which was one of the best I ever heard on a similar occasion. It was unique. He is abundantly able to represent us among these cultured people. Upon him and the church I pray the continud blessings of heaven. WALTER SCOTT PRIEST.

Lawrence, Kan., Thanksgiving Day.

—Christianity is the only religion that abounds in song. Atheism is songless; Agnosticism has nothing to sing about; the various forms of idolatry are not tuneful; but Judaism said, "Oh, come, let us sing unto the Lord;" and when Christ came the angels greeted his birth with a song, and since then Christian song has gained in fullness and strength of voice with each passing century.—The Advance.

Our Budget.

—Beautiful thoughts,

—Beautiful things,

—Beautiful songs,

—Beautiful deeds,

—These Christmas times.

—Remember Ministerial Relief Fund next Sunday.

—Our next issue will be our Christmas number.

—The reports from the field show that many successful protracted meetings are being held.

—The proposition to add at least 100,000 new members to the Church of Christ this year is being generally and heartily endorsed by both pastors and evangelists.

—At present there is every indication of an awakening of the Churches of Christ in the United States on missionary work this year that will make them one of the most active missionary people in the land.

—The program for the week of prayer appears in this paper.

—It is said that "not half a million copies of the Scriptures are yet in the hands of the twelve million of Mexicans." This shows to what extent the Roman Catholic priests are interested in circulating the Bible among their own people.

—The Missionary Voice for December and January rings with the jubilee spirit. Send for it and get a host of facts on Foreign Mission work.

—For a report of the 24th annual national convention of the C. W. B. M. see Missionary Tidings for December with its sixty pages of closely printed items. It is a veritable magazine of missionary information.

—We observe that some papers continue to write "Puerto Rico." Now that we have undertaken to Americanize that island, let all begin to write just plain Porto Rico. It is now an American island, you know.

—The American Home Missionary for November contains the minutes of the 49th annual convention of the American Christian Missionary Society, a copy of which every Disciple will of course have use for during the current year. Address B. L. Smith, Cincinnati, for a copy.

—The Practical Christian, Houston, Texas, is lengthening its cords and strengthening its stakes. The issue for December was a newsy one and the edition a large one.

—Sometime ago we received an unsigned report of a convention held by the Christian Churches of Harrison County, Iowa, at Mondamin, Sept. 16th, which we of course could not publish. We have since been given the name of the writer, but the report is now so far past the things related that it would not have the same interest it would have had when written, if we should publish it. It is but just to say that it is an excellent report of an excellent convention, and we regret that it could not have been published at the time. The addresses given are especially commended for their wisdom and practical value. All enjoyed the convention and went away with enlarged ideas of church work. They were also encouraged with the outlook of the cause in Harrison County for future work and usefulness.

—At a recent meeting of the City Mission Board of this city, having been promised aid from the American Christian Missionary Society, it was decided to employ an evangelist for this city. The question of city evangelization is one of the great questions of the day and one in which our home society is interesting itself as rapidly and extensively as its funds will permit. The churches of this city feel that by the aid of the Home Board an evangelist can be sustained in this city and the time for such a move has certainly come. St. Louis is an immense mission field of itself and the entire time of many evangelists could be constantly used if the means were at hand to support them, but more than one in the field at present will be impossible. The City Mission Board is now on the lookout for a suitable man and as soon as he can be found will be put in commission.

—The recent excellent musical entertainment held in the new Y. M. C. A. building, this city, for the benefit of the Christian Orphans' Home, we have learned netted about $200. This was appreciated as at this season of the year especially the Home is in great need for funds. And now that we have named it perhaps there are many who would like to remember this Home with a generous Christmas gift. If so it will be in order and greatly please the board. You can send the gift at any time to Mrs. O. C. Shedd, 4362 Pine Street.

—T. P. Haley, an excellent likeness of whom appears on our first page, this week, belongs to the "Old Guard" of Missouri. He is one of the strong men around whom our Missouri forces have rallied for more than a generation. And he is yet a young man, as his picture shows in spite of a few gray hairs. It would be difficult to overestimate the indebtedness of the Missouri brotherhood to him. Before the days of railroads, he traveled all over the state, preaching in courthouses, schoolhouses, rude church buildings and groves, baptizing believers and leaving communities with the principles of the Reformation. He is widely known outside of Missouri also, being a prominent actor in our national conventions. He has not written much outside of his work, "The Dawn of the Reformation in Missouri," except articles for our newspapers and quarterlies. He is a speaker rather than a writer, and before an audience he is a "master of assemblies." He lost his first wife, who was a sister of Bro. McGarvey, several years ago, and has since married a cultivated Christian woman, with whom he is living very happily in Kansas City, Mo., where he ministers to one of the weaker churches of that city. He is a member of the State Board of Charities, to which subject he has given much attention. Born in Fayette Co., Ky., in 1832, he is now in the 66th year of his age, but his mind was never more active nor more open to truth. Long may he be spared to the cause he has served so well.

—Our hearts are broken. Our dear little Florence has been suddenly taken from us. She died from scarlet fever Wednesday, Dec. 7, at 5 P. M. She was nearly nine years old, and was a member of the church. We wish the prayers of all that we may become reconciled. G. K. BERRY AND IDA V. BERRY.
Ionia, Mich., Dec. 9, 1898.

The foregoing announcement will call out the sympathy of a large circle of friends. Our brother and sister are indeed called upon to pass through the deep waters, but He who stilled the waves of Galilee will be with them, and his tender voice will still the tumult of their hearts and give them peace. Our sincerest condolence is tendered to our bereaved brother and sister in the shadows of this great affliction. "God is love."

—So far as we can learn from the Roman Catholic journals that reach our table the authorities of that great ecclesiasticism are terribly worried about the prospect of Protestant missionaries in the West Indies and Philippine islands and are trying to prevent them by very singular arguments—chiefly that the inhabitants of these islands are satisfied with their religion and the effort on the part of Protestants will be a futile waste of time and money It strikes us that if the Roman Catholic authorities are so confident of the religious convictions of their people in these islands they would not fear the influence of Protestant missionaries among them; and as to the waste of Protestant time and money—well, why should Roman Catholics grieve over such a thing as this any way?

—The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the church at Tuxedo, Mo., Luther Moore pastor, have launched a home paper called, "The Tuxedo Church Visitor." It is a neatly printed, lively edited monthly, creditable, and we trust will be useful to all interested parties.

—A missionary institute is being held this week under the auspices of the Butler Bible College, in the Christian church at Irvington, Ind., and is conducted by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the Board of Church Extension of the American Christian Missionary Society. An excellent program has been arranged, a copy of which is before us, consisting of addresses by such speakers as G. W. Muckley, Mrs. Louise Kelly, W. M. Forrest, Lois A. White, Mrs. A. M. Atkinson, Mrs. Mattie Pounds and Mrs. Helen E. Moses. Each address is followed by a question period to draw out what information the speaker may have held in reserve. It is a good idea to have these missionary institutes in connection with our institutions of learning.

—A note from Bro. E. B. Widger, who recently resigned as pastor of the church at Grand Rapids, Mich., says that the paragraph which we clipped from the Detroit paper and published in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, concerning his resignation, does him and the church at Grand Rapids an injustice. He says: "I have resigned as pastor, but I did this to my official board almost three months ago, and on Nov. 27th announced same to the congregation. There is the very best of feeling between myself and the church. I did not 'score' or 'denounce' my church. There was not one word of discussion. There is but one reason for my resignation. I felt that with our present location, church building and equipment for church work, we have not done and cannot do the work we ought to do in in a city." We are glad to publish this correction from Bro. Widger. We learned a good while ago that newspaper reports are not always reliable, and so intimated in clipping this item from the Detroit paper. We are glad to have given the pastor this opportunity of correcting the statements of the secular press.

—According to the Christian College Chronicle for November, Christian College is prospering in a way that should make its friends and the friends of education throughout the state rejoice. And what is being said of this institution at Columdia, Mo., by the secular and religious press of the state we are sure maketh glad the hearts of those upon whom the best interests of this college rest most heavily.

—The following pargraph clipped from the Bible Society Record of recent date is of special interest as a missionary outlook in the Philippine Islands, as against the freqent vehement utterances of Catholic bishops in the United States concerning the futility of Protestant missionary efforts in those islands:

From a private letter written at Manila, September 19, 1898, we are permitted to make the following extracts: "I have had sufficient time to feel the pulse and ascertain the temperature of the people here. Make known to the missionary world that the harvest is ripe, and the laborers few. While the people are thoroughly disgusted with a corrupt priesthood, they are not averse to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. There is a wonderful opening for missionaries willing to teach English. That work can be made self-supporting from the start.

—A general call has been issued for a National Christian Citizenship Convention to be held at the First Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., this week. The object of this convention is to consider the nation's obligations to the newly acquired territories and certain moral reform measures of our own country likely to come before the present congressional session. Men eminent in reform movements are on the program to address this convention on the various measures to come up for discussion and their speeches and actions as an expression of the Christian sentiment of the land will not likely fail of good influence upon our present Congress.

—We acknowledge the receipt of a new and beautiful sacred solo, published by J. Fisher & Bro., 7 Bible House, New York, entitled "The New-born King."

Our subscription department is in receipt of a letter from Isaac Kello. If he will give us his post office address we will be better able to answer his communication.

—Mrs. Harmon A. Easton says she always reads Bible-school, Endeavor and Hour of Prayer departments in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST whether she attends each service or not.

—The compilation of the minutes of the various missionary activities of the Churches of Christ in Montana in convention at Bozeman in September last makes a magazine of over 80 pages and contains information of great value to every Disciple in the West and of our entire brotherhood. This neatly printed magazine of information is dedicated to the C. W. B. M. and their auxiliaries through which the work in Montana was instituted and has since been so largely sustained. A copy of these minutes may be had by addressing a card to Edward Scharnikow, Rec. Sec., Deer Lodge, Mont.

—The Catholic News, New York, last week contained an editorial on "Does the Catholic Faith Impair a Nation's Vitality?" in which the editor seeks to dissipate the strength of the historic argument against Romanism based on the decay of the Latin nations. The editor's negative argument is very adroitly expressed but, as we think, misses entirely the real point. The decay of the Latin nations observed by Protestants, et al., is merely an incidental phase of the subject. The real argument of Protestantism against Roman Catholicism, if the Catholic News wishes to put it in that way, is the failure of Roman Catholicism to energize its people with spiritual life and to stimulate them to spiritual activities, and hence their decaying condition.

—On Sunday, Dec. 2nd, the church at Hannibal, Mo., appropriately observed its sixtieth anniversary. The large auditorium was filled to overflowing and the services were deeply interesting and impressive. Upon the rostrum were seated fourteen of the pioneer members of the church, whose ages aggregate 929 years, as follows: Mrs. Weister, 80; Mrs. Norris, 74; Mrs. Fenner, 80; Mrs. Leonard, 66; Mr. and Mrs. Marseilles, 78 and 68 respectively; Mrs. Susan Morgan, 78; Mrs. Sarah Martin, 67; Mrs. Kate Bunch, 64; Mrs. Moore, 75; Mrs. Robinson, 63. The pastor read a brief history of the church which was published in full in the Hannibal Morning Journal, Dec. 3rd. The report is an interesting document, containing many interesting historic dates and reminiscences.

—The Orphan School Record, Fulton, Mo., continues its high standing as a college journal. It is edited on a plane of literature that would do credit to schools of much louder pretentions.

—Do not forget that next Sunday is the appointed day by the General Convention at Chattanooga for an offering for the Ministerial Relief Fund. The Secretary, D. R. Lucas, and others have shown the great need for immediate funds to keep those dependent on this fund from suffering during the present winter. Offerings should be made in all the churches on this day for this ministry and forwarded without delay to Howard Cale, 120 East Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

—If we mistake not the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is often accused of being on the fence on the critical issues of the day, while some have gone so far as to say it is in sympathy with the higher critics.—Register-Review.

We infer from the foregoing that the R. R. has mastered all the questions of higher criticism and is ready to pronounce final judgment concerning them. This is certainly an enviable position to occupy, but the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is compelled to confess that there are several things within the realm of biblical criticism concerning which we are waiting for more light before reaching a final conclusion None of these, however, affect the inspiration or authority of the Scriptures, or the divinity and Lordship of Jesus Christ. It must be lovely, however, to know everything without waiting for further facts.

—As we go to press a card from F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, Ohio, announces the receipt of $3,500 for Foreign Missions on the Annuity plan. We are glad to see money being thus consecrated to perpetual use in the Lord's work.

—F. G. Tyrrell, of this city, is to address the St. Louis Prohibition Union of Christian Men at the Compton Heights Christian Church, on Tuesday night of this week, in the interest of a stronger sentiment against the saloon, a better enforcement of present prohibition laws and a higher standard of citizenship in our nation. This seems like a sensible thing for prohibitionists to do under present conditions. A rigid enforcement of present prohibitory laws would go a long way toward the reduction of the saloon in the land.

—Lord Kitchener's request of the British people for a half million dollars to found a college at Khartum is not least among the surprising things of this surprising age of the world. Who would have thought of a demand or even of a prospective use for a college in the heart of Africa at this time? Surely are the deserts beginning to blossom and the waste places of the earth to bring forth fruit. A college in Central Africa under the control of Axglo-Saxon people means a new history for that old continent, and if followed up with proper missionary work it means new territory for the Master's kingdom.

PERSONAL MENTION.

F. A. Sheetz is in a meeting at Casey, Ia.

Sherman Hill is the newly elected pastor at Hampton, Ia.

Geo. E. Platt is the successor of J. A. Seaton at Marion, Ia.

B. D. Clark, of Larimore, Ia., has a new house ready for dedication on Dec. 25th.

Mrs. W. B. Craig is in Denver, Col., where she will spend part of the winter.

Geo. A. Jewett, one of the pillars of Des Moines Central Church has once more gone to Europe on a business trip.

W. F. Turner, of La Belle, Mo., has accepted a call from the church at Joplin, Mo., to begin Jan. 1st, 1899.

Prof. Ed Amherst Ott, of Drake University, is on the Pacific Coast delivering lectures. He will be at his post in January.

A. Clark, president of Add-Ran Christian University, has been called to succeed F. N. Calvin in the church at Waco, Texas.

We are informed that R. Watson, Salem, Mo., will be an applicant for the chaplaincy of the State Senate at the ensuing term.

J. G. M. Luttenberger, who was present at the preachers' meeting, this city, last Monday, reports the church at Dorchester in a prosperous state.

Henry F. Davis was present at the preachers' meeting in this office on last Monday. He is a member of this association, but owing to his field work is not often present.

C. E. Smith has closed his work in Indiana County, Pa., and is now a student of Bethany College. The report of his work in the county named shows a fruitful ministry.

Ex-president Giltner, late of Eminence College, Kentucky, recently preached "two able sermons" to the church in Grant Ciy, Mo., having been called to that city on business.

S. S. Lappin, for more than two years pastor at Paxton, Ill., has resigned to accept the work at LaFayette, Ind. The church at Paxton regret to see the change.

F. N. Calvin who recently began a specal work in Milwaukee, Wis., writes that the work is opening up encouragingly. His address is 235 Hanover St.

H. A. Easton who is assisting in a protracted meeting in Savannah, Ga., desires to correspond with any paator or evangelist desiring a singer, in which work he is well and favorably known.

S. M. Martin has been in a protracted meeting with M. M. Davis at Central Christian Church, Dallas, Tex., for five weeks with about 30 additions to date.

Clergyman's Statement

Nerve Strength Gained by Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

BRIGHTON, IOWA.—Rev. Bernard M. Shulick of this place, owing to weakness of the nerves, was for a time unable to attend to his duties. He makes this statement: "I have suffered for a long time from weak nerves. After I had taken a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla I became quite well again. The weakness of the nerves has now wholly disappeared and I am able to attend to my duties again. I am therefore grateful to Hood's Sarsaparilla and I recommend it to everyone who suffers from weak nerves."

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Dr. W. Frank Ross recently lectured on "Religious Observations in Foreign Lands," to a thousand people in the Tabernacle at Decatur, Ill. He preached in Matton, Ill., last Sunday.

B. L. Kline, of Dallas, Ia., reports the new church house nearing completion. It will cost $1,600 and be dedicated by A. M. Haggard, acting Dean of the Bible College, Drake University.

Leanard G. Thompson, of Denver, has been engaged as state evangelist in Colorado. A better selection could not have been made. His address is 524, 38th Avenue, Denver, Colo.

G. A. Hoffmann, of Columbia, Mo., paid his respects to this office on last Monday. He was present at the preachers' meeting. He reports the school of Columbia as in a very prosperous state and the Register-Review outlook exceedingly bright.

J. E. Lynn, pastor of the church at Springfield, Ill., recently gave a banquet to the young men of the church, the occasion being the 28th anniversary of his birthday. It is said Bro. Lynn has the honor of being the youngest pastor in Springfield. About 60 men were present at the banquet and the time was occupied in a most delightful way.

Dr. W. A. Belding, of Troy N. Y., while enroute to South Gardiner, Maine, to hold a series of meetings, halted with us at our home one day and night and preached an excellent sermon for us. He is 82 years old, well preserved and a companionable brother. During sixty-odd years devoted to ministerial work he has immersed with his own hands between eleven and twelve thousand persons.—New England Messenger.

T. R. Hodkinson, of Clarksville, Iowa, who has been preaching and lecturing in Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Colorado, Illinois and Wisconsin, desires now to locate with some church as pastor, or he would hold a few more church institutes on our principles if desired. He can furnish the highest testimonials, and his prices are moderate. Address him as above.

Dr. W. T. Moore, we regret to learn, is confined to his bed with a temporary illness. He attended and participated in the Moberly Educational Conference. We learn through him that Christian College is on such a boom that its trustees are planning to build a large and modern style building to accommodate its increasing patronrge. Mrs. Moore's ambition is to make it the Wellesley of the West. By the way, we have heard it hinted at that Sedalia has its eye on this institution, but Columbia would hardly permit its removal, we imagine.

CHANGES.

J. W. Taylor, Lexington, Ky., to Benton Harbor, Mich.

F. W. Collins, Kingsley to Kellogg, Ia.

A. M. Haggard, Oskaloosa to University Place, Des Moines, Ia.

H. L. Robinger, Shoun's Cross Roads, Tenn., to Mabel, N. C.

Z. E. Bates, Allegheny to Beaver, Pa.

Cincinnati News.

On Monday, Dec. 5th, the tenth Ohio district monthly meeting was held in Central Christian Church, Cincinnati. Luncheon was served by the sisters of the church, which was also turned into a reception to the new preachers and their wives who have recently come to la or among us. These are A. W. Taylor, of the new church at Norwood; J. A. Pine, successor of Vernon Stauffer, of Eastern Ave.; W. O. Thomas, of the new church at Lockland, and Allan Wilson, our evangelist for the district.

The dinner was a joyful occasion, with its speeches and songs. About 150 present; A. M. Harvuot, toastmaster. J. A. Pine responded to "Why I Came to Cincinnati;" A. W. Taylor, "The Young Preacher;" Allen Wilson, "An Evangelist's View of the City's Needs;" A. McLean, "The Preachers' Wives;" J. A. Lord, "Preparation for the Convention in '99." While our people are already well organized for the physical care of all who come to the convention, the emphasis put upon the need of "spiritual preparation" on the part of the Cincinnati churches by Bro. Lord, met a hearty response. The spiritual activity of Cincinnati was never so great as it is to-day. We have planned this year the largest work ever yet undertaken. The coming of the Jubilee Convention is a great stimulus to us.

After dinner the C. W. B. M. Auxiliaries went into session to hear reports and plans, and to listen to an address by Sister Helen E. Moses. The tenth district board met in another room. Bro. Allen Wilson reported 32 additions in his meeting at Norwood. He continues there one more week. Attendance as large as the house will hold; at times people turned away. Every house in the suburb visited, and the people stirred up on religious matters. He goes to Walnut Hills Dec. 12th, to begin a meeting with Bro. Dutcher. The people at Walnut Hills are prepared for a meeting Bro. Dutcher has been using the question box of late with surprising interest.

Bro. A. W. Taylor has been visiting Madisonville on Sunday afternoons for a month, and the brethren, a small church, are anxious to begin a meeting. We expect Bro. Wilson to gather a good harvest there as soon as he is through at Walnut Hills.

A new house was dedicated at Central Fairmount, Nov. 20th. The district board is expecting to furnish them a regular pastor this month.

Bro. Pine, of Eastern Ave., has organized a Young Men's League of 18 members, who will assist him in bringing others to Christ. Last Sunday three young men made the good confession at Richmond St. Church, and Bro. Green will organize a Young Men's League this week, which will be a great help to him in seeking other young men for Christ.

An impressive memorial service was held in the Richmond St. Church, Nov. 20th, a tribute to the memory of Dr. H. N. Biddle, the fallen African missionary hero, who went out from this church. The house was filled with his friends and relatives. The speakers were Rev. J. S. Patton, an uncle and Baptist minister; Dr. P. T. Kilgour, his Sunday-school superintendent and medical college professor; Francis M. Biddle, his older brother, pastor of the Christian Church at Confluence, Pa.; A. McLean and Justin N. Green.

The Central Christian Church, with Bro. Harvuot as leader, is doing fine work in the city. They are running two mission schools, and are planning now for a protracted meeting to begin as soon as arrangements can be completed.

At Bellevue, just across the river, Bro. P. A. Cave, of Hagerstown, Md., is holding a meeting for Bro. Harding. Six additions to date. Bro. Seaman just closed a meeting at his church, Fourth St., Covington, with 30 additions. Bro. Geo. Miller, of the First Church, Covington, will begin a meeting January 15th, Bro. Isaac Selby preaching.

Bro. J. A. Erwin has just returned from Porto Rico. He reports a property boom there, and doubts the expediency of immediate investment. Brethren S. M. Cooper and F. M. Rains, just returned from Havana, Cuba, report the harvest ripe there for Christian reapers. The erstwhile Catholics of that country are convinced that there is a better religion than they have, and they are anxious for Americans to bring it to them.

By far the most interesting religious exercise we have had in Cincinnati for a long time was a series of lectures at the Central Christian Church by Isaac Selby, culminating in a debate with a notable infidel. Bro. Selby first lectured at Bro. Miller's church in Covington. The freethought people went to hear him. They were stirred up and talked to Bro. Miller about a debate. When Bro. Selby lectured in Cincinnati they came to hear him in greater numbers and plied him with questions. In the meantime they had secured the consent of Mr. C. Elton Blanchard, a freethought lecturer, and the editor of Current Thought, of Cleveland, to meet him. The arrangements were completed and the debate was held in the Auditorium, Monday and Tuesday evenings, Nov. 28th and 29th, Mr. Selby affirming that "Christianity is the Religion of Humanity," and Mr. Blanchard affirming that "Evolution is the True Doctrine of the Origin of Man and Other Forms of Life." To make a long and interesting story short, the Ohio Liberal League, for that is the society that challenged us, are a forlorn set of men, while the Christians who heard the debate, are the happiest people in Cincinnati. Bro. Miller, the chairman of our committe, has letters from the League secretary, acknowledging their discomfiture, saying their man disappointed them through lack of ability. They say that they want another meeting, with some other man to represent them. On the first evening of the debate about one-third of the audience were freethinkers; the second evening about one-sixth accounted for their side.

Let me say to the Christian brotherhood, that we ought to keep Bro. Selby in this country four or five years. He is pre-eminently fitted, both by nature and training, to show up the weakness of infidelity and the strength of Christianity. Having first been an honest infidel, spending ten years in its study and seven of activity in its defense, he understands that side of the question thoroughly. Among his many debates as an infidel he met a Christian preacher, in Australia, Bro. M. W. Green, who sowed the seeds of discontent with infidelity in his heart, from which he never recovered. He was afterwards led to a restudy of Christian evidences from the standpoint of the Disciples of Christ and is now an original, unique and powerful defender of the faith once for all delivered unto the saints. His artless, Christian manner and genuineness captures at once the hearts of his hearers. His work will always and everywhere do good. His time till next February is taken up. It is probable that he will lecture at a few points in Texas during February and March. Brethren in Texas, or other states wishing more particulars concerning his lectures and terms should write me at 119 West 6th St., Cincinnati, O.

J. H. FILLMORE.

The Latter-day Saints.

Many people coming to Salt Lake City for the first time are conscious of a feeling of surprise to find the Mormons looking, acting, speaking and dressing like ordinary mortals. This is due to the exaggerated ideas formed by us of those of whom we have heard much but seen nothing. As a matter of fact they differ in nothing from the classes and nationalities they represent. It is not uncommon to see on the streets men and women who look as though they had just stepped from one of Dickens' novels. I doubt not that it would be possible to find garments in this city still in use that date back to at least the last days of the styles in vogue in Dickens' time, and that were brought across the mountains and plains in the carts that were pushed by the hands of the women that wear them. Among them can be found as personable men and as beautiful women as can be found anywhere. They are the product of the recuperative power of the Anglo-Saxon races under favorable conditions. It is the sign of hope for the future. Civilization will refine the people, and once refined, they will revise the coarsness out of their creed. There are just three alternatives for a people who live in the midst of civilization and hold to tenets and indulge in practices that are obnoxious to that civilization, viz., reformation, emigration, extermination. A wise people will choose the first, and all the more certainly when revelations to meet the demands of every emergency can be had for the asking. Experience is a great teacher, and with the past for a key the future is not difficult to read.

The orders of the Mormon Church are apostles, presidents and patriarchs, high councils, seventies and lesser priests, teachers and deacons. The elders are the missionaries who compass the earth after converts. In theory they go without script or purse; in fact they get more than the average salary for such work of ministers of other churches, as the following facts and figures will show: There are 500 elders who have their headquarters at Chattanooga, Tenn. Through the money order department of that post office alone there is paid to Mormon elders an average of $300 per week, according to the statement made to me by the clerk of that department during the National Convention there. Just a little figuring reveals the fact that those elders who are ostensibly preaching the gospel (?) without money and without price are, as a matter of fact, receiving an average of $312 each which, with free lunch and lodging, isn't bad. This money is not sent by the church, but by relatives. In some cases it is a part of the regular income from the farm, mine or business of the individual; in others it represents the earnings of mothers, wives or sisters, or the proceeds of a dance given for the purpose, in one of the ward meeting houses.

Every city, town, village and community is organized into what is called a Stake of Zion, which is presided over by a stake president and two counselors. Salt Lake City is a stake of Zion. It is divided into twenty four wards. Each ward has a meeting house which is used for religious, social and political purposes. Each ward is presided over by a bishop. From 10 to 12 A. M. the Sunday-school is held in the ward meeting house, each family attending in its own ward, which embraces an area of nine square blocks, each block containing ten acres. At 2 P. M. the whole congregation of Israel is supposed to assemble at the tabernacle where two hours are spent in a service which embraces singing by the choir and talking (preaching) by those moved by the Spirit to do so. The first speaker is usually a returned elder who relates his experiences on the field and closes by adding his "testimuny to the truth of the gawspil." Then two or three of the apostles or presidents follow in long-drawn-out speeches, the substance of which si "great is Mormonism" and the effect of which is to make the people very tired. But they linger to hear the closing anthem by the choir, but for the singing of which but few would attend the tabernacle service. But for the tedious talkers the tabernacle would not begin to hold the people who would go to hear the choir. Such antiquated methods will be abandoned in time, but it will be after the time of the last lingering pioneer.

At 6 P. M. promptly, summer and winter, the Mutual Improvement Association, which answers to the C. E. Society, and of which there is one in each ward, meets in the ward meeting house and engages in exercises which are semi-religious and semi-secular in character. The solo is as apt to be a balad as a hymn. No mass assemblies are ever held in the temple. It is a building for ceremonies alone. In it marriages, baptisms for the dead, endowment ceremonies, etc., are performed.

My next will deal with the present status of polygamy in Utah as brought to light during the recent political campaign. It makes most interesting reading. W. H. BAGBY.

The Value of Small Colleges.

An institution of learning is only valuable as it gives opportunity, develops strength and uses these advantages to bring forth righteous conduct. The school which does not develop a truth-loving, truth-seeking spirit, with purpose of right living, does not fill out the mind of God in education.

An education must stand for the divinity in man—be a feeder and trainer of that inner self. It should bring man into fellowship with his race and make him loyal to his God.

Education must lead individuals or nations toward industry and economy that they may have to distribute, toward honest and justice that the strong may not oppress the weak, toward peace, righteousness and joy in the Holy Spirit that it may be used in the service of Christ.

No questions need be raised about technical, professional or practical education. These will follow. Let man be properly educated and have the spirit of righteousness with liberty to do, and material improvements will as naturally come as perfect fruits fall from a healthy tree.

A rightly educated people will as certainly think and work toward the beautiful and noble, as seeds bring forth after their kind.

To educate in this way does not depend so much upon the large college buildings, the limited or the rich endowment, as upon the men and the women who teach the classes and set the example in conduct. God speaks and acts through his people. "The heavens declare the glory of God," but man shows his life and character. The living teacher is the college power. Men and women through whom God can set forth ideals, inspire hopes and establish noble purposes, make the divinely ordered teachers. These may be found in the district school or in the university; and because small colleges are generally the work of idealists, founded on faith, upheld through self-denial and love, they are likely to have a larger proportion of active Christian teachers than institutions resting chiefly on intellectual force and upon money.

In small colleges the personal association between students and teachers is close and of high value. It gives encouragement, inspires confidence and begets in the young courage to undertake great works.

Students receive at first-hand the benefit of their teachers' experience and wisdom.

The lesser colleges distributed over the country give young people a start. They develop a desire for learning in the hearts of thousands who would otherwise never have aspirations toward higher education.

Except from the location of this college, and the personal work in leading young people to begin its curriculum, more than half of its one hundred and five graduates would never have taken up an educational course. As it is, nearly all of the number are in responsible and honorable places requiring higher education. And within the last three years eleven of these graduates have been students in some one of the great universities. Without the Missouri and the Ohio and other trbutaries there could be no Mississippi. If, instead of forty "little half-equipped colleges," the Disciples had one hundred, they would have material then to start one great university, or to furnish students for Bible colleges at the state universities.

When Bryce made his observations on the American Commonwealth, he found the wide distribution of small colleges to be one of the secrets of our country's greatness.

In Christian colleges students see wicked practices and evil customs abolished. They see frequent victories bearing toward the ideal and become established in a warfare for virtue; and hereby are sown the seeds of moral heroism. With all the blessings that come from great universities—and it is not denied that these are many—they are not strong at the point of establishing individual heroism and Christian ideality. These principles can be implanted in the student easier before he enters the university; hence the necessity for many small institutions.

Of students who turn to Christ during a course of study a much smaller proportion, even of the same age, come from the universities than from the small colleges.

In the universities they find fraternities, footballs and class honors of highest interest. They often meet their first skeptical associates or authors. At the end of their course they go out into the world unconverted, then fall under the temptations of money, ambition or appetite, and their influence to bring the world to Christ is lost.

Small colleges would have saved many of these and their lives would have blessed others. One has only to compare carefully the real Christian work done in half a dozen small institutions, having two hundred students each, with one state school having twelve hundred students, to appreciate the serious mistake of those who think "the day for small colleges" is passed.

Money, machinery and specialists, all, can not do the work of such institutions. These forces help; they give better form; but small colleges have their special function of developing a love of learning, raising ideals and bringing out personal character, which they will continue to do, while Christianity has in her folds independent, self-denying men to conduct them. New York Letter.

Our New York state evangelist, Bro. J. M. Morris, is doing excellent service. He has held a number of meetings since the state convention in September in which more than sixty persons have united with the churches. Among others he has held meetings with the churches at Niagara Falls and Jefferson St., Buffalo. Just now he is in a meeting with the church at Syracuse (E. R. Edwards pastor), with good hope of success. Some of his discourses are illustrated and will no doubt attract large congregations. Some of his illustrated sermons are "The New Creation," "Duty and Destiny," "The Word of God Rightly Divided" and "The Childhood and Manhood of the Church." This matter of illustrating sermons by means of the stereopticon, if wisely used may be very fruitful of good results. If magazines and books and lectures can profitably be illustrated, why not the sacred discourse? This is something about which many preachers might think.

At the twenty-third annual meeting of the Alumni Club of Union Theological Seminary, held at the St. Denis Hotel, the Rev. Samuel McComb, of Rutger's Riverside Presbyterian Church, spoke on "Browning as a Teacher for Our Time." He claimed Browning as the poet pre-eminently of the soul. With him the significance of life does not lie in outward circumstances, but in the inward development of the soul. Modern tendencies of thought combine to belittle the independent worth of man. We have a science which professes to find in the movements of the self-conscious spirit simply concomitants of nervous energy in the brain; a psychology which accounts for a Socrates by disorganized cellular matter, and for a St. Paul by an epileptic fit; a philosophy which while seeming to conserve moral freedom really entangles man in chains of necessity, forged by his past, and makes moral initiative impossible and repentance an absurdity. Browning lifts up his voice in protest in behalf of the soul. God has made it by emptying himself of a portion of his own causal activity, which he delegates to man that it may be used for free self-development. Further, God being thus the ground and cause of all souls, there is also a solid basis for an optimistic view of life. Browning is not like Mr. Hamertin's opitimist who conveniently shuts his eye to the evils of the world. The poet knows and dislikes sin and wrong with unparalleled disgust; but he sees in man's nature a divine endowment, nay, a differentiation of God himself. How, then, is the greatest criminal, Guitteau, a Francesse-tain or an Ottinia, deep buried beneath straits of evil to be viewed? Christ, we say, died for all; yes, for these, too, for he sees deep into the most sinful soul some hidden bud that bids the criminal to a divine order. Sin, however dark, does not exhaust the possibilities of personality. The preachers, who call men sinners, state but half the truth. The other half says they are sons of God, heirs of immortality. Here also Browning is the prophet of our time. Hope is the supreme need of the age. Melancholy, which is the fruit of imperfect knowledge, is also the creature of despair. The poet's message is a trumpet call that nerves all the powers of our being and makes a final surrender to evil impossible. Finally: Browning is the poet of love. No other poet has so glorified and enthroned this principle. It is the end of life, that for which life is given: "The charm o' the prize of beaming love." Nay, it is the life of God.

> "A loving worm within its clod
> Were diviner than a loveless god;
> And his words I will dare to say."

This love has been embodied in Christ. He is at once the measure of man's being and the transcendent manifestation of God.

On Sunday evening Dec. 4th Mr. Samuel Colcord, of this city, gave his lecture, a "Reply to Ingersoll," in the 169th St. Church of the Disciples. In consequence of the extreme inclemency of the weather the audience was small, but deeply interested. Mr. Colcord gave the same lecture at Chickering Hall in the afternoon to a great audience, at which Mr. Ingersoll was present. The lecturer proposes to follow a week behind this notorious infidel all over the country answering his attack on Christianity. He came to New York City from his native Illinois at 26 years of age and on each Sunday afternoon for seven years drew large audiences to hear him lecture on the Claims of Christianity at Chickering Hall. Then in connection with that work he took the pastorate of the Puritan Congregational Church in Brooklyn, but this double duty soon impaired his health and forced him out of the ministry. He has since followed secular pursuits with marked success. Two years ago he visited Waco, Texas, and was induced to reply to a recent attack of Ingersoll on the Christian faith in that city and has been called to repeat it again and again. I have just read the proof-sheets of his lecture, "A Reply to Ingersoll," and am glad to say Mr. Colcord is fully equal to the task. His irony, his pathos, his skillful gathering up of the fruits of Christianity, all interwoven, make a lecture unusually fascinating and irresistible. If he comes your way you should hear him.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas C. Hall, son of the late Dr. John Hall, of this city, and until recently a pastor in Chicago, has just been called to the chair of Christian Ethics in Union Theological Seminary. It is of interest to note that he accepts a professorship in the very institution which his illustrious father could not bear to serve as trustee after the Briggs episode. In Presbyterian theology the father was a conservative; the son is a progressive, hence the latter agrees with Union, the former did not.

A series of special sermons is announced by the same institution, to be delivered on "The Holy Spirit." They are as follows: "The Holy Spirit as the Third Person of the Holy Trinity," Prof. W. N. Clark, Colgate University; "The Work of the Holy Spirit in Man Apart from the Church," Rev. Newman Smyth, New Haven; "Work of the Holy Spirit in Creation and Government of the World," Pres. W. D. Hyde, Bowdoin College; "The Holy Spirit's Advent at Pentecost," Pres. Henry A. Buttz, Drew Seminary; "The Holy Spirit Dwelling in the Church," Dean George Hodges, Cambridge; "The Holy Spirit and Holy Scripture," Rev. S. M. Hamilton, Louisville, Ky.; "Work of the Holy Spirit in Regeneration," Rev. George Alexander, New York; "The Holy Spirit Dwelling in the Christion, Rev. T. T. Munger, New Haven; "Holy Spirit the Guide into all Truth," Rev. W. R. Huntington, New York; "The Sanctifying Work of the Holy Spirit," Rev. Alexander McKenzie, Cambridge. These noted preachers handling such topics surely will cause this body of students to think, and if they will but send them afresh to the study of the New Testament, much good will result. S. T. WILLIS.

That Singular Answer to Prayer.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Nov. 10 contains an account of the suicide of a Mr. Fleiss, at Santa Cruz, Cal., taken from a daily of that city. It seems that R. L. McHatton, pastor of the Christian Church, in a public service prayed for means with which to complete their house of worship. Mr. Fleiss was present and heard the prayer. Soon afterwerd (we are not told how soon) Mr. Fleiss was found dead in his room and the circumstances gave evidence that he had suicided. A check good for $300 in favor of the Christian Church, Santa Cruz, Cal., properly signed and stamped, had been left by the suicide. An accompanying letter left no room to doubt that Mr. Fleiss intended the church named to have the benefit of the check.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST comments that "this was a singular answer to prayer. The answer, however, evidently did not come from heaven." The writer does not yet see the evidence that the answer was not from above. Bro. McHatton had asked God for means to enable them to finish their house of worship. Certainly a worthy subject for prayer. The means came. He who made out the check in the church's favor certainly had, as far as we can see, a perfect right to do so, though not a member of the church and, perhaps, not even a professed Christian. God often answers prayer through men and means. Who believing in God and prayer doubts this? And the men through whom he works are not always his believing children. Bro. McHatton had not, we feel sure, dictated to the Lord how, or through whom the desired means were to come. The fact that the donor did the wicked thing, if accountable, of taking his own life, was no necessary part of the answer to the prayer, and certainly had no place in the thought or petition of Bro. McHatton. The account of the sad incident shows what led the man to end his life. Bro. McHatton's prayer determined the disposition of his money—a very commendable one, surely.

Suppose a man to be taken dangerously ill. His wife prays earnestly for his recovery. A physician, having knowledge of the man's condition and also having heard the woman's prayer, volunteers his service and is allowed to prescribe. His directions are followed. The physician goes back to his office and executes what he has had in mind for some time—puts an end to his own life to get out of trouble into which he has fallen. The sick man speedily recovers. Is the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST prepared to say the woman's prayer was not answered, or that the answer was not from God? O. J. GIST,

Pastor Church of Christ.

Medford, Oregon.

[The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST did not question the perfect right of the church to the money above referred to. By saying that the answer to that prayer did not come from heaven, we simply meant that God did not move that man to suicide. And besides, the character of the letter which the suicide left does not indicate that he was impelled to make the gift from any moral or religious impulse. But it was well that so much of his money went to a church that had needed for it, instead of other probably less deserving and less needy places.—EDITOR.]

Canadian Letter.

The reports of offerings for the Home Mission work indicates some gain over last year. The new house for meeting at Selkirk was dedicated Thanksgiving Day. The meeting at Toronto Junction Church closed on the 13th inst., with the result of 14 confessions. Congregations are increasing at the Cecil St. Church, Toronto, and a goodly number of students from the different colleges are seen at all services. The collections for Home Missions was $37.72. The Toronto mission keeps up interest in all departments.

Marsville and Grand Valley, under the care of Bro. E. A. Cary, are doing well. Bro. Cary is working up a mission at South Luther. The church at Everton has had two confessions lately and is prospering. The Home Mission offering is $45 already and will, it is hoped, reach $50.

Mimosa Church recently held a S.-S. social which was largely attended and netted $25 for the work there. The Everton Church was greatly pleased to welcome back one of her sons last Lord's day, Bro. Robert Stewart and his bride (who is a sister-in-law of Bro. Baker, the former pastor here). Bro. Stewart is one of the seven sons of the church who are preaching the old Jeresalem gospel elsewhere, his father, Bro. David Stewart was preacher at Mimosa for 25 years and without any compensation therefor. Aylmer is still without a pastor. Bro. Harlow, a student, is supplying there. Bro. Sinclair has sent in his resignation to the church at Lobo.

The meeting house at Iona presents a very neat appearance with its new coat of paint and repairs.

Moralists may prate, and doctors prose, and science shout from the housetop, but just so long as the birds sing and the flowers bloom, and a maiden's lips are cherry-red, and a young man's eyes look love, just so long the lads and lassies will kiss—and kiss again.

And where, good men, is the harm if the kissers and kissees be healthy, and true love stands sponsor. It is only when ill-health has blasted the sweet cleanliness of youth that death lurks upon its lips. The deadly germs of dread consumption are as harmless as June-time butterflies to the young man or woman who is thoroughly clean, sweet and healthy in every fiber and tissue. The germs of disease only attack that which is already partly decayed.

There is a great medicine that is a sure and certain protection against all germs and a speedy cure for all germ diseases. It is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It gives youthful zest to the appetite. It corrects all faults of the digestion. It aids assimilation. It fills the blood with the vital, life-giving elements of the food. It builds sweet, clean, healthy tissues in every part of the body. It drives out all disease germs. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of bronchial, throat and lung affections if taken in time. All good medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing "just as good."

Mr. Jos. Henderson Dirblun, of 544 Josephine Street, New Orleans, La., writes: "I was ailing for some two years, suffering from dyspepsia, a tired feeling, and loss of energy and appetite. I tried one bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and found great relief. I took two more bottles, three in all, and one or two vials of the 'Pellets,' when I was in good health again. I recommend Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to do all that it is claimed to do."

A man or woman who neglects constipation suffers from slow poisoning Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. All medicine dealers sell them. No other pills are "just as good."

The brethren at Hamilton are keeping well together and encouraging each other in the Lord, though still without a minister. They have called Bro. Pentmore from the United States. The collection at Hamilton was $32.

Bro. Sinclair has taken vigorous hold of the work at London and reports gain in all departments of the church there. Our watchword this year is $3,000 from the churches for the work in Ontario. W. R. S.

Is the Prohibition Party a Failure?

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Nov. 17th Burris A. Jenkins makes the statement in his Christian Endeavor column that the Prohibition party has been a failure. This is surely a great mistake, and I am surprised at any one of the ability of Bro. Jenkins making such a statement as this. The facts do not justify this statement. Neither do they that the old Abolition party was a failure. It was a glorious success, and the abolition of slavery was as much due to the agitation carried on by Abolition leaders as to any other one thing. Without Birney, Lovejoy, Garrison and Phillips, Lincoln and his work could not have been possible.

And so with the Prohibition party. If the liquor traffic ever is abolished, as soon it must be, it will be largely due to the agitation carried on incessantly by the Prohibition party. A party does not necessarily have to come into power in order to be a success. It may accomplish its mission without this. The Prohibition party has already been a great success in this particular, and promises to be a much greater success, judging by the great increase in its vote this election. Christians, and especially Christian ministers, instead of crying out about the failure of the Prohibition party, should go into it and make it a glorious success. It is the only political party that stands for the suppression of the saloon. This would do the cause of Christ more good than anything that could now be done by this government. But as long as Christians continue to vote for and with political parties that favor and perpetuate this curse, we may expect it to continue to do its work of devastation, destruction and ruin. But when they vote against it the traffic will soon cease.

Virginia Letter.

We have a noble band of Christian workers in the Charlottesville Church. Bernard P. Smith, the pastor, is an earnest young man, "full of faith and the Holy Spirit." The church has recently enjoyed a good meeting; Brother W. H. Book did the preaching. This "Book" is genuine, interesting and thoroughly original. There were a number of additions, and "the church was edified." Brother Book was called home when the meeting had reached its height, but before leaving he gave a lecture in the interest of the Piedmont Assembly which secured nearly fifty dollars. He also gave a number of afternoon Bible studies during the meeting on the "Person and Work of the Holy Spirit," which were greatly enjoyed by those who heard them. Brother Book is full of zeal and energy, unselfish and fearless. He has more calls for meetings than he can respond to, and yet he gives his best endeavors to the cause in Virginia. Like all the Miligan men I have met, he is a constant student of the Bible and thoroughly informed on all lines of missions. Several persons have united with the church since the meeting closed.

I recently spent a most delightful Lord's day with the church in Lynchburg, Va. In the Sermon on the Mount we read of "a city set a hill." Lynchburg is on a hill, under a hill and all over a hill. It is decidedly a hilly city. The old canal had its terminus here. It is one of the most prominent and prosperous cities of Virginia. The Glamorgan Pipe Works, of which the superintendent of our Lynchburg Sunday-school, Mr. Henry McWayne, is president, furnishes water pipes, hydrants, etc., to cities all over the East and South from Boston to New Orleans. Another member of the Christian Church in Lynchburg, who is a graduate of Bethany College, is business manager for the Lynchburg Plow Works. R. W. Lilly, who recently went to Lynchburg from Chicago, is doing excellent work. He was in the midst of a good meeting, doing the preaching himself. The church at Lynchburg, after a long struggle reaching back beyond the days when C. S. Lucas labored for them, is now free from de t and will soon be compelled to rebuild or enlarge their present building. The congregation under Brother Lilly's leadership will observe C. W. B. M. Day and secure one and perhaps several life memberships.

Thanksgiving Day and the day following, including the last Lord's day in November, were spent in Richmond, Va. They were delightful days of rest and spiritual fellowship spent in the Christian home of the late John B. Cary. Mrs. Young, "little Helen" and I enjoyed the hospitality of Sister Cary and her daughters, Mrs. Lizzie Daniel and Miss Gillie Cary. The visit afforded me the opportunity of having several satisfactory conferences with Mr. T. Archibald Cary in regard to our University of Virginia Bible work and also of seeing the excellent—I had almost said unprecedented—work which Brother Z. T. Sweeney is doing at the Seventh Street Church in Richmond. While the permanency of Brother Sweeney's engagement with the Richmond people is still in statu quo, it appears to one who sees the crowded audiences which fill the large church that the blessing of God is attending his labors in that important centre. In the letter of invitation which Miss Gillie Cary, her mother and sister extended us she wrote, "I shall not plan any institute work for you, but have planned to give you an absolute rest while visiting in our home." It was the most complete rest which I have enjoyed for several years, and Mrs. Young and Helen enjoy the visit equally as much as I did. We had the pleasure while in Richmond of breaking bread in the home of Mr. W. A. Crenshaw whose wife, Mrs. Lillian Moss Crenshaw, is the daughter of Brother David Moss, of Paris, Mo. They have a delightful home and Bro. Crenshaw is one of our good workers in the Seventh Street Church. We also dined with Mrs. Duke and family and with Bro. Maury and family. Although the weather was quite inclement, except one bright, sunshiny day, Miss Gillie Cary and Mrs. Daniel took Mrs. Young to see a number of the historic sights in Richmond. Probably no city in the South is the centre of more historic interest than Richmond. It was the capital of the Confederacy and the Confederate Museum is a collection of rare relics in the White House of the Confederacy. Old St. John's Episcopal Church, which was built in 1741, is still in an excellent state of preservation. It was here that Patrick Henry made his famous speech closing with the words, "Give me liberty or give me death!" In the Capital Square is an equestrian statue of Gen. Washington in bronze which is one of the finest works of art on the American Continent. Around the base of the statue in heroic size are figures of some of Virginia's most illustrious sons, such as John Marshall, Thomas Jefferson, et al. A few steps from Mr. Crenshaw's home is a noble equestrian statue of Robt. E. Lee, and just beyond one can still see the breastworks which tell of the struggle and suffering of the Virginia people during the Civil War.

Monday morning before leaving Richmond I attended the Christian ministers' meeting. At Bro. Sweeney's request I gave them a brief outline of the past and of the future prospects of our Bible teaching at the University of Virginia. Just before closing my remarks Dr. S. S. Laws, formerly president of the University of Missouri, entered the room and related his connection with the development of the Bible Chair idea. He expressed the hope that the great brotherhood of Missouri would speedily endow the Bible College at the University of Missouri. He commended the work which T. P. Haley and J. H. Garrison, with far reaching insight, have long championed. Brethren of Missouri, you have a great opportunity before you at Columbia. May God give you the consecration and wisdom to improve it. The pastors of all the Christian Churches in Richmond—Bros. Spencer, Maxwell, Garrison and Sweeney—expect to observe C. W. B. M. Day during the month of December. Bro. Maxwell has succeeded Bro. Omer at the Second Church. We shall long remember our visit to Richmond as one of the most pleasant experiences Mrs. Young and I have ever enjoyed.

In the cities of Virginia our churches are growing, but with rare exceptions, as at Gilboa and Macedonia, the country churches are languishing. It gave me great delight to see the Seventh Street Christian Church in Richmond crowded from the pulpit to the door and with chairs in the aisles. But the custom of having preaching only once each month has kept many of our Virginia churches from growing stronger. On the whole, however, the cause in Virginia is growing and taking on new life. As Sister Cary said to me, "God buries his workers, but he carries on his work." We have a number of young men who are coming forward to bear the responsibilities the older men are laying down. Over twenty years ago, when Col. Cary was traveling over the state of Virginia and struggling to support his family, he promised a book to the best Sunday-school scholar in a Sunday-school situated in Southwest Virginia. The boy who won the prize, Henry McWayne, is now superintendent of the Lynchburg Sunday-school and one of the most successful business men in Virginia. Brethren of Virginia, take courage. C. A. YOUNG.

Vigor & Verdicts

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR fulfills all the promises made for it, is the verdict of those who have tried it.

Ayer's Hair

"I have sold AYER'S HAIR VIGOR for fifteen years and do not know of a single case where it did not give entire satisfaction."—F. M. GROVE, Faunsdale, Ala.

Vigor

"When disease caused my hair to fall out, I found AYER'S HAIR VIGOR a most excellent preparation and one that does all that is claimed for it."—L. RUSH, Connellsville, Pa.

Did It

"AYER'S HAIR VIGOR does all that is claimed for it. It restored my hair, which was fast becoming gray, back to its natural color—dark brown."—W. H. HASELHOFF, Paterson, N. J.

"My head became full of dandruff, and after a time my hair began to fall out. The use of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR stopped the falling out and made the scalp clean and healthy."—MRS. C. M. AYRES, Mount Airy, Ga.

Texas Letter.

N. M. Ragland preached his thirteenth anniversary sermon as pastor of the church a Fayettville, Ark., on Nov. 20th. The good accomplished by this cultured and consecrated man during these years is beyond computation. His influence not only reaches his church and town, but through the University students it reaches every nook and corner of the state, and it will tell for good long after the pious author has gone home to his rewad. The sermon, like all Bro. Ragland's productions, is chaste and eloquent, and it shows continued prosperity in his work. It was published in full by the city papers.

"The Success of Modern Missions," by F. M. Rains, shows that the gospel can reach and save the "lowest classes." It is a part of the address he delivered at the Chattanooga Convention. It is timely. More such literature in compact form, from those whose lives are lived in the missionary atmosphere, will do good. Let such men give it to us.

S. Y. Trice, who has been our Sunday-school superintendent in the Central Church for eleven years, was presented a handsome gold watch by the school, as a testimonial appreciation. It was a deserved compliment to one of the most faith workers I ever knew.

War, bloody war, a war of extermination, is brewing in Texas. It is not a war with Spain or any other foreigh foe. It is not a racial war between the whites and blacks. Neither is it a war on monopolies and trusts or labor unions. And it is not a war on the whisky traffic. But it is, nevertheless, a real war, and a war of vital importance. It is a war on the prairie dog. These little pests, by the hundreds and thousands and millions, feed upon the roots of the fine grass in the great "Pan-handle" region—a country as large as three ordinary states—where the cattle king flourishes in all his glory, and the land is about to become a barren waste. The people are thoroughly aroused, the papers are talking about it, and the legislature will soon be called on to enact laws to aid in this war of extermination. And all this is right. But the thing that strikes me as strange is the fact that men who will enlist in this war and do valiant service cannot he enlisted in the war against King Alcohol. They will fight the prairie dog, but not the saloon; they will fight for the cattle, but not for the boys.

President A. Clark, of Add-Ran University, will preach for the church at Waco until Bro. Calvin's successor is secured. This is a fortunate arrangement, for it does not interfere with Bro. Clark's college work and it gives the church the preaching of an unusually strong man.

R. B. Briney, son of J. B. Briney, of Missouri, locates with the church at Amarillo. We are glad to have this young man among us and hope he may prove himself a worthy son of so noble a sire.

C. E. Smootz comes to us from New York, strongly commended by the state board. He is at San Marcos with a delicate wife, and the churches of that region should give him work.

Our meeting at the Central Church, after a continuance of six weeks, has closed with 49 additions from all sources. We hoped for much larger results; but probably should not, as this seems to be an "off year" for large ingatherings. Bro. Martin will spend the holidays with his family in Oakland, Cal., after which he begins a meeting with his cousin, Sumner T. Martin. M. M. DAVIS.

A Streak of Sunshine.

No life is all sunshine. The sky is more or less overhung with clouds for all of us. And the preacher's life is no exception to the rule. However faithful he may be he is not only "subject to like passions as we," but also to the same vicissitudes of fortune.

In our childhood days we used to chase the streak of sunshine and dance for joy in its yellow light as coming through the rift in the cloud it went like a passing smile over the earth. And now when our life's sky is clouded so much with the cares of life, its anxieties, its disappointments and toils, it gladdens our hearts so much when the bright spots come streaming through the clouds and show us how beautiful this world is after all when we "let the little sunsine in." God has been very gracious unto me and given me much of hope and gladness in my life. But one of these special streaks of sunshine has lately crossed my path, and I feel like acknowledging my gratitude for it.

I refer to the visit of our Bro. R. M. Messick to our church the forepart of this month. Bro. Messick is so large-hearted, good-natured and cheerful, his presence is like a burst of sunshine. But I do not refer to this alone. Fifteen years ago Bro. Messick, served this congregation as pastor for over three years. And now on his way to his far-off home in Oregon he stopped off to pay us a farewell visit. He intended to stay but a few days with us, but was detained two weeks for no other reason than that he could not get away from the entreaties of his brethren and friends. It was our lot to be with him much as he visited in the homes of our people. And it was in this experience that the "sunshine came in." He preached for us over Sunday and several nights while visiting with us during the day. And it made me think of the picture, "Daily in the temple and breaking bread from house to house did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God and having favor with all the people."

Brethren, if this is not a streak of sunshine in a preacher's life I cannot conceive what could bring one here on earth. Such love and fellowship is "better than gold." Though they gave him a nice present for this before he left. And it shows that faithful service will be appreciated and the servant held in esteem. Let those who will look at the dark side of a preacher's life, there is much to encourage in experiences like this. It may be our work is not usually remunerated as it ought to be, and as it is in other callings, yet there is no other life can show such blessed fellowship as this. Such a streak of sunshine does not cross the path of any other calling. And because of this I "thank God and take courage."

We were sorry to see Bro. Messick leave Missouri, and "sorrowing most of all for the words which he spoke, that they should see his face no more." But we look forward to the time when we shall "meet to part no more."

Though we hope many years of usefulness upon this earth are yet before Bro. Messick. He is still a good preacher of the Word. And one of the best fitted and most active and efficient men in pastoral work I ever saw. His visits in the home are a benediction. They were to us. And his coming to any church as its pastor will be a streak of sunshine cross their path. B. T. WHARTON.

Hiram Jubilee Endowment.

A few of the many good words spoken in favor of the great Hiram Jubilee Endowment movement:

W. P. Aylesworth, Pres. Cotner University, Bethany, Neb.:—"Enclosed find card pledging $1.00 or more to your fund. I have not yet had an opportunity to place the matter before our faculty, but am sure they will feel, as I do, a deep interest in your 'Jubilee' movement. I am glad you have given other college men an opportunity to express their fellowship in this easy way. You have my fullest sympathy and best wishes."

J. H. Garrison, editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—"We shall be glad to print what we can and to give the numbers that are responding, and otherwise help your good work along. I believe you are right in supposing that the success of your effort will prove beneficial to all other colleges.

Wishing you success in the enterprise, and authorizing you to use my name in the list of your donors for $1.00 and upwards, I am."

Mrs. Clara A. Sanborn, Londonville, O.:—"Count my name for this good work. Hiram holds first and warm place in my heart and I want to be one of the 50,000 to make the $1.00 donation and more if I can, when called upon to do so."

W. Bayard Craig, of Drake University, Des Moines, Ia.:—"Greeting to old Hiram. Count us in all things looking to the upbuilding of educational work among our people. We are not rivals, but co-operant friends."

J. Fraise Richard, Washington, D. C.:—"I have read with much interest your articles and appeal in behalf of Hiram College. I am pleased to see its work so successful. Hiram deserves to live and grow and exert an influence. It is in good soil and surrounded by good atmosphere."

G. P. Coler, Bible Chair, Ann Arbor, Mich.:—"I hope that your lectures may be profitable to you and helpful in promoting the cause of higher education among our people. I hope that your jubilee may be a great success. You may enroll me as one of the friends of Hiram College who will gladly contribute something to that fund."

J. W. Spayd, Owosso, Mich.:—"I have just read your letter in last week's Standard on 'Hiram's Jubilee Endowment.' I am partial to Hiram, as you know, and desire to have a hand in that endowment. You may put me down on your list with a pledge of $5.00, payable next spring."

Dr. A. H. Flower, Boston, Mass.:—You have adopted a wise plan for raising the endowment fund of Hiram College. It will be a success. Add my name to your list."

C. Durant Jones and Ida Pickering Jones, Des Moines, Ia.:—"You may count on our names as two of that 50,000 who will make donations towards Hiram's endowment. We will join in the jubilee when the full amount is raised."

Mrs. Hattie Craig, Newman, Ill.:—"I have been reading of the endowment for Hiram and will gladly be a cheerful giver, though the amount be small."

Hiram Van Kirk, Divinity House, Chicago, Ill.:—"You may count me as one of the contributors to the Hiram Jubilee Endowment Fund. Use me if possible in your work for the endowment of Hiram. I like very much the plan of your lecture, and in case you are near Chicago be sure and visit us and we will have you give the same before an assembled gathering of the Divinity House and Hyde Park Church."

L. L. Carpenter, Wabash, Ind.:—"I desire to become one of the 50,000 persons to help endow Hiram College. Put my name on the list and I will do all that I can."

J. Hopwood, Pres Milligan College, Tenn.:—"I heartily approve of your efforts to endow Hiram College by popular subscription. Put my name on your list."

Simpson Ely, Kirksville, Mo.:—"Put my name down. I wish you abundant success. A bright day awaits Hiram College."

To the list of college men we are happy to add the names of S. M. Jefferson, Berkeley, Cal., Ashley S. Johnson, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., and J. L. Darsie, Bethany, W. Va.

The Outlook Improving.

We observed C. W. B. M. Day yesterday. In the forenoon Mrs. Fuller gave an address, and in the evening they had an open meeting, assisted by the Juniors. The work is on the up grade now. We will help some weak points in this county and Henry County in Institute work soon as the holidays are past.

Nine Years of Service.

Rev. E. Jay Teagarden (pastor of the church at Danbury, Conn.) preached his ninth anniversary sermon at the morning service yesterday. It consisted of a careful review of the work of the past nine years and suggestions as to the work of the church during the year upon which they are just entering. At the time of the beginning of the present pastorate there were 280 members in the church. Duri g the nine years 620 members have been added, an average of 69 each year; 350 of these have been added at the r gular services, the remainder in special evangelistic services. There have been 59 deaths in the church. Letters have been granted to 74 members, who have united with other churches. Twenty have left the church without letter or have been dismissed from its membership. The present membership is 747. Of these 95 are non-resident and 72 are inactive. The working membership of the church is thus at present 580. During the nine years the pastor has preached 749 sermons in his own pulpit, has officiated at 151 funerals and performed the marriage ceremony 90 times, besides making over 5,000 pastoral calls. The church never had so large a force of workers nor so bright an outlook as at present. The pastor is organizing a committee of a hundred personal workers for the winter campaign, and he assured the members that if they second and assist his efforts as in the past, the present year will be the most successful of their united labors. He believes that no pastor ever had a heartier support from the entire membership of a church and that this is one of the greatest secrets of the success of the work. —The Evening News.

Dedication at Dows.

The First Church of Christ, at Dows, Ia., was dedicated Lord's day, Nov. 27, by Bro. B. S. Denny, secretary of the I C. C.

The house is a beautiful little frame structure, with all modern conveniences. The auditorium is 26 by 46, with corner pulpit; Sunday-school room is 18 by 24; the dressing-rooms are 10 by 10, and are built onto the rear of the auditorium.

The house complete, as it now stands, cost $3,000. Of this amount there was $1,018.26 to be raised on dedication. Many of the brethren felt blue and were discouraged and afraid it could not be done. But Bro. Denny, in his kind and loving way, gave the call, and in response there was $1,129.70 pledged to meet the indebtedness, and there has been some more pledges since.

This is the first church Bro. Denny has dedicated since his election to the secretaryship of the I. C. C. He does his work in first-class order, picks up all odds and ends and leaves everything complete and every one rejoicing and happy. Brethren, don't be afraid to let Bro. Denny dedicate your church. I wish we had one for him to dedicate each Lord's day so long as he is our secretary

This is a new church. It was organized last May at the close of a meeting held by Iowa's little giant, Bro. Lawrence Wright, with 52 members. Since the writer took up the work the 22d of May, there has been three additions (until the church was built).

The brethren deserve a great deal of credit and praise for their work. They built one of the most beautiful and convenient church buildings in this part of the country. And it was dedicated on the first Lord's day in the last six months of our year's labor with this people. It is not every congregation of only 54 or 55 members can or do accomplish that much in six short months. I feel proud of them. They did not make the mistake that many, many churches make, to organize and not build, but rent an old church or old deserted hall and continue to meet for a time and then go to pieces in a short time. It is sad to see so many churches do that very thing. And churches, too, that if taught to give would be able to build. I believe it is the making of a church to build a house the first year. They may not be able to build what they would like to have, but generally they are able to build something. After they have a building there is a greater degree of permanency about the work. There usually is a great many prophecies when one of our churches is organized regarding the life; such as, "Oh, that Campbellite Church won't last long; after the newness has worn off those folks will go back into the other churches," and many similar expressions. When they erect a building they feel as though they have something that is common to all, hence they are permanently organized. Brethren, be not afraid to build homes for the churches. It is pleasing to the One who gave us the church.

F. L. DAVIS.

An Anti-Mormon Monthly Magazine.

I am urged and encouraged to launch an anti-Mormon monthly magazine.

I favor an anti-Mormon magazine, for several reasons, and will consent to plant one on certain conditions.

REASONS FOR AN ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATION.

A magazine that is dedicated wholly and specifically to fighting this deadly and rapidly spreading "ism" is needed.

On such a publication the foes of the "ism" could and would unite. Mormonism is a common and deadly foe to all the church denominations in Christendom.

Such a publication would supplement and cheapen my tract work. Tract work cannot be supplanted, and ought not to be, if it could, by any other work.

CONDITIONS.

I have had a vast and a varied experience as a publisher and an editor. I propose to profit by that experience. It's a pleasant thing to run a paper, but when a paper runs its editor and publisher, I know of nothing more unpleasant or harrassing. I have been there.

1. I must have, with a goodly margin, enough pledged subscribers, in advance, to pay for blank paper and to pay the printer for one year.

2. The subscriptions pledged must be paid on receipt of the first copy of the monthly. With these returns I will buy the paper enough for one year and bank balance for the printers.

3. The price will be only fifty cents per year and only 1,200 subscribers will be needed to insure one year's run

After the first year I think it will be a fixture. Those who have read my tracts and articles in various papers can judge of the style of magazine I will get out.

4. All exchanges of this paper are respectfully and urgently requested to publish this announcement.

If your heart is as my heart and you are willing to join hands with me in battling this monster fraud of the nineteenth century send in your name. R. B. NEAL.

Life insurance is a good thing, but health insurance, by keeping the blood pure with Hood's Sarsaparilla, is still better.

HOOD'S PILLS cure nausea, sick headache, biliousness and all liver ills. Price 25 cents.

Allcock's
POROUS PLASTERS

Why are Allcock's the best plasters? Because they make the cures where all others fail. Why do they make the cures? Because they contain the right materials. Compare their fine aromatic odor with the nasty smell of all other plasters. Your sense of smell will tell you which is the best. Did you know that Allcock's have a greater sale than all the other kinds put together? Did you know that all makes and brands of so-called porous plasters are in imitation of Allcock's? But they imitate in appearance only. Don't waste your money in buying the false. Get ALLCOCK'S, the standard plaster of the world.

Kankakee (Ill.) Notes.

Bro. Geo. Hess, a young minister and schoolteacher who is a member of this congregation, filled the pulpit very acceptably Lord's day morning, Nov. 27, in my absence. He expects soon to devote his ent re time to the ministry.

Four added here recently in a short meeting held by Bro. J. T. Alsup. The conditions did not seem to be propitious, so we closed hoping to resume when the church gets ready for it.

The Sherburnville church expects to hold a revival meeting in January. The evangelist is not yet selected.

The Kankakee field is not as broad as many imagine. We have a population of about 14,000, but out of that there is not to exceed 3,500 American Protestants. The rest are foreign, mostly French Catholics. With nine Protestant churches the field is narrowed down considerably. And yet there is room and a fighting chance for building up a New Testament church of Christ here. It will be done.

In soliciting funds to pay off our lot debt our workers are often met with this objection: "There are too many churches in the city already, not room for any more to build up except at the expense of the others." But another one is gradually coming into view and is more and more being recognized as a factor in the city. Had we a church building and equipments we would grow rapidly.

I am publishing the above tracts, of which Sumner T. Martin, Mason City, Ia., says: "I have never seen a lot of tracts I like as well as these of yours. They have preached the gospel mightily these last three weeks, I assure you."

Two elders of the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints" (Mormons) have been preaching at Sherburnville recently, but they had very little success in convincing the people that their doctrines are true. If you wish to post up on that form of heresy read D. H. Bays' book, "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism," Christian Pub. Co., $1.50. It sweeps clean.

I have a full set (8 Vols.) of the "Nicene Fathers" in cloth, in splendid condition, that I will sell at a rare bargain. They cost me, new, $28.00, and will take $16.00 for them. Speak quick. W. D. DEWEESE.

Kankakee, Ill.

From Butler County, Kansas.

The Butler County Co-operative Convention began its sessions here, in Augusta, at 7:30 P. M., Nov. 25, and closed the evening of Nov. 27. The addresses by the pastors and others were of a high order. Bro. E. E. Cowperthwait, of Eldorado, gave us a very excellent address the first evening of the convention. The second evening Bro. O. L. Cook, our state superintendent of missions, addressed us, also Lord's day, morning and evening, and at 3:30 P. M. he gave an illustrated address to a mass meeting of the children of the town. In the mind of him who knows the work that Bro. Cook does there can be no doubt as to the wisdom of our state board in selection him for the work to which they called him. The work that he accomplishes is a good illustration as to what consecrated scholarship and good judgment can accomplish. To say that the people of the church here and town, and of the entire convention, who heard him, were entertained, edified and drawn nearer the Master, would be speaking no more than the truth. To state the fact mildly and in short, his visit among was a complete success.

Now a word for the state work. How any one can say that the giving of money to the state work is a waste of money is a mystery, unless it be because of the ignorance of the work done, or because of covetousness. Bro. Cook, or a man who can do a similar work, is absoultely indispensable in any state where we would cause our work to succeed, at least this assertion is true of Kansas. The work done speaks for itself. This work in our state needs a stronger support than it is receiving. We are not doing for it what we are able to do. Let us give our board the $5,000 asked for, for this year, and many a word of praise will be spoken for the work done under the management of the state board that has not been heard hitherto because the support has not been sufficient to push the work according to the desire.

Brother preacher, give the state work your port, it is your true friend. Brethren in Christ in the State of Kansas and other states freely support it by your prayers and money for experience declares that under wise management of the money by the board that money is converted into a great moter-power that sends the gospel with a speed that could not be approached by a haphazzard, unorganized effort. S. H. GIVLER.

Augusta, Kan., Nov. 28, 1898.

State Mission Notes.

One of the best workers in the field is J. B. Marley, of Piedmont, evangelist in Southeast Missouri. He has recently met with a severe loss in the destruction of his home by fire. This coming at the beginning of the winter season makes it doubly hard. By great good fortune the furniture was all saved, but in that broken and dilapidated condition so usual in case of fire.

The above item is my text, and I want to preach every friend of the cause in Missouri a short sermon. It is usual at state conventions to make a plea for funds, but you know that largely owing to my absence this was not done at Nevada. The money thus obtained was used to keep the work going for the first two months, in which but little money came in. Thus you see there was no provision for this time of scarcity this year. The convention kindly voted me a month's vacation, but when I discovered the true state of affairs I could not take it, but plunged right out into the field and have been working harder than I ever did in my life that the men in the field might have their funds.

I find that with all my individual effort we are running short. No one man can do the work of the office and obtain all the funds; he must have helpers. Brethren, this appeal is made to you and it is made with confidence that it will not fall upon deaf ears at all. Our growth in the state has been wonderful, and it has been such largely because of the efficiency of the state mission work. We are proud of the enlargement that God has given us, but let us look at it a moment.

During the last two years the mission work has put into the field 100,104 days' work, and preached 74,356 sermons and addresses, or to put it in another way, has crowned the life work of 20 efficient, enthusiastic preachers of the Word. What a mighty factor in our growth! There have been 600 churches organized in the last ten years and the mission forces have organized 424 of them. There has been a net increase of 75,740 in the last decade and in the same period the mission forces added 41,523. Then who can tell how much of this other work has been inspired by the influence of their mighty evangelistic force at work in the state? We number 161,013 in the state, we have 1,575 churches; now substract the number of churches and additions that stand as the result of the mission work and what would have been our position as a people in the state but for this work?

What then? Shall we let go in any sense of this work? Surely not. Yet, it must lag unless the brotherhood shall rally to its support. Will not every preacher in the state take the above facts and present them to his people and ask for the apportionment? They will give it. They need only to be informed. Examples: L. J. Marshall presents the case at Palmira; their apportionment is $25, result collection $11.50; Simpson Ely goes to his people personally, in home, office and store and in three hours has the full amount of Kirksville's apportionment. Two different plans, but the result is the same. Suppose each preacher in the state would do as well? One thing sure you would have a happy secretary. Try it. Our men are in want. Give us your help. Yours in His Name, 4144 Westminster Place. T. A. ABBOTT.

November a Great Month.

Comparing the receipts for Foreign Missions for the month of November with the corresponding month last year shows the following:

	1897	1898	Gain
Contributing	8	16	8
Churches	18	7	Loss 11
Sunday-schools	47	73	26
Individuals	11	10	Loss 1
Endeavor Societies	$4,011.33	$9,392.03	$5,380.70
Amount

We are making a fine start on the new year. If the friends continue their liberality, we are sure of reaching $150,000 for Foreign Missions this year. The first two months of the new missionary year brought $17,186 43. Let us keep up these good returns all through the year. F. M. RAINS, Treas.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

Evangelistic.

INDIANA.

The Daily Independent reports Evangelist Omer in a good meeting at Bedford.

TEXAS.

Percy T. Carnes reports seven additions to the church at Staly, Dec. 4.

TENNESSEE.

Springfield, Dec. 5.—I just closed a meeting at Grace Chapel, Montgomery county, with 15 additions, 12 by baptism. This makes 17 additions since the Chattanooga Convention. After a month's absence in evangelistic work I return to advance the spiritual interests of our home congregation.—LOUIS D. RIDDELL.

OHIO.

Hopedale.—Am in a meeting here with home forces. Two confessions to date and increasing interest.—P. H. WILSON.

IOWA.

Cherokee, Dec. 5.—Our meeting begins with 10 added. Interest and audience growing.—F. H. LEMON.

What Cheer, Dec. 7.—We are in a good meeting here, one week old. Six additions.—R. C. OGBURN.

Dows.—The meeting is one week old. The audiences are good. They pay good attention. The prospects are bright for a good meeting. We expect a singer this week. I would like to hear from some singers.—F. L. DAVIS.

Wm. E. Bute, of Stanhope, reports six additions Dec. 4. A protracted meeting was to begin on the 10th inst. Work on the new house likely to be postponed on account of cold weather. Will cost $1,800 when completed.

Elliott, Dec. 7.—I am assisting T. J. Reznor in a meeting, which is now 10 days old. Two added to the church by statement and four confessions. Crowded house and splendid interest.—M. C. JOHNSON.

We closed our first meeting a few days ago at Irwin, where I minister half time, with 10 additions to the church; eight confessions. The good effect of the meeting was further apparent in the manifest improvement in the spiritual condition of the membership of the church. Much of this interest is doubtless due to the excellent services of Bro. Frank McVey, our singer, who is one of the most excellent of Israel's sweet singers. Bro. McVey has kindly consented to help me in a few more meetings this winter, and any church in need of a good meeting at small cost may write me for particulars. Would like to commence immediately after the holidays.—D. H. BAYS.

Central City.—Twenty-three added in the D. A. Wickizer meeting.

Delta —Pastor Fisher holds his own meeting and reports 25 added; all confessions and baptisms save three.

KANSAS.

Galena, Dec. 9.—One confession and one by letter on Dec. 4, and one confession and two by letter in November.—R. A. THOMPSON.

Parsons, Dec. 5.—Our meeting has resulted in much good; 14 added to date.—W. W. BURKS, pastor, C. E. MILLARD, singer.

Council Grove, Dec. 2.—Am in a meeting at Fairview S. H., 10 miles out in the country. Began 27th ult. One candidate for baptism.—J. A. WALTERS.

Chas. M Sharpe reports 21 baptisms and nine additions otherwise at Lawrence in the 24 days' meeting, assisted by W. S Priest.

Larned, Dec. 5.—Four were added to this church yesterday. C. W. B. M. Day a grand success. The writer has been elected county president of the Pawnee County Sunday-school Association for the ensuing year.—C. H. HILTON.

Newton, Dec. 3.—I am preaching at Mound Ridge, McPherson Co., half-time. The church is in good order. They have a good house well furnished and all paid for. Have just closed a three weeks' meeting here. Elder Hale, of Kingman, did the preaching. There were three additions by letter and nine confessions. A large majority of the settlement is Mennonite, but we will build up a very good church at that point. Bro. Hale is an excellent young man in every way and a good preacher.—AMMI FIKE.

MICHIGAN.

Buchanan, Dec 6.—Thirteen more added last night; 140 in all to date; will continue few days. Will dedicate the new church building at Antioch, O., Christmas Day and begin at Youngstown, O., Jan. 1st. Pastors would do well to write and ask Bro. E. R. Black, here, how to prepare for a meeting.—C. R. SCOVILLE.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Beaver, Dec. 6.—Two confessions at Beaver on last Lord's day evening. Just starting in my new field.—Z. E. BATES.

OREGON.

Eugene, Dec. 4.—Five confessions to-night; eight added first week. We continue.—MORTON L. ROSE.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Ponca, City, Dec. 6.—I began a meeting here Nov. 29th; have had four additions, two by confession. This is a new country and every opposition to Christian progress is exerted here. There are 14 saloons and four churches. Our church is the best location in town and our people are holding their own. They need a good pastor now. Mrs. Dora Short is clerk. Yours all along the line.—ELLIS PURLEE, Pawnee Rock, Kan.

MINNESOTA.

Sharon, Dec. 7.—We closed our meeting here with seven baptisms; some by statement and reclaimed. A good meeting. We begin a meeting at Ashland, Neb., the 15th inst.—GREGG AND SWEETMAN.

ILLINOIS.

Blandinsville, Dec. 4.—One addition to the Old Bedford Church last Sunday at regular service.—A. R. ADAMS.

Dixon, Dec. 5.—The Lord is certainly prospering our work here in Dixon. Seven during October, seven during November and six last Lord's day eve. Some every Sunday.—S. H. ZENDT, pastor.

Marshall, Dec. 7.—Our meeting here with J. I. Gunn and C. A. Burton closed Sunday night. We go from here to Metcalf, this state, to aid C. H. Berry in a meeting. Churches or evangelists desiring to make engagements with me for the new year can address me at Metcalf, Ill.—C. M. HUGHES, singing evangelist.

Elkhart, Dec. 6.—A good leader of song and soloist might address me at Elkhart, Ill. Am in a meeting at Latham at this writing for a few days.—M. L. ANTHONY, state evangelist.

Litchfield, Dec. 5.—After exceedingly hard work our meeting is being blessed of God; 14 added; congregation has decided to remodel their house and made it modern; have invited me to help them for three or four months in this work. If we do so will begin March 1st, 1899.—W. A. MELOAN.

Normal, Dec. 6.—Four added by letter recently.—E. B. BARNES.

Watseka, Dec. 5.—Yesterday was truly C. W. B. M Day with this congregation. The program carried out in the evening under the direction of our society was one of the best I ever heard. I am sure the large congregation present receive lasting good from it.—B. S. FERRALL, pastor.

Chapin, Dec. 10.—Meeting here with W. H. Cannon preaching continues; 11 days old with 11 accessions, five are young men.—A. O. HUNSAKER.

Blandinsville, Dec. 8.—Our meeting is in the second week with 15 added. Eight came forward last night. We hope for many more.—J. S. CLEMENTS.

Windsor, Dec. 8.—Our meeting of 18 days at Gays closed last night with 23 additions and a fine interest. Bro. Mark Sexton rendered valuable aid. Here is my hand for 100,000 additions in 1899.—A. H. HARRELL.

Peoria, Dec. 10.—Marion Stevenson, pastor of the Edwards Street Christian Church, Decatur, has just closed a meeting with the Central Christian, Peoria. The meeting resulted in 28 added to the church. Aside from the additions the church was greatly strengthened by Bro. Stevenson's work. He is preeminently a preacher of the "Word."—J. P. MCKNIGHT, pastor.

The church at Blue Mound, Ill., has secured J. R. Crank for its minister for the ensuing year.

MISSOURI.

Kansas City, Dec. 8.—A most delightful meeting of three weeks' duration at the 6th and Prospect Ave. Church; 40 added. Bro. H. A. Northcutt was with us, and his practical sermons, his tender, winsome heart-messages will live with us through all the days.—GEO. H. COMBS.

J. M. Tennison, writing from Lamar, Mo., says that since giving up his position with the National Orphans' Home of the Christian Church to go to his family in California, he has been without regular work. He says that he was never in better health than now or better capable of efficient pulpit or pastoral work, and would be glad to correspond with or visit if necessary any church or churches wishing his services. He desires an early engagement.

Kansas City, Dec. 6.—We closed a three weeks' meeting with the 6th and Prospect Church last night. There were 40 additions. The weather was bad all the time, but we had a fine meeting. This is a strong church. Brother Combs, who has been pastor here five years, is doing a great work. He is one of the best pastors I ever knew.—H A. NORTHCUTT.

Bigelow, Dec. 5.—We are in a good meeting since Nov. 22nd. Five additions to date; four by confession, one reclaimed. Good audiences and good attention. F. E. Blanchard, of Barnard, is doing the preaching and doing it well.—J. R. HARLAN, pastor.

St. Louis.—First Church, eight additions; Compton Heights, nine additions; Fourth Church, three additions.

Catarrh of the Stomach.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drugstores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

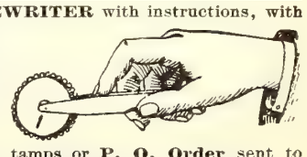
Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. These tablets can be found at all drugstores.

Sedalia, Dec. 5.—We have just closed our series of meetings for the year, resulting in 79 additions. We held meetings in the following places: Wheeling, Fulton County, Ark., Christian Union, Smithton, Calhoun, Sprague and Grand Pass. Quite a number were from the different denominations. We threw no rocks, but gathered the sharpest arrows from the quiver of divine truth and shot at the hearts of men and women.—J. I. ORRISON.

Cameron, Dec. 5.—Five additions at our regular services since last report; three yesterday and two Nov 27. We are closing up the year encouragingly in every way.—S. J. WHITE.



Center, Ralls County, Dec. 6.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Salt River Church, with seven confessions and two reclaimed. This was my fourth year's work there and my fourth meeting. They gave me a call for another year. One confession recently at Spaulding.—W. D. MCCULLEY.

Columbia.—We are in a vigorous campaign here through the leadership of Bro. Winders. He has his congregation thoroughly organized, and as a result the church is constantly growing numerically and spiritually. We had 10 confessions from Christian College girls last Lord's day at our usual service. Our house is crowded every Lord's day, and confessions are taken frequently.—J. W. MONSER.

Rock Port, Dec. 5.—Meeting eight days old. One addition to date; growing interest. Organized a Ladies' Aid Society. We are quite hopeful of progress all along the lines of church work.—S. W. GLASCOCK, evangelist.

Louisiana.—J. B. Corwine held us a meeting of 18 days, closing the 3rd of November. His sermons were as fine as I have ever listened to. Five confessed Christ, and the church was greatly helped by his earnest and faithful work.—E. J. LAMPTON.

STELLA CLANTON.

Whenever thou hast drawn apart
From all the cares and petty strife,
That vex the mind, and wring the heart,
To fit the soul for higher life;
Hast thou not felt within thy breast
A joy most holy and profound,
That quiets all the deep unrest,
And spreads a rapturous peace around?

Thou knowest it well. At evening close,
Thy labors ended for the day,
When humbly, ere thou sought repose,
Thou hast turned to God to pray;
Then, ere thy full petitions cease,
Over thy soul, before so sad,
Has stolen this sweet sense of peace,
And made thy drooping spirit glad.

'Tis God's own presence that we feel,
The presence of the Eternal One.
He draweth near when mortals kneel
To humbly say, Thy will be done.
Oh God, will all our life with Thee
Be like unto this taste of bliss?
Will all the years that are to be,
Be full of peacefulness like this?

"The Greatest Enemy of the Army."

T. H. EDWARDS.

It would hardly see mnecessary in this sign of the coming of the "New Time" to accentuate the fact that the habit of indulging in intoxicants by any people or nation is deleterious to the general health, morals and intellect of an individual or nation; and especially to the physical development of the growing youth. Ask any of our most experienced, up-to-date, well read and close and observant physicians (who will answer honestly), and he will tell you alcohol, wine, beer or malt liquors are enervating and destructive to vital energy and to that development that should be attained in manhood, both physically and intellectually, say nothing of the moral degradation that it produces upon any people or nation who are known to indulge in the same as a beverage. The numerous testimonials of those who are the greatest experts of the day in Materia Medica and physical culture admit that the indulgence in the social glass, though a stimulant for the time being, soon causes the subjects given to such a habit to collapse and are less able to perform any arduous undertaking that takes mind or body.

The writer was a soldier for three and a quarter years in our Civil War who previous to his enlistment was a student and not a robust person, serving side by side with the mechanic and rugged farmer, but during his service of over three years did not indulge in any kind of intoxicants, yet came out whole, while those who drank and were much stronger physically broke down before serving out their terms of service, caused from dissipation due to drink and the evils that follow close upon such a course; they were the ones who paid little attention to the laws of hygiene, putting no restraint upon their inordinate desires and appetites; it was this class of soldiers who filled the hospitals, the last to rally from the disease and constituted the greatest number on the death roll; who did not serve their country so well while ving or fill out their three years of enlistment, nor were they any braver in facing the enemy, nor while in action kept their heads and nerves as well as those who abstained from the use of liquor; as a general rule I mean (I am speaking in the concrete as it were).

Let any one read Dickens' "Nicholas Nickleby," "Little Dorrit" and other of his works and he will see who were in the debtor's prison who were the imbeciles, who were the children brought into the world with appetites for the demon alcohol inherited from drunken parents whose bodies were poisoned and enfeebled by that which blights the intellect, dulls the moral sense and eats out the vitality of those who are its slaves like a cancer gnaw-at their vitals.

The allowing of the canteen system in the camps of our late army was a shame, a disgrace and a curse to the American army, a blot upon our national emblem that should bring a blush to the cheek of any true lover of our country, an injustice and an outrage against the feelings of the patriotic and virtuous mothers and fathers who sacrificed so much as they with ill forbodings of the dire calamities of war, with heavy hearts and prayers to God gave their sons to go forth and battle for humanity, for the rescue of the oppressed and the securing the rights of a down-trodden people.

No general that had the character of those young men from the fireside and influence of a Christian home at heart, with a true love of home and country in his soul, would have consented for a moment to have that enter into or allowed to follow in the wake of the army which is the downfall and cause of the destruction of his men, more than all the bullets of the enemy could possibly effect, and nothing but evil consequent upon such a permission; no commander of any moral standing—or a fool—would argue that the use of liquor would make a braver or more desirable soldier. Such a pretense could only issue from the mouth of a debauchee. I care not how high he ranks in military life, such reasoning is illogical and futile in this enlightened age. Why is it when the pugilist goes into training is forbidden to indulge in drinking and all other excess and special diet prepared for him if he is not thereby much better fitted to meet his antagonist? His trainer knows it, and he knows it, for he has reputation and his own and his friends' money at stake. "Wine, women and song" are not for him then, but regular and nutritious diet, regular hours for sleep and regular hours for hard work, that his eye may be clear, his heart beat regularly and his muscles become hard.

An officer who has so little respect for himself, his command or his country as to be found under the influence or drunk with liquor should upon the first offence forfeit his commission and be dishonorably discharged.

We will never have an ideal army or navy until the moral character of an officer for promotion or retention in office shall be the first element in his make-up alongside of his being physically and intellectually competent. We want more characters like a Stonewall Jackson that the rank and file may emulate the bravery and virtues of all such commanders.

It is when the political trickster and dishonest schemer has no hold upon the public conscience, in our halls of Congress, legislature or our army will this nation stand forth as that of a truly God-fearing people, and this will come to pass when the masses vote for the man and not the party; when not money shall be the prime factor for lifting a man into office, but brains and honesty shall be the requisite attainments, then will the new time be.

Peleg.

BY F. M. GREEN.

The history of Peleg is as old as man, though he was not named for a great while after he was born. The real man Peleg was the son of Eber, and when he died he had tormented the world two hundred and thirty-nine years. Peleg means "Division," and if there is anything in a name, he made things lively. If he had lived as long as Methuselah there is no knowing what would have happened. But as a man he lived at the time of the transition from the antediluvian to the postdiluvian duration of life. Noah lived 950 years, Shem only 600, Arphaxed the first born of Shem after the deluge, only 438; and when we come to Peleg, who seems to have been contemporary with the dispersion, life is still shorter. Peleg lived 239 years, Reu his son 239 years, Serug, his grandson, 230 years, and Noah, his great-grandson, 148 years. He was born about 1,757 years before Christ was born in Bethlehem. Of his personal life only two or three sentences are spoken. Perhaps the reason for this is that his deeds would speak for themselves. The Peleg family is widely scattered. It has no particular country for its home, and if it had it would not live in it very long, for some would go to the left and some to the right, for is not their name "Division?"

Nations have their Pelegs, and it is a hard thing for the best of governments to keep them in line. They have their political wedges always ready for use and batter and storm until they lie down in their last sleep. To have a united country would be like purgatory to them—they are always for division.

The church has its Pelegs, and there is no congregation so small that some member of the family is not present. They divide and subdivide until only John and his wife are left, and then they apply for a divorce! The Pelegs somehow have great influence and the shadows of their giant forms cover some of the fairest portions of the earth as with a mantle. Their Gauls are divided into more than three parts. One strange characteristic of the Peleg family is that they are not satisfied in dividing the family, the neighborhood, the church, the nation or the world, but will even divide their own personalities so that a war is continually going on in their own members. No peacemaker, however blessed, has ever yet been able to absolutely conquer them. The ages have been compelled to endure their blighting influence and the prospect is that so long as "man is vile" the world will be pestered by their presence.

Fishers of Men.

BY WILL H. DIXON.

Down by the sea of the mild Galilee,
The Savior passed time and again;
From the shore of the sea, He called, "Follow me
And I'll make you fishers of men."

He is calling to-day, in the same earnest way;
He is calling for fishers again;
And the brightest names known up around God's throne
Will be those who were fishers of men.

Prayer.

J. MCK. HODGE.

One of the most potent factors for the promotion of spirituality is prayer. We cannot hope to grow in grace without it. So often in the study of God's Word do we find it enjoined upon us in such passages as, "Pray without ceasing," "Men ought always to pray and not to faint."

As a child should go to an earthly parent with every sorrow, to thank him for his good gifts, tell what his further desires are, and ask his counsel and guidance in all things, so ought we to approach our Heavenly Father. Not with the self-righteousness of the Pharisee, but with the humility of the poor Publican.

Our blessed Master has given us this assurance: "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be granted unto you."

Fellow-Endeavorers, let u spray more in our Society. It is the current that connects our hearts with God, whereby the light of heaven enters our lives and is reflected upon the world. Let the current be uneven and our light sputters, but let it be broken, no prayers ascending, and our light goes out. Perhaps we say we know not how to pray. Christ has given us a model, let us examine it. Remember, we are not heard for our much speaking, for he warns us against using vain repetitions as the heathens do. Their cry from morning till noon to their false gods when warring against Elijah was, "O, Baal, hear us! O, Baal, hear us!" And the Ephesians, when exasperated against the apostles, cried out for two hours, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" In the Lord's prayer note its brevity, its simplicity, its multum in parvo, yet how wide a scope it embraces.

The Jews looked with awe upon any approach to the Divine Presence. 'Tis sweet to know that we can come as one family to that throne of mercy and say with Jesus, our elder brother, as he has taught us, "Our Father which art in heaven." None but a child who has left home, and felt that longing desire to return to its sheltering fold, can appreciate the depth of feeling expressed in that word, "heaven," the home every Christian expects to enjoy.

"Hallowed be thy name." Do we always breathe that name feeling that a halo of sacredness is encircling it, and like Moses when approaching the burning bush, do we heed the cry, "Take the sandals from off thy feet, for the ground whereon thou treadest is holy ground?"

"Thy kingdom come," we say, and yet sit with folded hands and idle brain, doing nothing for its advancement. When will this kingdom come? When every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ. How many have ever exhorted by word or deed one fellow-traveler to bow the knee to him or make that good confession. Our motto, "For Christ and the Church," is but the thought expressed in other words. Let us never again pray, "Thy kingdom come," without some personal effort to extend it. About the hardest thing in this world to conquer is our stubborn wills. To be subservient to him in all things, amid whatever trials and afflictions we are called upon to bear, we are totally inconsistent if we cannot in meekness and resignation say, with all truthfulness, "Thy will be done." Three times in the garden of Gethsemane did our Savior utter these words in praying, that the cup of death might pass from him, but when called upon to drink it he did so, even to the bitter dregs, his expiring breath a prayer for his enemies: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." What an example for us to emulate!

"Give us this day our daily bread," and because we do not receive poundcake we murmur and complain, forgetful of the fact that "whatsoever ye ask in my name, believing, ye shall receive." Of course daily bread, as here used, does not literally mean bodily sustenance, but every actual need, both physical and spiritual, of a child of God. We don't lay enough stress on believing. We ask too doubtingly. The most essential element in prayer is faith. The apostles were told that if they had faith no greater than a grain of mustard they would say to the mountains, "Be thou removed and planted in the sea, and it would be done." Let us say as the father of the demoniac child did, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

Another vital principle underlying all acceptable supplications to the divine Father is the forgiveness of our enemies or those who wrong us in any way. If God were as tardy in granting us forgiveness, who sin against him hourly, as we are some imaginary and trifling wrong of a neighbor, I am afraid our names would be blotted out of the Book of Life. He has promised faithfully to forgive us if we forgive others, and that there may be no misunderstanding he adds in the same connection, "But if you forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Heavenly Father forgive your trespasses."

Oh yes, we know the Lord's Prayer by heart. "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." Now, we know the Lord tempteth no man, yet we plunge boldly into the very midst of temptations. The poisonous tongue of envy and malice darting its venom at us, the serpent lurking in the wine cup, the fascinations of the mazy dance, the enchanting card table—we gaze on them all and say, "Deliver us from evil." But only the lion-hearted can stand the assailant's darts, and if we would come out unscathed we must heed the "Lead us not into temptation." See to it, then, that no vain petitions ascend and ascribe to him all the honor and glory for what we were and are and yet shall be.

"Teach Me Thy Paths."

IDA B. DAVISON.

Show me Thy ways, O Lord,
Teach me Thy paths, I pray:
That I may do Thy will—
Walk with Thee day by day.

Choose out my paths for me,
Thou knowest what is best;
Whether 'tis joy or pain
Makest my life most blessed.

Be Thou my light and guide,
I am so apt to stray.
Help me to follow Thee
When Thou hast shown the way.

Lead me in paths so plain
I may not go astray;
Whene'er Thou callest me
May I make no delay.

I am Thy child, dear Lord;
Order my steps in love.
Into the paths of peace,
That lead to Thee above.

The Christian Life.

Christian character is most severely tested by the little trials of life. It is easy to "feel good" when in a religious meeting or in the company of religious persons conversing about spiritual things. Perhaps the courage which moved the early confessors of Christ to face martyrdom was not of a higher or finer quality than that with which many a modern housekeeper confronts the daily perplexities of life. The man who is able to pass the inspection of the members of his own household is a pretty good Christian. So is the one whose business associates and employees thoroughly believe in him. No one can deceive those who are constantly brought into intimate association with him. The mother who makes a Christian profession must have the grace of God in her heart if she wishes her children to venerate her life and her servants to honor her and speak well of her. One reason why so much of our religion fails to impress the world is because it is superficial. The complaining father, the scolding mother, the tricky business man, the bitter-tongued gossip—these, to mention no others, bring discredit to the cause of Christ and tend to harden the hearts of worldlings. Sometimes a single case of sharp practice by a church member does great harm in an entire community.

Our Lord submitted with unfailing patience to all the ills of human life. There was nothing effeminate about him. On the contrary he was the manliest man that ever trod the earth. Yet he was also the kindliest, and in his acquiescence in the misfortunes that befell him became a pattern and an example for us all. Though his own disciples constantly misunderstood him and were unable to grasp the spiritual significance of his mission, he never manifested the least irritability. And it was to that disciple who had denied him on that memorable night, proclaiming with bitter oaths that he knew not the man, that he sent a special message of cheer after the resurrection. He has promised to give us his Spirit. Without the fulfillment of that promise our efforts to be good and do good will prove melancholy failures. But the grace of God can so change the heart and transform the life that even the scoffing world will notice it.—Central Christian Advocate.

The First Idealist.

A jelly-fish swam in a tropical sea,
And he said; "This world it consists of Me;
There's nothing above and nothing below
That a jelly-fish ever can possibly know,
Since we've got no sight, or hearing or smell,
Beyond what our single sense can tell.
Now, all that I learn from the sense of touch
Is the fact of my feelings, viewed as such;
But to think they have an external cause
Is an inference clean against logical laws.
Again, to suppose, as I've hitherto done,
There are other jelly-fish under the sun,
Is pure assumption that can't be backed
By a jot of proof, or a single fact.
In short, like Hume, I very much doubt
If there's anything else at all without.
So I come at last to the plain conclusion,
When the subject is fairly set free from confusion,
That the universe simply centers in me,
And if I were not, then nothing would be."

That minute a shark, who was strolling by,
Just gulped him down in the wink of an eye,
And he died, with a few convulsive twists—
But somehow the universe still exists.

The Professor's Downfall.

There has not been in the last few years a more dramatic realization of the perversion of the moral nature under the influence of the spirit of revenge than that which has occurred in one of the well-known colleges of the country. The name of the college and the name of the criminal have already been given too much prominence in the daily press, and we will not mention them.

In 1893 a brilliant graduate of one of our leading universities was appointed instructor in ethics and logic in a smaller college. The young man began with great promise. He had made a most remarkable reputation in his college, and had taken a special course in the theological seminary. He had won enviable scholastic distinction and reward as a student of the science of reasoning, and it seemed as if no one could be better able to teach students the difference between right and wrong in human conduct than he.

After three years' teaching, the president decided that he would have to dispense with the services of the young professor. His method of teaching was not satisfactory, and he was notified that he would not be reappointed.

The announcement inflamed the young logician. Thinking he was right in his methods, and that the president was wrong, he conceived the idea that the president was jealous of his success, and was therefore trying to get rid of him. This idea completely mastered him, and from that hour he determined to ruin the man he considered his enemy.

In the meantime he was dismissed from his chair by the board of trustees, and left the town. His insubordination before he left ruined his reputation, so that he could not obtain employment anywhere else as a teacher. Imagining that the president was still working against him, his hatred for the dignitary increased. He began to plan a series of revenges. He first purposed to burn the great college hall that had been erected at an expense of three hundred thousand dollars, arguing that the president would be held responsible for the fire.

This building he fired one winter night, and no one suspected him. Only one wing was burned, and the fire was thought to be due to some student's carelessness. Balked in his purpose, the vindictive man successively ruined the chapel organ, cut the class vines on the building, threw hymnbooks and Bibles in the well, spread tar on the chapel seats, and perpetrated a series of such petty and malignant atrocities that it seemed as if only a maniac could have done them. The design of all these acts was to injure the president by showing that he was not popular with the students, and could not control them.

An investigation was set on foot, and the professor was suspected. He was arrested, and within a week confessed enough to send him to state prison for twenty years. In his confession he said:

"I thought I was doing the college a good by having the president removed. I considered him a hypocrite, and thought he ought to go."

But when he spoke of the desecration of the chapel, he burst into sobs. "To think," he said, "that I could desecrate the pulpit at which I used to pray and the Bible I used to read to the boys! God will never forgive me for doing this."

The pitiful history of moral destruction just related shows what comes of taking a single evil passion into the soul. One such example should be warning enough.—Youth's Companion.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. We Shall Know Each Other There.

[The following article and poem was sent us without credit to the paper in which it was published.—EDITOR.]

The minister of a fashionable church preached a beautiful sermon on this subject: "Shall We Know Each Other There?" He drew the picture of a very beautiful heaven. We would walk in sunlit groves, by the music of waterfalls and gaze out upon amaranthine fields. And teen too "we shall know each other there," said the minister, "and there'll be no strangers in the New Jerusalem; we'll all be friends."

"Beautiful," said Deacon Sham, as he trotted down the aisle.

"A lovely sermon!" said Miss Simpkins as she put her bony hand into the minister's. She was stopped by a poor mechanic, who came up and addressed the preacher.

"Mr. ——, I am glad we shall recognize each other up there."

"Yes," said the minister, "it is one of the great consolations of our religion."

"Well, I'm right glad we shall know each other. It will be a great change, though, for I have attended your church for over four years, and none of the members of this society have recognized me yet. But—we shall know each other there."

What is it you say, pastor,
We shall know each other there,
In that grand and glorious country,
Land so bright and pure and fair,
When death's valley we have crossed—
Crossed its dark and surging tide—
And have entered into heaven,
Where the good and pure abide?

Rich and poor meet here, together,
Pass within the same church door,
Listening to God's holy Word,
As you read it o'er and o'er;
Plebian and patrician come,
All together bend the knee,
But no look of recognition
Scarcely ever do you see.

You speak of the Heavenly City,
Of its streets of pearl and gold,
But without love to our brother,
We can never it behold;
Love as did our forefathers,
In those grand and good old days,
And when they met together,
It was to give their Maker praise.

It was only a little log meeting house,
But love was the foundation,
And their song was Hallelujah
To the God of all creation!
They took each other by the hand,
In a kind and loving greeting,
That went far to pave rough ways,
Till the next Lord's day meeting.

Know each other, pastor, there?
When our robes are spotless, white,
Know each other over there,
In the land of endless light?
Then why not live here together,
As one great united band,
That we may have a glimpse of heaven
Before we enter the goodly land?

"What wonderfully magnificent teeth you have, Miss Ancient."

"You flatter me."

"Not at all. I was only admiring their fine workmanship."

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

Some of Us.

For a long time I had been wondering if I could not get up a society for boys and girls that would help to make them happy, and at the same time improve and broaden their minds. I had noticed that the page devoted to children, as a rule, was filled with little letters in fine type, written by children, that other children did not care to read. They usually ran thus: "I am a little boy, nine years old. I go to school, and I have two white kittens. I like your paper very much." I wondered if I could not conduct a page that boys and girls would care for. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST offered me a page. On the third of November appeared my first article, explaining the Advance Society. Any one could become a member who agreed to try to do five things: read five pages of history and 30 lines poetry every week; memorize a quotation from a well-known author once a week; read a verse of the Bible every day, and keep an account of what and how much is read in a notebook. I promised that the ones who were faithful for twelve weeks would have their names printed in our List of Honor. At the same time I explained that we would, from time to time, have general subjects upon which to write, and while I hoped each would write a short piece upon such subjects, nobody was compelled to do so. I stated that the first subject would be the funniest story known to any one, which must also be a true story. I would select the funniest from those sent me and publish in one article, giving credit to each writer.

Here was my plan. The piece was printed on the 3rd. I was very anxious for boys and girls everywhere to give a little time to history and to poetry and to memorizing, because I knew this would help to make them brighter and happier. But I did not know how the children would receive the idea. I was impatient to know if the scheme would fail, but I waited, because that was all I could do. Now, on the very next day after the page was published, two girls sat down and wrote me a letter; of course I knew nothing about it till Monday, when two letters came in by mail. The first one I opened was from Paris, Mo., and said: "I have read the article about your Advance Society; I want to join it.—Macie Randall, 12 years of age." The other letter was from Stronghurst, Ill., and read: "After carefully looking over your account of the Advance Society, I have a desire to join, and and therefore send my name. I am 11 years old, and have been a member of the Christian Church for three years.—Beulah A. Woodside." So these two were the first to join. At first I thought of calling them the Mothers of the Society, but perhaps this would not be fair, since the paper is longer in reaching some states than others.

On Tuesday I received seven new names; on Wednesday, 12; on Thursday, five more. Since then only three days have passed without bringing me a welcome letter. I usually receive three a day. Monday before last, the time of sending to press, there were 120 members. So we have succeeded, and I am now to tell you about the ones who have joined. Florence Waller Smith, Dameron, Mo., is 12; she says, "I think the Society will benefit all children." Stella Linton, Wilson, Wis., is 13. She sent one of our true funny stories. Della Taylor, of Lamonte, Mo., is eight. Nora Cunningham, Cloverdale, Kan., is 11. Florence Belle Beattie will be nine on Christmas day. I think they ought to hang her up on the Christmas tree, don't you?

Roberta Broadhurst, Louisville, Ky., says: "I am 12 years old, and have been a member of the church since I was nine. Strange to say, I made confession under the preaching of an Ellis — Bro. W. E. Ellis, of Nashville, Tenn. If you are fully as good as he, you are just the one for me!" To this I can only answer, "I am going to try to be fully as good as Bro. E." Lane and Errett Van Horn, 11 and 10, hail from Birmingham, Ala. I think it is delightful for two in the same family to join. Their little sister, Nell, is eight and afraid she is too young to join, but I don't think so, since Lane says, "We read a great deal at our house." Gladys Eubank, 11, is from Paris, Mo. She says that her mother does not approve of her reading novels. I congratulate Gladys upon having such a wise mother. There are only a few novels fit for children to read, and it is better to read none than to experiment with the wrong kind. Bonnie B. Blakely, Williams, Ia., is another member. Mrs. Carrie Smead and Mrs. F. M. Lowe, of Kansas City, with Frank M. Lowe (age, 10) come on a postal card. I am glad to have these ladies among our number. I would hate to be the only grown-up member of the Society. Mrs. Mattie Dever, Hume, Ill., sends her son's name, Gerald, and calls the Society "a good thing." Mabel and Ella Cash (13 and 11), of Litchfield' Ill., resolved to join Nov. 3rd. By the way, perhaps these are the Mothers of the Society. Julia and Lola Cox, of Cox, Mo., are 11 and eight. Both send true funny stories. This time I will give Lola's:

"When my sister was little she broke her doll. The first time she ever saw me she looked and said, 'Isn't she pretty, mamma? And she won't break a bit!'" Nina Martin, Hawthorn, Kan., furnishes a true funny story: Beulah Campbell, two years old, had seen her mother pick a chicken. Shortly afterward, seeing her grandfather shingle one of her little uncles' heads, she asked, "Grandpa, why don't you pick my other uncle's head?" Floyd Chastain Reid, Ft. Lyon, Mo., lives in the country. He is eight. He tells this funny story:

Floyd's little city cousin is visiting him; when he is riding and comes to a creek or pond he cries, "Oh, look at that bunch of water!" or, "See that pile of water!" Once when Floyd was telling him where a branch ran to, they came to a large "bunch of water," and the cousin asked what it was. Floyd explained that it was a pond. "And where does the pond run to?" asked his cousin.

Eltah J. Vince, of Ventura, Cal., used to live in Huntsville, Mo., which was named for her grandfather. Two of her uncles are preachers, Geo. Shanklin and Bartlett Anderson; and another uncle is Senator Anderson of Missouri. She is nine; she has a sister who is seven, and neither have missed a school day this year. She says, "We have no church in the country, but go to town (twelve miles away) twice a month to church. We live on the big blue ocean, and see the ships. It is warm here, and our yard is full of flowers and they bloom all winter, and the trees are full of oranges. I went in the yard and got some flowers for the table this morning. Tell your little girls to write to me." I hope some of the Society will do so. Perhaps Eltah will send you an orange seed; or she might go down to the seashore and catch an oyster and put it in her envelope. I wish I could give her a bucketful of snow for a bucketful of oranges. But perhaps they don't eat oranges in the South; you know in the country people don't drink cream—they save it for butter. I would hate to see all my trees full of oranges and know that all had to be shipped North to market!

Other members of the Society are Clarence L. Blakely (nine), Williams, Ia.; Alvin Burleigh Cash (10), Pennirille, Ind.; Mattie Wilson (18), Troy, Mo.; E. Witmer Pardee (11), Snyder, N. Y.; Elizabeth Valpey (10), Warm Springs, Cal.; Delight M. Shafer, Lebanon, Tex.; Jessie L. Butler (12), Roseville, Ill.; Madge Masters, Ozark, Ark., (12). Here is a little band in Harlan, Iowa: three sisters (17, 15 and 12). They are Maude, Grace and Ethel Taylor. "We are three," they write, "and all very fond of reading, history especially. We are reading the Bible through now. We all belong to the Christian Church. We hope to have our names on the Honor Roll in three months." Children, wouldn't you like to peep in on that circle of girls? Just think! there are enough in one family to play any reasonable kind of game, or sing three parts in a song; besides that, one can clean the dishes, one can sweep and one can sit up in the parlor and be company.

I haven't said anything about members in Plattsburg. You have heard that a prophet doesn't have much honor in his own country, but that is not the case with me; perhaps I am not a prophet. Any way, there are a lot of members in my town, but I cannot name any more this time, because if I took up the whole CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST some of the other writers, who have great long pieces, might not like to be crowded out. Week after next I will tell you about other members. Next week you will have another chapter of the continued story. In the meantime f wish all would write me their ten favorite books, and three favorite authors; if you are fifteen, or older, write what were your favorites before you were fifteen. We are going to hold an election, and you are to vote; I will print a list of the books and authors who receive the biggest vote, also the names of those who come nearest to naming the most popular. Remember, the Bible is not counted in the ten books, because I take it for granted that is the favorite of all. And if any one has a true funny story, let's have it.

Literature.

TRAITS OF CHARACTER. By H. F. Kletzing, A. M., Kletzing Bros., Naperville, Ill., publishers, cloth, 365 pages, $1.00.

The above book ought to catch the eye and ear of young people at once. It is a compilation of events, incidents, anecdotes and pictures illustrating and impressing phases of character that ought to be known to all character builders. Its short biographies of prominent men and women are a special and valuable feature of the book.

MAGAZINES.

In the December Chautauquan Mr. John Gennings, of the Central News Staff of London, writes very entertainingly of "The Immensity of London." With statistics of its area, population, wealth and poverty is woven much of interest in regard to the municipal life of the city, the functions of the county council, the system of elections, the parks, clubs and street life. Ten illustrations accompany the text.

Dr. William A. Hammond, the eminent specialist in nervous diseases, has written for the next volume of the Youth's Companion an article of absorbing interest on the wonderful things done by sleep-walkers, and shows that everybody, in some degree at least, is a sleep-walker. The Companion also announces articles by Dr Mary Putnam Jacobi on "The Growing Child," and on quarantine methods by Surgeon-General Wiman.

For ten years mystery has shrouded the sudden taking off of the Crown Prince of Austria, but Edward A. Steiner in the December Woman's Home Companion makes known for the first time in America the tragic story of the downfall and death of the heir to the Austrian throne. Mr. Steiner gives this fragment of modern history the vivifying touch of one who has personal knowledge of the facts he relates, which occurred during his residence in that country.

The December number of St. Nicholas is full of the spirit of Christmas times. The song contest of the troubadors, "My Little Jim Crow," "The Boys of Siberia," "Football of Long ago," "Fox and Geese," "An Amateur Kris-Kringle" and "The Dream of Toy" are some of the interesting themes of the present number. The illustrations are attractive. Birch, Varian Potthast and Blanche McManus are among the popular artists who have contributed to the spirit and life of this popular number.

In the Christmas number of the American Monthly Review of Reviews some of the most noteworthy of the famous paintings of the life of Christ by J. James Tissot are reproduced. Clifton Harby Levy writes on Tissot's life and method in painting and Ernest Knaufft contributes a criticism of the portraits from an artist's point of view. The collection is now on exhibition in New York and will be shown in several of the leading American cities before Mr. Tissot returns to France. It is beyond question the most important series of representations of Christ made in modern times.

The Century for December presents a list of authors at once attractive and assuring of an interesting number of this favorite magazine. Among these we mention the following names: Lieut. Hobson, Captain Sigsbee, Prof. Wheeler, Frank R. Stockton, et al. Captain Sigsbee's article is devoted to the explosion of the Maine, being his second paper thereon. In this paper he gives his own experience at the time of the explosion and states that the Maine, in his judgment, was blown up from without. The cover of the December Century represents the visit of the Magi to Bethlehem. It was designed by Tissott and printed in colors in Paris.

Most people appreciate a good thing at a fair price, but some few will only have the things that cost the most money.

The Ivory is the favorite soap of most people. Some few want the high-priced toilet soaps and think they must be better because they cost more. No soap is more carefully made, or is made of better materials, than Ivory Soap.

A WORD OF WARNING.—There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

Copyright, 1898, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati.

The Christmas number of Scribner's Magazine has several notable art features. The brilliant cover in silver, gold, and colors is from a prize design by Albert Herter. There are also sixteen pages of color-printing of an unusual kind—reproducing Maxfield Parrish's very original scheme of illustration and decoration, accompanying F. J. Stimson's poetical version of a scene from Wagner's "Rhine-Gold." In the article on "John Ruskin as a Painter," Mr. Spielmann has included reproductions of many unpublished paintings and sketches, secured only by reason of his long personal friendship with Ruskin. Another artistic feature is the frontispiece by the young artist, Walter Appleton Clark, whose reputation has been made in the pages of Scribner's.

GOD has given man a whole Bible, and he desires him to know and use it all Some of us, though, seldom read outside of a few certain chapters and books. So far as we are practically concerned, it would appear that the Old Testament, except the Psalms, might almost as well be in the Koran. This ought not to be so. We cannot use the Bible aright until we make ourselves familiar with all its contents, though certain portions may more directly concern us than others. Let us strive to read it thoroughly hereafter.

THE PROSPERITY, DECLINE AND FALL OF JUDAH.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The lessons of the quarter, of which this is a review, have dealt with the story of the kingdom of Judah, the smaller portion into which the kingdom of David and Solomon was divided at the death of the latter. The whole course of its history continued from 937 B. C., the date of the revolt of the ten tribes, to 586 B. C., the date of the downfall of Jerusalem and the beginning of the Babylonian captivity. During these centuries the condition of the kingdom rose and fell as the character of the government was weak or strong.

Judah shared with Israel its northern neighbor and rival the possession of the faith of the earlier prophets. But this religion in Judah was the normal and prescribed worship, while in the north it was scarcely to be called a national religion, but struggled from the beginning with foreign cults that were introduced and fostered by kings like Jeroboam and Ahab. It seems never to have been considered necessary that the monarch of the northern kingdom should be a supporter of the Jehovah worship. Prophets like Amos and Hosea, not to speak of Elijah, could only protest against these heathen faiths as impotent and degrading. But the national faith was esteemed dangerous for political reasons in the northern kingdom, as it brought the people into a unity of sentiment with their southern neighbors of Judah, and thus was likely to bring about a return of the Davidic dynasty to its supremacy over both kingdoms. In these facts will be seen the reason why in the northern kingdom the successful kings were always the opposers of the worship of Jehovah, and the periods of greatest prosperity were those of greatest religious decline; while in the southern kingdom the opposite was true—the greatest kings were those who supported the ancestral faith, repaired the temple, encouraged reformations and opposed idolatry.

Of such kings the most conspicuous were Asa and Jehosaphat, Joash, Uzziah, Hezekiah and Josiah, and under them all the kingdom reached a high period of prosperity and the religion centered at the temple was duly observed. Under such kings also prophecy was encouragad and the preaching of such men as Micah, Isaiah, Jeremiah and others was aided by the royal influence.

The quarter's lessons present phases of life in Judah which illustrate these various forces working in favor of or against religion and morality. First, there is the reformation under Asa, whose reign, with that of Jehosaphat, his son, presents features of special interest as an example of what can be accomplished by a ruler whose purposes are high. Likewise, in lesson three there is told the story of the loyalty of Joash to the interests of the temple and his gathering of funds for its repair. These are characteristic pictures of the best selections of the earlier history of Judah. Then comes the period of Isaiah, whose life covered the interval of forty years from the death of Uzziah in 739 to the invasion by Sennacherib in 701. The story of his call to service is told in lesson IV. The vision of the holiness of God which impressed the young man with his own sinfulness and led to his pardon and his self-devotion to the service of a prophet, together with the divine warning of the apparent failure of his work, are narrated. From the book which bears his name there is presented in lesson V. one of Isaiah's characteristic pictures of the future, the golden age of peace when the kingdom of God shall have come. The influence of Isaiah must have been strong and persistent at the court of Hezekiah, for we find that king becoming a reformer of religion in his realm and observing a great Passover, the like of which had not been known for centuries. The ministry of Isaiah closed with the remarkable fulfillment of his predictions of the seige of Jerusalem and the overthrow of the Assyrian forces.

The third period gives to us glimpses of the last days of Judah and some of the factors which led to its downfall. Lesson VIII. tells of Manasseh's sin which wrought such havoc among the believers in Jehovah, and brought in such a flood of idolatry and superstition that even the royal repentance produced but a temporary reaction in favor of the true faith. Lesson IX. is an intercalary lesson on temperance, illustrating from the Proverbs the choice and outcome of the two paths. Lesson X. tells of the finding of the lawbook in the reign of Josiah, under the influence of which a great reformation was wrought. Lesson XI. introduces to us a king of very different sort, though he was the son of Josiah. Jehoiakim was godless, extravagant, and a hater of all that pertained to the true faith, and when the writings of Jeremiah were brought to him and read he cut them up with a knife and threw them on a braisure of coals, thinking thus to destroy the prophet's work. Such reigns as this and such a condition of the kingdom as they produced could only have one result, and that was the downfall of Jerusalem, the punishment of her kings and the exile of her people, who were carried away into the distant regions of Babylon to remain under discipline until a new generation arose who could go back to the old home without danger of those political and commercial temptations which had wrought disaster in the earlier days. Thus in rapid outline the leading features of that national history, the most interesting in literature, are presented in the lessons of the past quarter.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

These lessons present numberless points of value to teachers and students. It is the first business of a ruler to reform what is deformed (I). The best of campaigns is one in which the people are educated to a new sense of responsibility and devotion. This Hezekiah accomplished by his messengers; this we can accomplish to-day by the preaching of the gospel and by Christian literature (II). The repair of what has fallen into neglect, not only in religious buildings, but in religious ideas, should be the effort of every lover of truth. This work of devotion to the service of God may be costly, but nothing that is good comes without effort and sacrifice (III). The call of service comes to every person as truly as it came to Isaiah. God needs servants and prophets to-day as much as ever, and they need the same preparation for their work, though it need not come in miraculous form (IV). The religions of the world point to a golden age long past. The true religion points to an age yet to be realized but already begun by the ministry of Jesus. The characteristics of that time of blessedness are peace and kindness (V). The observance of the ordinances of religion, though they are few and simple, is necessary to a loyal obedience to God (VI). Fearlessness in the face of danger is one of the characterics of those who trust in God (VII). Repentance is always the key that opens the door of blessing (VIII). Every child stands at the point where the ways divide. The choice of the right path is the secret of success (IX). The Bible is truly found when it is approached in a reverent spirit, when it is liberated from the superstitions and speculations of men, and when real satisfaction is found in its study (X). We do not need to burn nor cut to pieces the Bible in order to destroy it. It is destroyed to all intents and purposes by any one who neglects it (XI). The consequences of a course of conduct often reveal the character of the conduct itself. Sin may be discovered most surely in its results (XII).

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 25.

TRUTHS TAUGHT BY CHRISTMAS.

(LUKE 2:8-20.)

The old glad season of Christmas rolls round with all its lessons and its memories of other years. What old, old lessons they are, and all the sweeter and all the more needful for that they are so old. Some things humanity learns in childhood need ever to be learned again, and yet again, even to second childhood; even then, perhaps, we shall need to sit at the Great Teacher's feet, to hear them over still. Your little children love their old stories best, and so we grown up children never tire of learning our oldest sweet lessons, with their depths of unsounded truth and their reaches of unexplored thought, over and over again. Welcome happy Christmas, with lessons as old as Jesus' name, as old as motherhood, as old as birth and life and love! The older thou growest the dearer! The whiter thy hoary locks the welcomer!

Is it not the very mixture of the lessons, the mingled strains which make up the harmony, the blending of light and shade, the minor chords of joy and pain, that makes the message of Christmas doubly pleasant? Mixed with the joy and eagerness of the shepherds, with the song of the angels, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy," is the subdued light of sadness in the mother's face, the hush and awe and wander of Joseph. This mixed message has been detected by the great artists and in their "Holy Nights" and their "Madonnas," they have, the best of them, echoed yet again the minor strains of its sweet harmony. For is there not harmony after all, in the mingling of joy and pain?

"We look before and after,
And pine for what is not,
E'en our sincerest laughter,
With some pain is fraught,
Our sweetest songs are those Which tell of saddest thought."

Although, perhaps, that poem contains a trifle too much of the sadder element for Christmas, yet even this gladdest season of the year weaves together this double message of joy and pain, this interweaving of light and shade, which makes up the music and the beauty of life.

Once a year the whole world pauses, as if Joshua had again bidden the busy sun of this world's activities to stand still, while man, woman and child are forced to meditate, as the songs of joy fill the air, on that birth and its meaning. Joy is the prevailing note; deliverance, redemption, bounty, outpoured love, forgiveness, universal mercy—all these swell in the hearts of the more thoughtful, as the lessons of the day, while ever the smallest child in the poorest home sees something in this Christmas day, something different from all other days, with its sprig of green and its toy. The joy of the giving is perhaps the highest joy that comes, the father's and the mother's joy, the son's and the daughter's joy.

But besides all this chorus of sounding happiness steals into our lives also the shade of sadness that stole into Mary's heart as she foresaw the destiny of pain that awaited Him. How many a parent's heart well-nigh breaks as it sees how little it can do for the one it loves, how hindered by one circumstance or another, poverty, illness, some misfortune of the child itself—who knows what! And the season brings with it, then, its great mysterious lesson of the sword-thrust through the heart. But nevertheless, in that night of the nativity the stars shine, and best of all the Star of Bethlehem, while over the heart of all the weary and the sad and the lonely, the poor, the tempted, and even the forsaken, if they will all but open their hearts to His holy influence, will be poured the mingled message of Him who was born in Bethlehem: "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you. Peace on earth, good will to men." O, we would not have the lesson to be one of unmixed and brazen joy! That most perfect mother's life had its iron in the soul. That most perfect Master's life had its Gethsemane and cross. How, then, can we fulfill his word, "Be ye perfect," unless we feel the iron of woe and the cross of sacrifice? Let us learn, then, in all the joy of this happiest time—and welcome all its sunshine, too, Endeavorers, with open hearts—the lesson of Mary, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word," and the lesson of Jesus, "Not my will, but thine be done."

The Gospels and the Life of Jesus.

It is natural for the readers of the Gospels to think that the life of Jesus is quite fully contained in these four narratives; and yet nothing could be further from the fact. The Gospels are indeed scarcely more than brief tracts whose purpose was not to tell the story of Jesus' life, but to present some phases of it or some incidents from it which would prove convincing to those who read or heard. Perhaps in no particular do the Gospel narratives present more convincing proofs of the divine element in them than in the selection of material and the brevity of the accounts where so much must have impressed the writer as worthy of record. Out of the vast mass of sayings and doings of Jesus there have come to us what seem exceedingly scanty memorials of his life. And yet these are amply sufficient for all the purposes of the gospel.

We are also struck with the singular absence of attention to the order of events in the life of Jesus and the corresponding lack of notes regarding the times at which the various incidents took place. The writers seemed but little concerned with the sequences of events and made but little effort to connect them in regular manner, either with each other or with external events that would have given them an orderly setting. This is especially true in the Synoptic Gospels. The Gospel of John much more frequently refers to feasts held by the Jews (Ju. 5:1; 7:1-10; 12:1; 13:1), and a few times notes are found in Luke relating to the political history of Palestine (Luke 1:5; 2:1, 2; 3:1, 2). The order of events in Jesus' life seems to be most clearly presented in the Gospel of Mark, if we are at liberty to say that any of the Gospels attempt any regular arrangement. But this characteristic of Mark we should expect from the fact that he deals more with the external events of Jesus' life and less with his teachings. In general Matthew and Luke follow Mark's arrangement of material, but without any apparent effort to conform to any plan of time.

It is this fact which makes the task of producing a chronology of the life of Jesus so difficult. If the motive of the Gospel writers had been historical or chronological the task would have been comparatively easy; but their purpose was far other than this. And it is fortunate from every point of view, save that of the student of history, that the records were prepared just as they were. In the large sphere of the world's spiritual education we should have been the losers by any other plan than that which was followed. As it is the Gospels present four views of the life of Jesus, three of which stand closely connected with each other, and are yet quite independent of each other in spirit and purpose, and the fourth wholly unlike the other three. These four narratives present a composite picture of the Master which, though it omits many details which we should greatly desire to know, still preserves to us the leading characteristics of his person and his work, and thus gives to us the basis for our faith and hope.

It has been suggested by some of our readers who are taking the first year's course, that the Bible readings provided in the October Bulletin do not fit their course of reading, which is a general review of the Bible on the basis of the first handbook of last year, on Bible Study. It is therefore the purpose to present hereafter two sets of Bible readings, one for those taking the introductory year and one for those pursuing the current year's work, and in the January Bulletin this change will be made.

GLENN.

Mrs. America Craig Glenn, born in Harrison Co., Ky., Oct. 19, 1818, died Nov. 24, 1898, aged 80 years, one month and five days. She was married Nov. 4, 1838, to Jno. M. Glenn, who died Aug. 25, 1876. To this union were born ten children, eight of whom had crossed the silent river before her, five of them being grown before they died. She leaves two devoted sons—Pearl Glenn, of Paris, Mo., and French Glenn, of Nevada, Mo.,—to mourn their loss in her departure. She was a true, practical Christian, a member of the Church of Christ for several years before exchanging the cross for her crown. In bereavement and cares she lived a noble life and has gone through much tribulation to a sorrowless shore.

HARMISON.

Emma E. Tesler, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Tesler, was born in Derry Township Jan. 15, 1863 and died Nov. 19, 1898. She was married to Jessie L. Harmison Oct. 31, 1883. She united with the Christian Church at El Dora, Ill., August, 1895. She has in every way proven herself to be a faithful and practical member of the church. She leaves a husband, two brothers and three sisters besides a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. J. D. Darney.

LUCAS.

Albert Wilbraham Lucas, eldest son of Bro. and Sister J. P. Lucas, died in Colorado City, Col., the home of his parents, Monday morning, Nov. 28, 1898, aged 17 years, seven months and seven days. Albert was born in Vandalia, Michigan, April 21, 1881. He confessed Christ as his personal Savior and Lord in Emporia, Kansas, March 25, 1894, and was baptized by his father, who was at that time pastor of the Emporia Church of Christ. Albert was faithful in the discharge of his duties as a member of the church, Sunday-school and Society of Christian Endeavor. Bro. and Sister Lucas came to Colorado City from Creston, Iowa, last July, on account of the illness of their son. They hoped that this healthful climate would arrest the progress of the disease and prolong the life of their son, but it was too late. The dear boy made a heroic struggle for life, but in vain. He had an ambition to live that he might do good—especially that he might be helpful to his father in caring for the family. Albert was an unusually good boy. Though for months he was feeble, because of the disease which finally conquered him, he was not confined to his bed for a single day. He was sitting in his chair when the arrow of death smote him. He quietly fell asleep in Jesus as the bright rays of the morning sun were gilding the snow crowned summit of Pike's Peak, portentous of the dawning glory of that bright and eternal day that shall come to all such pure spirits through the mediation of the Son of God. Just nine months ago Bro. and Sister Lucas buried their eldest daughter, Nettie Glenn, in Bedford, Iowa, in which place Bro. Lucas served as pastor from 1883 to 1888. It was Albert's request that his body should be placed by the side of that of his sister. It was on the morning, therefore, of Nov. 29th that the grief-stricken father started to Bedford on the mournful journey. Albert leaves, besides his father and mother, one sister, Leona, and a younger brother, George, with a host of friends in Colorado Springs, Colorado City, and elsewhere, to mourn his departure. But they do not mourn as do those who have no hope through Jesus Christ our Lord. Albert and Nettie, hail and farewell! We shall meet you in the sweet by and by! J. P. Lucas is pastor of the Christian Church in Colorado City, and is greatly beloved by his people, and is highly esteemed in the community. The pastors of the Baptist and Methodist Churches assisted in the funeral services.

METZ.

On Oct. 15th, 1898, Lucinda Metz departed this life at the age of 74 years, five months and 13 days. She was born in Cincinnati, O. She died as she had lived with an abiding faith in Christ and was ready to go to the Savior. She leaves husband, three daughters and three sons. Mother of the writer. A. D. Metz.

Wapella, Ill., Nov. 24, 1898.

MORIS.

Nelson Moris died at his residence near Fairfield, Wash., Nov. 22, 1898, at the extreme age of 82 years. He was born in Bucks Co., Pa., Dec. 27, 1816. When in his childhood his parents moved to Indiana where he spent his boyhood and early manhood, remaining there until 1863 when he crossed the plains and settled at the old homestead where he died. He was a kind and affectionate husband and father and a loyal citizen, but best of all he was a devoted Christian. He spent over a half century in the service of our Master. A wife and seven children survive him. The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the Mount Hope Church, at 12 o'clock on Thanksgiving Day. His remains were interred in the Mount Hope Cemetery. A large concourse of relatives and friends followed the remains to its last resting-place.

Melford W. Smith.

Mrs. Flora Page French, youngest child of Moses P. Page, passed from death unto life, Nov. 6, '98, at Baker City, Oregon, where she was staid in the progress of an overland journey from Washington to Arizona, in search of healing air for her lungs. Her husband, Warren French, her sister, Mary Alice Page, and her three-year-old baby, Eugenie, were the only relatives beside her during her last earth-days, but strangers there were gracious friends, because one of Christ's own "was sick" they ministered unto her and, unto him. Life was sweet to Flora because there were those who loved her so, and whom she loved with joyfulness. She had a brave spirit and ever made a gallant stand against besetting hindrances to the realization of an ideal home here, but when her body fainted with its load of pain she leaned hard upon her Savior and longed to be at rest. All her asking was for the blessed Word and dear old hymns. And so she slept in peace, knowing that underneath were the everlasting arms. The earthly tabernacle was laid away, for the time, where her glad spirit had left it. So young, and already acquainted in two worlds! She was born in Illinois, Nov. 17, 1871, confessed Christ at the age of 13 in Allerton, married in Iowa, June 17, 1893, was a mother in 1895 and in 1898, saw "the King in his beauty in His ain countree." P.

SILCOTT.

Mrs. A. J. Silcott was born in Holmes County, Ohio, Jan. 22, 1825; died Nov. 12, 1898. The deceased united with the Ripley Christian Church in 1846, and remained a faithful and zealous Christian till called to her reward. She leaves a husband, two daughters and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss. Funeral conducted by the writer.

M. Gorsuch.

STRUBINGER.

Burt F. Strubinger, son of Thomas C. and Sarah A. Strubinger, was born Oct. 25th, 1877, near El Dora, Ill., and died Nov. 21, 1898, at the home of his sister Mrs. Dr. Reynolds, of El Dora. He seemed to be in perfect health till Sunday when stricken with paralysis and lived only about 24 hours. He leaves a mother, three sisters and three brothers to mourn their loss. He united with the Christian Church March 26th, 1898 and was a practical member of the church honoring his profession in social and business life. He will be greatly missed by us all. J. D. Dabney.

El Dora, Ill.

TAYLOR.

Mrs. Mary Jane Taylor, wife of Chas. G. Taylor, died in Fairfield, Iowa, Nov. 5, 1898, of typhoid fever. Sister Taylor made her confession of faith in Christ under the ministry of Bro J. B. Vawter and was baptized by him in 1877, and united with the church at Big Cedar, Iowa. She was an affectionate wife and daughter, gentle and kind in spirit and self-sacrificing in her work and care for others, and greatly beloved by all who knew her. She died comforted by her faith, and "was anxious to depart and be with Christ." Her husband and her aged parents are in great sorrow over their sore bereavement. The writer conducted the funeral obsequies, assisted by Bro. J. A. Raines. Leander Lane.

THOMSON.

S. H. Thomson, 1335, 27th St., Des Moines, Ia., was found dead at the corner of 20th and Q Sts., Nov. 22nd. Bro. Thomson was employed by the Keystone View Co., of St. Louis. He was well dressed, but death, according to Dr. Furay, was plainly due to exposure in the storm with insufficient clothing. The remains were given in charge of G. H Bever Undertaking Co., South Omaha Neb., who was ordered by relatives, on the 25th to send them to Joe Staellman, Dresden, Mo. Bro. Thomsom, whose home was in Missouri, had for many years been a resident of University Place, Des Moines, Ia., where he had been much of the time attending Drake University. Besides his school work, he had at Des Moines, at state and district conventions and on the road in Iowa and Missouri, represented the Christian Publishing Company, all of which gave him a very wide circle of acquaintances and as he was an earnest, Christian worker he had a great many warm personal friends. True to his custom, when he, several weeks ago, located in South Omaha he immediately identified himself with the work of the church there and was well known and much loved by the comgregation, who were making arrangements for his interment, if his friends had not been heard from. Bro. Thomson was, we believe, a member of the Volunteer Mission Band of Drake University and was planning to, at an early date, go to a mission field and he thought it more than probable that he would join his friend and fellowstudent, Bro. G. W. Coffman, Damo, C. P., India. Bro. Thomson's life was pure, he was a devoted follower of Christ and he leaves a wide circle of personal friends who will mourn his sudden takin away from life's industries in which he had high ambitions. P.

TROUT.

Jeremiah Henson Trout was born in Trimble County, Ky., March 2, 1821 and died at his home in Waco County, Oregon, Oct. 23, 1898. Bro. Trout confessed Christ in his 19th year, and very earnestly and faithfully maintained his faith to the end. On his 27th birthday he married Mary Ewing, of Clark County, Mo. He lived in Warren County, Mo., from 1846 till 1863, then two years in Clark County, then 16 years in Scotland County, whence he moved to Oregon in 1881. He left a widow, one son and two daughters. Two children live in California, and one here. P. P. Underwood.

Boyd, Ore., Nov. 23.

WIGHT.

John Morton Wight was born March 30, 1821, and passed to his rest Nov. 4, 1898, in his 78th year. He was born near Meadville, Pa., but spent 77 years in Andover, O. He studied law and was admitted to the bar from the law office of Senator Ben F. Wade. He became a Christian about 30 years ago, and was faithful to the last. His wife preceded him nearly three years and God made these, to him, blessed years of preparation. The last book he read was the Bible, and the Holy Spirit filled his soul with peace, patience, gentleness and love. He was an elder of the Church of Christ at Padonaram as long as it existed. He leaves three sons and one daughter—William, of New York; Adelbert, of Salt Lake City; Frank, who was living with him when departed, and Iola, who is now living in Glendora, Cal. F. A. WIGHT.

WILLIAMS.

Died, Sister Minerva Jane Williams, whose maiden name was Lowery; was born Dec. 11, 1857. She was married to William C. Williams at the age of 27, Sept. 16, 1884. To this union was born seven children, five of whom are living; two boys and three girls. Sister Williams departed this life Nov. 18, 1898, age 41, living husband, five children, two sisters and one brother to mourn their loss. About one year ago the subject of this sketch became the victim of the dreaded disease, consumption, was confined to her room for many months. Her life grew more and more feeble, until at last her frail form succumbed to the inevitable. Sister Williams became a member of the Christian Church, being baptized by J. H. Coffee, Oct. 20, 1878. She lived a consistent Christian and was loved by all who knew her, and before her spirit took its flight she frequently talked of her ample preparations and willingness to die, excepting that she mourned in thought of being taken from her children. Surely it was God's benevolent disposition to remove Sister Williams from earth that she might enter the elysian abode of everlasting beatitudes. We say in condolence to the bereaved. How irretrievable indeed is our loss! Officiator,

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Publishers' Notes.

The Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, published by the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo., is ready for delivery. It is ably written and contains maps and general helps for the study of the International Bible School Lessons. It is a commendable book. It has about 400 pages and is well bound.—New England Messenger, Everett, Mass.

Dr. I. Thayer, of New Castle, Pa., is a very competent judge of the merits of a book. He expresses his opinion of our Lesson Commentary for 1899 in the following manner:

"I have carefully examined the Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899. It shows painstaking scholarship and fidelity to the Word Its different methods of treating the text—expository, illustrative, applicatory and practical—with its suggestive questions and hints, opens the lesson fully to the understanding, and gives a wide range of thought. It is a rich storehouse from which a teacher can be fully equipped for teaching any grade of pupils. The numerous maps, illustrations, and the dictionary of Scripture proper names, with their pronunciation and meaning, are permanent and valuable features."

Send us your orders for "Christian Lesson Commentary" for 1899 now, that it may be in your hands before the beginning of the year. This would give ample time for the preparation of the lesson the first Sunday in the coming year. With the proper use of Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899 no teacher can fail to do proficient work as a Sunday-school teacher. It is a storehouse of thoughts on all phases of lesson text, and the busy teacher will find that much time and research can be saved by going each week to this book for preparation of the lesson to be taught. The appearance of the book makes it an ornament in the home and library. It contains over 400 pages, and is neatly bound in cloth, with red edges. The price is $1 00 per copy, postpaid, or $9.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

It is refreshing to find a writer so well versed in the history of the Jewish people as the author of "King Saul." J. Breckenridge Ellis proposes to write a number of volumes like this one on the historical characters of the Bible, and the ability he has shown for such a task is apparent in this volume as well as the one that preceded, "In the Days of Jehu." His ability is apparent, not only in the conception he has formed, the manner in which he portrays the characters, but also in his knowledge of the events in which these heroes were conspicuous figures. It is sincerely to be hoped that this series of historical sketches of Bible characters may find appreciative readers.—Dr. H. Christopher, Editor Medical Herald, St. Joseph, Mo.

I have just finished reading that delightful little book, "Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis, of Dallas, Texas, and what a refreshing and helpful thing it is! It is a charming bouquet of flowers beneath which you will find precious fruit. The author lifts the flowers at the close of each fragrant chapter and spreads the fruit before you, and you gratefully help yourself and are filled with heaven's own fullness. It should be read by both young and old. It is beautifully bound in cloth and illustrated. Price 75 cents.—S. M. Martin.

Write to the Christian Publishing Co. for their catalogue, from which you can select an appropriate book for a Christmas present to your friends. A good book is "medicine for the soul" of the careful reader, and a gift of this kind is a constant reminder of the donor. A large number of good books are found published in this paper. Make your selection and send in your order before the holidays.

Week of Prayer Program.

Topics suggested for the Week of Prayer by the Evangelical Alliance for the United States, January 1-8, 1899.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 1ST.—SERMONS.

Christian Unity: "I in them and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one."—John 17:23.

MONDAY, JANUARY 2D.—PRAYERFUL CONFESSION.

In view of God's freely offered grace, too little welcomed and received; Christ's abiding presence, too little discerned and felt; the Spirit's guidance and power, too little desired and yielded to; the privilege and duty of Christians witnessing, too little prized and fulfilled. Matt. 7:11; Titus 2:11; Matt. 28:20; John 15:4, 5, 10; Joel 2:28, 29; John 16:7, 8, 13; John 1:41; Acts 1:8.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 3D.—THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL.

Prayer: That each member of the Church Universal, being born of the Spirit, may depart from all iniquity; may be fruitful in good works; may be faithful in prayer; may be filled with love for the brethren and for all men; and that the several branches of the Church Universal may live and work "in the unity of the Spirit and in the bond of peace."—2 Tim. 2:19; Phil. 4:8; Matt. 7:20; Matt. 6:9, 10; Luke 18:1; John 3:14; 1 Cor. 12:4-6; Eph. 4:3.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 4TH.—NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS.

Prayer: That all peoples may duly prize civil and religious freedom, and deserve to be thus free; may faithfully obey just laws and reverence righteous authority; may cherish the brotherhood which embraces all classes and conditions of men; and may hail Christ as their peaceful Prince. That rulers may rule in the love of God and man; may seek honorable peace and international good will; and may in all public affairs, apply the Christian principles which should guide individual conduct.—John 8:32; Prov. 14:34; Acts 17:26; Isa. 2:4.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5TH.—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Prayer: That individual Christians may render loyal obedience to their Savior's last command, and take fresh courage from his last promise. That our Foreign Missionary organizations may be filled with Christlike devotion, and Christlike love toward each other; and may ever be mindful of the new lessons which experience teaches. That our missionaries may be gloriously successful, being divinely enabled to recognize providential leadings, and to make full use of the witness to Himself which God has preserved in even heathen lands. And that, to save the lost, missionaries of the cross may speedily be sent to the very ends of the earth. Mark 16:15; Acts 10: 34,35; Acts 17:23; Rom. 2:15; 10:14, 15.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 6TH.—HOME MISSIONS.

Prayer: That individual Christians may feel their sacred obligations to do their utmost toward making their own land Immanuel's land; may realize the unity of the national welfare—the peril of one member being the peril of all; and may fully perceive that the exaltation of Christ in the home land advances His kingdom in all lands. That Home Missionary organizations may be endued with the Spirit of love and power; may worthily enjoy the complete confidence of the churches; and that they may severally move forward in practical Christian comity and mutual helpfulness. Ex. 35:20-29; Isa. 2:3; 41:6, 7; 52:8; 1 Cor. 12:4-6.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7TH.—FAMILIES AND SCHOOLS.

Prayer: That the family may be reverenced as a divine institution; that all families may be held in the blessed bonds of mutual love and mutual honor; that, under God, parental affection may cherish childhood into joy, and parental example inspire to nobleness of life; and that whatever is against the Christian ideal of the family may be opposed and overcome. That all education may become nobly Christian; that such education may be more and more valued; that thus the highest well-being of both community and nation may be secured, and Christ be all and in all. Ps.68:6; Isa. 8:18; Mal. 4:6; Eph. 3:15; Job 28:28; Eph. 3:10, 11.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 8TH.—SERMONS.

The power of united effort. "And five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight."—Lev. 26:8. (Isa. 41:6, 7; Eccl. 4:12.)

Disciple Settlers Wanted.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I wish to say a few things through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with reference to our congregation. We have a little country organization ten miles west and two miles south of Wellington, three and one-half miles from Mayfield. We have a good church building, number about 30 regular members with some delinquents. We have a fairly good Sunday-school and social meetings.

Bro. Frank Talmage visits us and preaches for us one Lord's day in each month. By emigration to the Strip at the opening and since we have been considerably weakened. As other churches are close around us and nearly every one is a member of one congregation or some of the contiguous denominations we do not stand much show to increase our membership in the near future from our present population.

We are anxious to get some good families of our brethren to come in and locate with us that we may be enabled to do greater good. We have some good farms close around that can be bought at very reasonable prices. Those who have continued farming here for some years have generally succeeded. I would like to correspond with some Disciples with the view of their locating with us and helping us built up the cause of Christ in this part of our country.

With the hope that some readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may read this and be inclined to come and locate with us, I have written these lines. J. J. WILLIAMS.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The signing of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain marked an important stage in the settlement of affairs between the two nations, and yet its significance is only that it formally records what was already a foregone conclusion. The Spanish Commissioners were not in a position to do anything but yield, and the Spanish Cortez, when it meets in special session in January to consider the treaty, will not be in a position to do anything but ratify it. While signing the treaty, the Spanish Commissioners filed a protest against it. In a measure, this was a justifiable and appropriate thing to do, for it is true that the treaty was not in any sense the result of their deliberation, but was something imposed upon them. But in their protest they do not succeed in showing that the United States took any unfair advantage of its victory. The exact terms of the treaty have not yet been made public, but, as they are generally understood, it touches only upon the matters mentioned in the protocol. There will be opportunity for considering the question of acquiring one of the Carolines and arranging a commercial treaty when diplomatic relations and friendly intercourse between the two nations have been restored.

The resignation of Sir William Harcourt from the leadership of the Liberal party has the appearance of a significant event in British politics, not that it will materially modify the policy of the government either at home or abroad, but that it indicates the drift of that policy, as Sir William understands it. It is reported that the immediate occasion of his resignation was the fact that the moneyed men, who have been in the habit of furnishing the sinews of war, consider him an enemy of capital and refuse to contribute to the party treasury so long as his leadership continues. Back of that lies the fact that Sir William considers the new liberalism, which is really "Roseberryite imperialism," as out of harmony with the established principles of the Liberal party. If the Liberal party wants to change its principles and enter upon a new career, well and good, but it cannot take him with it. Since Lord Roseberry represents this new Liberal imperialism, as expressed in his recent speeches touching upon the Fashoda incident and the relations of England and France in general, and represents it better than any one else, it is probable that he will, after due persuasion, accept the leadership which naturally belongs to him.

The Dreyfus case is progressing quite satisfactorily in the hands of the Court of Cassation; likewise the case of Col. Picquart has been brought up for a re-trial by this court. Col. Picquart was degraded and imprisoned after a court martial trial for nobody knows exactly what, except that while a member of the government he expressed a belief in the innocence of Dreyfus, and the civil trial will doubtless do him justice. The chief thing to be feared now is the indiscreet zeal of the friends of these men. Perhaps the whole French military administration is rotten to the core, but if so, the court will find it out and it will be more effectual for the friends or Dreyfus to wait for the court to proclaim it than to howl about it in the Chamber of Deptuies. Last week a member of that body made an inflammatory speech denouncing the army and the government in unmeasured terms. The immediate result was a fight on the floor of the house, but the more important consequence of the trial was the excitement of prejudice against the cause of reversion and of a disposition to stand by the army right or wrong. The government has done the right thing; i. e., it has put the two cases into the hands of the supreme civil tribunal, and it deserves the vote of confidence which it received after this speech in the Chamber. Let us wait.

The resignation of Secretary Bliss from his position in the Cabinet has not yet been officially announced, but a report to that effect is generally credited. The reasons assigned are ill health and pressure of business. Mr. Bliss entered the Cabinet reluctantly and with no expectation of finishing the term. With a vacant Cabinet position and a vacant ambassadorship at the Court of St. James, the political gossips have ample scope for speculation and the President's seventy million unofficial advisers are overwhelming him with suggestions. One prediction among many is that the vacancy in the Cabinet will give an opportunity for the appointment of some Westerner in recognition of the cordial support which the administration has received from the states west of the Mississippi. The West being recognized in that way, Mr. Choate, of New York, could be appointed to the ambassadorship.

In 1803 the Louisiana Territory, extending from the Mississippi River to the Rocky Mountains, was ceded by France to the United States. It was the greatest attempt at "expansion" in our history and the century has justified the attempt. It is none too soon to begin now to plan for a celebration of the centenary of that event, which shall be on a scale commensurate with its historical importance. After much preliminary agitation, the governor of Missouri has issued a call to the fourteen other states, which were carved out of this territory, to send delegates to a conference to be held in St. Louis, Jan. 10, to consider plans for a World's Fair in 1903. It seems to be taken by general consent that this is the most desirable and practicable form of celebration and that St. Louis is the most appropriate location for an exposition in commemoration of the Louisiana purchase.

If the Nicaraguan Canal question fails of a speedy and satisfactory settlement it will not be for lack of congressional bills on that topic. There are now three bills before the House and two before the Senate, representing as many different plans for the construction of the canal. Besides these, Chairman Hepburn has yet another plan, magnificent in its simplicity and sublime in its utter disregard of present treaties, diplomatic probabilities and existing conditions generally. The plan is to persuade Nicaragua to cede absolutely to the United States a strip of land extending across the isthmus at the proper point, and there to dig the ditch. It is suggested that probably Mr. Hepburn's object, in proposing this as the most plausible scheme, is to defeat the project altogether. Senator Morgan has brought up his bill in the Senate, but probably the discussion will not become really serious until the commission, which has been investigating the case with the aid of engineers and experts during the last six months, makes its report, about the beginning of the year. The strong point of the Morgan bill, according to its own claims, is that it provides for the construction of the canal and for all the governmental control that is necessary or desirable, and yet, by leaving the enterprise in the hands of the Maritime Company, does not violate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty with England.

The visit of the Presidential party to the Peace Jubilee at Atlanta was the occasion of a mighty celebration, the dominant note of which was a joyful recognition of more complete reunion of the North and South as the outcome of the war. The President himself sounded this note in his speech by suggesting that the time had come when the nation ought to take under its care the graves of Confederate soldiers equally with those of Union soldiers. To carry out this suggestion it would be necessary only to transform the Confederate cemeteries into national cemeteries and relieve the Confederate associations of the expense of caring for them. It could be easily done with no considerable expenditure, and would be an appropriate manifestation of that closer unity of the nation which we all recognize as one of the most precious results of our foreign war.

In his speech at Savannah, Ga., President McKinley states the Philippine problem in a proper light when he asked the question: "If, following the clear precepts of duty, territory falls to us and the welfare of an alien people requires our guidance and protection, who will shrink from the responsibility, grave though it may be?" This is exactly the point of view which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has insisted on since Dewey's victory at Manila. There are politicians who do not look at the problem in this light, but who so far misconceive the spirit of their own government and of the people as to suppose that there is a disposition to ignore the rights and the best interests of the Filippinos for our own national gain. Nothing can be further, we are sure, from the feeling and purpose of the President and of the great mass of the American people whose wishes he correctly represents. The whole problem as to what is the best thing to be done for the welfare of these people is yet to be solved, but there is no solution in the turning of these people back under the rule of Spain, or in deserting them at once without giving such guidance and protection as they will surely need for a time. We do not doubt that American statesmanship will be equal to this emergency as it has proved itself equal to similar emergencies in the past.

The President's visit through the South seems to have supplied all that was lacking to obliterate the line of sectionalism between the North and the South. His speeches at Atlanta, at Montgomery and at Savannah were marked by such a spirit of broad Americanism and fraternity, and such sincere appreciation of the Southern people and the part which they played in the recent drama of war, as to quite win the hearts of the people of that section. His suggestion that the government should share in the duty of caring for the graves of the Confederate dead has awakened the profoundest feeling throughout the South, and as one of their leaders has expressed it, "has made them love the union once more." We have no doubt that in this suggestion the President voices the sentiment of the great body of the people of the North. The Southern people have demonstrated their loyalty to our common flag and their love of our common country, beyond all question, and it is but the part of a great and generous people to respect and honor the memory of brave men who died in what they believed to be the line of duty to their country. And this we say from the standpoint of one who followed the Stars and Stripes through four years of the war for the preservation of the Union.

Our Contributing Editor, B. B. Tyler, sends us the following paragraphs concerning Polygamy in Congress:

Shall Mr. Bingham H. Roberts, representative elect to Congress from Utah, be permitted to take his seat?

Why not? In the November election he was chosen, in an orderly manner, to represent a congressional district in the state of Utah in our National Legislature. His majority was more than six thousand. On the face of the returns it is clear that a large majority of the people of his district desire that he shall represent them in Congress. Why not?

It is not claimed that in his election the forms of the law were disregarded. So far as is known the election proceeded according to the requirements of the law applicable in such a case. There was no ballot box stuffing. There was no intimidation of electors. Why, then, raise the question concerning the seating of Mr. Roberts? Have not the people the right to choose whomsoever they will to represent them in the lawmaking body of the nation? If not, why not?

But this man is a Mormon! What if he is? Is not Utah a Mormon state? Is there anything in the constitution of the United States making it improper, unlawful or impossible for a Mormon to be a member of Congress?

But Mormonism is a fraud, a delusion, a false religion! Granted. What if it is? Does the constitution of the United States or our laws, declare in form or in effect that any men who profess the true religion are qualified to sit as members of Congress? The first amendment to the constitution declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;" but if a man is disqualified from sitting as a representative in Congress because of the religion in which he professes to believe, then he, in effect, is not permitted to exercise freedom in his religious faith and practice! Why, then, raise the question concerning the eligibility of Mr. Roberts? The constitution is specific in setting forth the qualifications that must be possessed by members of Congress. It says that one to be a member of the House of Representatives must have been a citizen of the United States seven years, that he must be twenty-five years of age, and an inhabitant of the state in which he is chosen. All of these things are true of Mr. Roberts. He has been a citizen of the United States many times more than seven years. He is more than twenty-five years old. No one denies that he is an inhabitant of the state of Utah. Why not, then, permit him to take his seat in Congress as a member from Utah?

Brigham H. Roberts is a polygamist. He has three wives. This is known. He may have more. That he has three wives is not denied. One of Mr. Roberts' wives lives in Salt Lake City, and two in Centerville, ten miles North of Salt Lake. The ministers of the gospel in Salt Lake City protest against the seating of Roberts and allege these facts as containing the reasons for their protest. Twenty-four preachers sign the protest.

Mr. Roberts is editor of a magazine in which there appeared last spring a long editorial in which polygamy was defended.

Polygamy is not a part of the Mormon religion—not an esseatial part. One can be a Mormon and not be a polygamist. A special revelation, received many years ago, made polygamy an integral part of the faith and practice of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. But even during the prevalence of that so-called revelation one could be a Mormon and not practice polygamy. The time never was when this faith and practice were essential to Mormonism.

The practice is now condemned by the highest authority in the church, and in the most solemn manner. After the passage of the Edmunds law in 1882, and when it was seen that the United States authorities were determined to enforce this law, a revelation was received setting aside the former communication from heaven on the subject of plural marriages. The Edmunds law made polygamy a crime, with appropriate punishments designated. This law was enforced under it in 1889. Brigham H. Roberts was condemned.

By the teaching of Mormonism, the exotric teaching, Mr. Roberts, at this point, on this subject, is a sinner. By the laws of the United States he is a criminal. This is the reason why he should be denied a seat in our National Legislature.

By the Edmunds law polygamists were disfranchised. They are not permitted to vote nor to hold office. According to this act of Congress Mr. Roberts has no right to vote, and he cannot legally hold office. If, in an election, Brigham H. Roberts casts a vote he is guilty of an illegal act. The law on all this is clear.

Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Harrison issued proclamations of amnesty in which pardon was expressly conditioned on the abandonment of polygamy. Roberts has not abandoned his polygamous relations. One of his wives gave birth to two children last August.

In the magazine article above referred to Mr. Roberts says:

"Joseph Smith received a commandment from the Lord to introduce that order of marriage into the church, and on the strength of that revelation, and not by reason of anything that is written in the Jewish Scriptures, the Latter Day saints practiced plural marriage."

"Polygamy is not adultery, for were it so considered, then Abraham, Jacob and the prophets, who practiced it, would not be allowed an inheritance in the kingdom of heaven, and if polygamy is not adultery, then it cannot be classed as sin at all."

"It appears to the writer that modern Christians must either learn to tolerate polygamy or give up forever the glorious hope of resting in 'Abraham's bosom.'"

Thus Mr. Roberts thought and expressed himself in his magazine last spring. Ought such a man to sit in the Congress of the United States? That his conduct on this subject is in harmony with his teaching is not denied.

Utah was kept out of the union as a state for a number of years on acount of the recognition of polygamy by the Mormons. As the result of a solemn agreement to abstain from plural marriages Utah became a state in 1896. Brigham H. Roberts was a prominent actor in this matter. He seems to have no respect whatever for the terms of this solemn covenant. Ought such a man to be recognized as a member of Congress? He is now in rebellion against the laws passed by the National Legislature and approved by the President—laws to which he especially agreed to be obedient.

It looks as if the election of this man to Congress was a deliberate defiance of the United States Government by the Mormons. They seem in this affair to say to Congress and the President: "We defy you. We will see if you will enforce the laws relating to plural marriages. We are now a sovereign state. We will do as we please. Help yourselves if you can. We deliberately trample your laws under our feet. What will you do about it?"

There are a few people in the United States who fear that Roman Catholics will destroy our free American ins itntions; but there is far greater danger from Mormons; they are planting themselves in some of the states in which a few voters, comparatively, will hold the balance of power. The representation in the Senate from one of these states is equal to that of the most populous state in the Union. The time is apparently not far distant when the Mormons will be able to control the election of United States senators. They can also control electoral votes in a Presidential election, and there is no valid reason why they may not in a closely contested campaign determine the election of the President.

Now is the time to meet the issue. The gauntlet has been thrown down. What will we do?

Christmas Chimes.

(See first page illustration.)

Chime on, sweet bells of Christmas, chime,
Your music breathes a hope sublime,
Your silvery tones on wintry air
Drive back the clouds of dark despair.

Ring out from steeple, dome and tower,
Proclaim to list'ning ears the hour
When Heaven stooped down to kiss the earth,
And Love, incarnate, came to birth.

O, bells of Christmas! loud and clear
Ring out your notes of hope and cheer!
Till all the world with joy shall sing,
For Bethlehem's Babe is Christ, our King.

Chime on, sweet bells of Christmas, chime,
Through every land, in every clime,
Till Heaven and earth united be,
And Jesus reigns o'er land and sea.

THE SONG AND THE STAR

"There's a song on the air,
There's a star in the sky,
There's a mother's deep prayer,
There's a babe's tender cry.
And the star rains its fire
While the Beautiful sing,
For the manger of Bethlehem
Cradles a King."

That song that broke the stillness of the night on the Judean hills, in the long ago, is reverberating still throughout the earth. That star that rained its fire to guide the course of the wise men, has become a Sun that lights the whole world to Christ. That "mother's deep prayer" finds its response in the mother-hearts of all the world. That "babe's tender cry" has made sacred the childhood of all succeeding ages.

The song that was sung that first Christmas night by the Chorus Choir of Heaven was the Gloria in Excelsis, looking Godward, and on its earthward side it was "peace among men in whom He is well pleased." These are the two notes in the great Anthem of Redemption—Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace among men with whom God is pleased. The anthem would be incomplete without either of these notes. This angel-song means that Christ's mission on earth was to exalt God among the nations, and promote peace among men by bringing them into accord with the Divine Will.

These two purposes run parallel with each other and the ages have witnessed their mutual progress. God has, indeed, been exalted by a fuller revelation of His grace and truth through Jesus Christ. When Jesus called Him our Heavenly Father He gave Him the highest place in human thought and adoration; and just in proportion as humanity has been brought into harmony with the Will of God has peace prevailed. In the divine plan Peace and Righteousness go together; in Christ they meet and kiss each other. There is no use in organizing a Peace Society unless we organize a Society of Righteousness by the side of it. There will never be universal peace until there is universal righteousness.

Such is the purport of that angel-song. May its melody find a response thoughout all Christendom this Christmas-tide! May there be the burying of old strifes and feuds, and the putting away of all alienations and bitterness, to the end that God may be well pleased with us, and that His peace may fill our minds and hearts. May the nations learn the lesson that peace can only be maintained in righteousness. This is one of the lessons emphasized by the events of the present year.

That star which guided the wise men to the cradle of the new-born King is now filling the earth with its light, every beam of which points toward the Christ of Bethlehem, of Calvary and of Olivet. Science, art, philosophy, government, social progress, history — what are all these but luminous rays of light that direct the candid inquirer toward Him who is the Light of the world? Christ is the key to history, and the only solution of the enigma of human life. He it is who transforms chaos into kosmos. As He is "the Light of the world," so every ray of light followed to its source leads to Him.

Let us, then, carried on the wings of imagination, visit once more these far-away scenes. Let us listen to the song of the angels that floated out on the midnight air. Let us gaze at the star that rained its fire and, following its light, let us, kneel with the adoring shepherds and with the wise men from the East, and offer our gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh to this new-born King. Let us enter into the spirit of this great anniversary. Let us realize something of the nearness of heaven to earth which the shepherds must have felt on that memorable night, when angel-wings beat the air above their heads. Let us open our hearts to all the holy influences of the season, and above all, let us receive into them the Christ who was born in a manger because there was no room in the inn. May He be born anew in all our hearts this Christmas season!

THE STATE UNIVERSITY AND THE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

Under a grant made by the United States Government several years ago many of the states have established what are known as State Universities, which are generally recognized as the crown and apex of our system of public education. One of the most remarkable phenomena in the educational world is the steady and rapid growth of these State Universities. Without exception, so far as we know, the attendance of these state institutions is steadily increasing, while the facilities they afford for educational purposes are being constantly multiplied. They have served a good purpose, too, in making the Western and Middle States more independent of the East than they would have been.

These facts raise a question which thoughtful people, interested in the welfare of the country, cannot ignore. What should be the attitude of the great body of Christian people of this country toward these State Universities? We can think of only three attitudes which Christian people may assume toward them. One is that of active oppositlon to them on the ground that their support by the state is a species of paternalism, or on the ground that they are not subserving the public good; or they may assume an attitude of indifference, as if the problem were not worthy of consideration; or, recognizing in these State Universities great possibilities of good and potent agencies for disseminating light and truth among the people, they may assume a sympathetic relation to these schools, seek to remove them as far as possible from the control of merely partisan politics, correct whatever evil tendencies there may be in connection with them, and supplement their teaching by the establishment of Bible Chairs or schools in proximity to them so as to give their students the benefit of biblical instruction.

As a matter of fact some religious people have opposed the universities on one or the other of the grounds mentioned, but this has generally been done in the interest of some denominational school. As to the charge of "paternalism," it will have more force when the people who raise that cry offer the funds which are necessary to carry on the educational work. Our public-school system is one of the glories of our nation, and the university seems to be the logical outgrowth of this national system of education. If we should join in with our Roman Catholic citizens in opposing the idea of education by the state, and should succeed in destroying this system of education, which the generosity of the people of the United States have built up, we should see a retrograde movement in general intelligence and education, which would in time bring us to a level with some of the Roman Catholic countries.

It must be said, however, that the attitude of indifference is the one which has been most geuerally assumed by the Christian people toward these universities, and it is the least defensible of all possible attitudes. If the State University is not a good thing, it is a very bad thing, and should be opposed. The attitude of indifference is unworthy of intelligent citizens.

The third attitude which we have mentioned is manifestly, as we think, the right one for an intelligent Christian people to assume. Here are these State Universities, which already have millions of dollars invested in them. They command the best teaching ability of the country. They afford facilities for instruction equaled only by a few of the Eastern Universities. They have a larger and more rapidly increasing patronage than our denominational schools. This is not only because they have better educational facilities than the average denominational school; the very fact that they are not controlled by any religious body makes them more acceptable to many. In all human probability these Universities are here to remain, and are destined to increase in patronage and power. Is it not, then, a part of wisdom and prudent foresight to so surround these institutions with religious influence and biblical instruction as to make them centers, not only of intellectual training, but of moral and religious influence? A more manifest duty than this we cannot conceive of.

We believe the movement inaugurated among us in recent years to associate Bible teaching with these State Universities is one of the most important educational ideas of modern times, and is destined to exert a far-reaching influence both upon the character of these institutions and upon the church itself. The plan seems to be a part of that larger conception of the kingdom of God which is now being accepted by intelligent Christians everywhere, which regards the state itself as a part of the divine order, and which would apply Christianity to all the functions of our social and political life. For this reason the State Universities are welcoming this biblical instruction, seeing that it is an essential part of a complete education. By the wise action of the church in relation to these State Universities they may be made important agencies for the advancement of the kingdom of God. An opposite course, which would divorce them from Christian sympathy and co-operation, would prove a calamity, the evil influence of which it would be difficult to exaggerate.

But what of our Christian or distinctly religious institutions of learning? Have they a future? We think they have not come into being without reason, and the causes that brought them into being have not ceased to operate. What should be the relation of these institutions to the State Universities? In cases where individual munificence has endowed and equipped institutions that can cope with the State Universities in the scope and thoroughness of their work, their relation should be that of generous and fraternal rivalry. In cases where the religious institution is able only to give the college course, it should undertake to do no more than that, but put itself into such articulation with the universities as will enable their graduates to pursue any postgraduate studies they may wish to pursue in these universities.

But it should be understood that if our religious institutions are to exist and flourish, their friends must endow and equip them so that their work, as far as it goes, will be as thorough as in the universities. The time has past when we can rely on denominational zeal as a substitute for proper endowment in sustaining these schools. If we believe in the mission of Christian colleges we must endow them and enable them to cope with other schools in the quality of their work and in the advantages they offer. Granted that they have special advantages over state schools, which we quite freely grant, we must see to it that these advantages are not more than offset by the disadvantages growing out of the lack of proper support.

We must endow our Christian schools or witness their steady but sure decay.

There is much truth in the following words from Max O'Rell's article on Cheerfulness in the North American Review for December:

The world is full of joy, full of beauty, and we want the great thinkers to make us discover it. We do not want Carlyles to scold us; we do not want prelates, with incomes of $100,000 a year, to lecture on thrift to poor factory girls sweated on three dollars a week. The masses of the people hear a good deal of the joys that await them in the next world. By and by, they will want a bit of heaven on this earth. They will ask for it, nay, they will demand it, and, believe me, they will get it.

Hour of Prayer.

LOOKING BACKWARD.

(Midweek Prayer Meeting Topic, Dec. 28th, 1898.)

Many, O Lord my God, are the wonderful works which thou hast done,
And thy thoughts which are to us-ward:
They cannot be set in order unto thee;
If I would declare and speak of them,
They are more than can be numbered.
—Psa. 40:5.

There are some people, doubtless, who are disposed to look backward too much to the neglect of present duties and responsibilities. But there are times and seasons when it would seem to be pre-eminently proper to turn our minds back to the past, and learn the lessons which it has for us. It is, indeed, greatly wise that we should hold converse with our past hours, and let them teach us concerning the future. It is especially necessary that we should recall, in thoughtful moments, God's dealings with us in the past and remember His mercies to us-ward. In such a mood was the psalmist when he wrote the psalm of which the above text is a part.

The close of the year especially would seem to be a fit time for thinking over the past. It is a time for "memory and for tears." The dying year inevitably reminds us of the rapid flight of time and the brevity of human life. This is the last midweek prayer meeting of the old year. It is fitting that we look backward over the year that is closing, and ask ourselves two questions at least: What has God done for me? and what have I done for God? When the psalmist looked back over God's dealings with him and his nation, he exclaimed: "Many, O Lord my God, are the wonderful works which thou hast done." It is the nature of faith to recognize the hand of God in all the providences of our lives. In how many ways has God's love manifested itself toward us during the year past! Who can number them? The psalmist mentions a few things that the Lord had done for him:

(1) "He inclined unto me and heard my cry" (v. 1). How many of us can say the same thing to-night concerning our prayers? Surely, many of us. We called upon Him in our troubles and He lightened our hearts.

(2) "He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay;
And He set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings" (v. 2).

Have none of us felt our feet in the miry clay of sin, or in the slippery way of evil doers, during the year past? And have we turned to God and felt His strong arm lifting us up and setting our feet upon a rock? If so, then we can join with the psalmist in another experience which he describes as follows:

(3) "And He hath put a new song into my mouth, even praise unto our God" (v. 3). Have we not been able to sing some new song of praise to God in view of His mercies to us, and our deliverance from sin, or from sickness, or from some other earthly calamity? It is wonderful how the recognition of God's mercies fills our mouths with songs of praise, and puts the spirit of music in our hearts. "Let those refuse to sing who never knew our God."

(4) The influence of the psalmist's changed life upon others was another reason for his gratitude:

"Many see it, and fear,
And shall trust in the Lord" (v. 3).

He was not only grateful, on his own account, for what the Lord had done for him, but the good influence which this would have upon others, leading them to "trust in the Lord," was reason for further gratitude. Have any of us the consolation, in looking back over our lives to-night, of feeling that our example during the year has been helpful to others in leading them to trust in the Lord? We may not be conscious of any direct results of the influence of our lives, but we may be sure that, if we have "walked with God" until our faces have caught something of the light of His countenance and the joy of His peace, others have been stimulated by our example to leading better lives.

It is comforting to know, too, that while we have occasionally thought of God He has been thinking of us continually. Of both God's works and God's "thoughts which are to us-ward" the psalmist exclaims:

"They cannot be set in order unto thee;
If I would declare and speak of them,
They are more than can be numbered."

We love to know that our friends think of us, but it is a wonderful thought that the great and good God, who holds the universe in balance, thinks of us individually, and has a plan for each life. He has been watching us during the year to see what response we would make to His mercies and to all His tender appeals. If we have grieved our Heavenly Father by our forgetfulness of Him, and by our failure to respond to His calls upon us for service and for growth in the divine life, let this last prayer-meeting of the year be an occasion of sincere repentance and the seeking of God's pardoning grace and love. Thus strengthened and renewed, we may turn our faces resolutely and hopefully to the responsibilities of the year to come.

PRAYER.

O Thou Father of infinite mercies, how great is Thy kindness to the children of men! How tenderly Thou hast dealt with us during the year that is now drawing to a close! Thy hand has led us, and fed us, and upheld us; and "like as a father pitieth his children," Thou hast pitied us and cared for us during all the experiences of the year. As we recount all Thy wonderful acts of kindness toward us, and are reminded of Thy thought concerning us, we must confess that we have not responded as fully as we should have done to these manifestations of Thy love. We confess our faults before Thee, and humbly ask Thy pardon through the merits of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom, also, we implore Thy rich grace to live better and more fruitful lives the coming year than we have ever done in the past. And when our earthly lives are closed, may it be that Eternity shall open up for us higher and nobler spheres of activity where we may serve and praise Thee forever. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is natural that Christmas should be pre-eminently the children's festival. It calls up the Babe of Bethlehem and the manger-cradle. The Christ-child is an object of profoundest interest both to heaven and earth. The birth of every child is a mystery, but the birth of this wonderful Child of Prophecy, of Promise and of Hope —how much mystery clusters about that event! If we are wise we have long since ceased to try to understand the mystery, and are content to accept the fact so full of significance for the race. Childhood can do that; a philosopher can do no more

And so Christmas has become, of all the days of the year, Children's Day. They look forward to it with anticipations of joy, mingled somewhat with awe, and its coming is hailed with delight by all the juveniles of Christendom. Welcome, Christmas, for the children's sake!

But, after all, it would be difficult to tell who are happier these days preceding Christmas, the children or their parents, and the older brothers and sisters and the uncles and aunts. How many precious little packages are stored away in secret places, some of them wrought by loving hands, some of them purchased by hard-earned wages, in order to make the children happy on Christmas! Nothing, perhaps, brings so much joy to the human heart as the effort to make somebody else's life brighter and happier. Hence it is that the faces of the old, as well as the young, take on a brighter and happier look these ante-Christmas days. The saddest of all hearts just now are the hearts of loving, toiling parents who, by reason of misfortune or sickness or lack of work, feel that they can make no presents to their little ones. But the great mass of people, it is pleasant to believe, will find something by which to make the Christmas season a little brighter for their loved ones, and it is this giving and preparing to give to others that brings happiness. And so we add—Welcome, Christmas, for the sake of the old people!

It is a blessed thing that it does not take much to convey an expression of love and friendship. Many a child in the homes of the poor will be filled with delight with some simple little toy which others, it may be, have cast away, or some simple little dish to which they have not been accustomed, or a little game—anything that will mean to them that Christmas has come and they are remembered. It would be a mistake to suppose that the largest amount of happiness on Christmas Day will be found in the homes of the rich and the well-to-do. If any one believes this, let him make a series of visits Christmas morning to the homes of the poor, and he will find bright eyes sparkling and little hearts exulting in happiness over simple little dolls or toys that wealthier children would despise. There will be as much joy and happiness even in the cabins of the poor, on Christmas Day, where actual want does not exist, as in the palaces of the rich. We are glad that this is so. Welcome, Christmas, for the sake of the poor!

The writer can recall a humble Missouri cottage home, silhouetted against a wintry sky in the mellow light of memory, in which there were no purchased gifts exchanged. Everything given or received was of the rudest or simplest nature, and was made by loving hands. He remembers, yet, the yule-log on Christmas eve, the large fireplace and the bright, blazing fire. The boys and girls that gathered around that hearthstone had never a sigh on account of poverty. There were apples and nuts, and innocent games and laughter, and the light of a mothers's love-lit eyes. These were enough. Little did we know or care about rich and costly gifts such as are lavished so freely on loved ones in the homes of the rich. It would be difficult to find boys and girls with happier hearts than those we call to mind in that humble cabin home of the long ago. The very youngest of that circle has grandchildren now, but all of them remember those early Christmas days, in the old home, with a warmth in the heart and a mist in the eye. No, it is not wealth that makes Christmas, but love. For the sake of childhood memories, we welcome Christmas!

One of the delightful features of Christmas is the home-gathering. It is true in a special sense, at Christmas, that "there is no place like home." If the boys and girls who have married, or who have left the old home are not separated from us by too great a distance we expect them to come home and shelter under the rooftree with the "old folks at home." And if, in addition, there come also the prattle of childish voices and the patter of shildish feet of little ones who come to visit "grandpapa" and "grandmamma," the home-coming is doubly welcome, and Christmas has an added charm. Let the fire burn brightly on the hearthstones. Bring in the guitar, the mandolin, the banjo and all the rest of the stringed instruments, and let music lend its mellowing influence to the happy circle. Who knows when they will all meet again? Let our homes echo once more with the music of the old songs this Christmastide. For the sake of our homes and the glad home-coming, we welcome thee, O merrry Chrtstmas!

THE BABE OF BETHLEHEM.

GEORGE T. SMITH.

God experiments. He tests men and systems. Certain postulates, held by men of to-day, have been tested on a world-wide scale and through centuries. One is, nature is ample for man's instruction and guidance: the other, man can obey the right and save himself without the cross. All objections to the gospel ultimately rest on one or the other of these assumptions.

In the mighty experiment of the ages God chose the Gentiles to test the first, the Jews to decide the second.

The Gentiles were richly endowed for their mission. Most of the earth was theirs. Time ample was given; indeed, in non-Christian lands the experiment is yet in progress. The love of beauty of the Japanese, the patience and industry of the Chinese, the subtlety of the Hindoos, the longing for purity of the Persians are, in Occidental eyes, the small change of the capital of this prodigal son.

The eagle eye to discern law, the right arm to enforce it and the firm heel to stamp the nations with the seal of one empire, were the wealth of the Romans. The love of domestic virtues, the perseverance, the chastity of the Teutonic sons of the hardy North equipped them for the search. Above all, the intellectual acuteness and supremacy of the Greek was the crown of glory of that ancient world. Brilliant with gems, twenty centuries have not eclipsed their radiance, nor exhausted their light. Smaller than Rhode Island was Attica, 84,000 was her free population, yet for hundreds of years that soil produced the most remarkable galaxy of men whose talents ever adorned the race.

Warriors on land and sea, statesmen, sculptors, painters, orators, poets, dramatists, philosophers and historians shone as lucid gems. The Draper and Buckle school derive all results from environment. Greece has the same happy days, the same sunny skies, the same Marathon looking on the mountains and the mountains on the sea, but Salamis and Porch are dead. That God gave abnormal brain power to the Hellenic race admits of no doubt to the student of the long steps of the Governor of nations.

The Mighty Ruler also determined the bounds of the nations, the periods of their history, that they might seek him, though, in truth, he is ever near.

The pre-Socratic school studied the philosophy of nature; the Socratic school, the philosophy of mind; the post-Socratic, the philosophy of life. They all looked for God, but they all landed in agnosticism and despair.

True, you may read some fine thoughts about God, especially in Plato, but, if Justin Martyr's testimony be valid, Plato gleaned these from Jewish writings, and through fear of the judges withheld the source. If we award the merit of originality to Xenophanes and the Socratic trinity, the case is worse. For in such an etherial atmosphere of exalted truth, the discoverers were unable to remain for any length of time. They did not hold it consistently, they never made it practical, they could not impart it to their disciples, still less transmit it a single link. It was a Jew who on Mars' Hill revealed to them their unknown God. Such was the paucity of their knowledge that he identified the true God with their Zeus, the Jupiter of the Romans, a shady character, whose morals would not stand the light of day, so he made the night twice as long. He was no more the father of gods and men than other deities to whom the lively Greeks gave the same title.

The experiment was complete, saying nothing of the Oriental world, wearied and worn out in the hopeless struggle, subjugated to the arts of smaller but more virile people. When the Babe lay in the manger the world had tested its riches to the full and had reached aching despair.

The philosophers openly taught (R. G. Ingersoll has echoed it) that the best thing in the power of man was to take his own life. The reason is plain. Fiery youth may revel in seasual pleasures, but satiety is soon reached. Against a blank wall, with the rays of a pitiless sun beating upon him, with a raging thirst which nothing can quench, the devotee of pleasure soon finds himself. God is the source of our being, the end of our quest. Without him the spirit cannot rest. Knowledge divorced from God is valueless.

Failure, weariness, disgust, were the deadly blossoms of the nightshade which grew out of the polluted soil of unrestrained appetite. Their noisome fetor poisoned society, destroyed the sanctity of home and undermined the state.

So revolting is the picture drawn by Paul of the condition of the Gentile world, we shrink from reading the first chapter of Romans in public. So true is it that its horrible revelations have startled Chinamen into saying: "You wrote that after you came to our country," yet so moderate that worse things may be gathered from the stern Tacitus, the loose Sallust and the vacillating Seneca of Paul's time. Martial tells the name of a woman married and divorced ten times in a month! This is a straw in the stream of moral rottenness when Rome worshiped the emperor as a god, and beheaded Christians.

Let a modern papan sing of that day:

"On that hard pagan world disgust
And secret loathing fell;
Deep weariness and sated lust
Made human life a hell."

We sometimes think that if everybody around us were doing right it would be easy for us. Perhaps. The Jewish people were cemented together as no other people. They had a common blood, a mutual history, the same religion. In the furnace of Egypt and the desert they were fused into one body. Separated from all other nations by these bonds of sympathy, by their geographical position, with a law covering every detail of life, they had the best possible opportunity to show that a man can save himself through obedience to a law of justice.

The law was divine. It was just and good. Theirs was the only theocracy the world ever saw. God was their king. His erpetual hand was upon them, bringing punishment when they departed from the way and pouring down prosperity on the obedient. The law was plain: The man who doeth these things shall live by them. They failed. Not a Jew was justified by the law. It made no provision for even one small transgression. Mercy alone can do that. Justice is blind.

Exact compliance alone meets the case. No Jew, no legalist of to-day, could live without a flaw.

After fifteen hundred years of experiment, long after idolatry had been burned out of the nation by the Babylonian furnace, John the Baptist first, then Jesus, made terrific accusations against the people.

This gigantic experiment bankrupted man. He was silent. Three propositions were indubitably established in the minds of the wise: That man is ignorant, that he is sinful, that he is helpless. The redeemer of this lost and despairing race must be infinite in wisdom, infinite in power. God's answer to this desire of nations lay in a manger at Bethlehem. Weak and ignorant as any babe, poorer than most, fleeing from Herod's thirsty sword, carried to Nazareth from fear of Archelaus, this Babe of Bethlehem was the hope of the world for deliverance from all its woes.

"Jesus" means savior. "Christ" means anointed. Three classes of men, viz., prophets, priests and kings, were anointed in the earlier dispensation. Jesus is God's anointed Prophet, Priest and King. As a prophet he is a teacher. He is the teacher. "He taught nothing but himself," is the pregnant saying of Renan. So doing, he taught God. Wonderful teacher is he. No man ever thus spoke. His school takes no recess, has no vacation, sends out no graduates. The centuries sit at his feet; nations have slowly learned to spell under him. None can read.

By his adorable sacrifice of love he has entranced the hearts of those whom he cleanses from all guilt. His blood suffices.

As the mighty Captain of our salvation he redeems. His the broken tomb. He the Resurrection and the Life.

Thus as the Christ of God he meets precisely the needs of man. No real want is left without provision. Ignorant, guilty, helpless are we; the Babe of Bethlehem comes to our relief. It was love among the hateful; virtue in the midst of hypocrisy; humility in the presence of scornful pride; self-immolation before cruel self-seeeking. He loved himself last. Into that seething mass of fierce and brutal sensuality, that cynical, sneering agnosticism, that repellant formalism and hypocrisy the tiny babe came. What a marvelous change! Goethe's lamp in the fisherman's hut turned into silver. The Babe of Bethlehem called angel voices from the heavens and exalted motherhood to the skies. Out of the mire and the stony rock he plucked pellucid gems for his crown. He transformed the young tiger, breathing out threatenings and slaughter, into the lamb-like apostle, branded with many Philippian stripes. He satisfied Justin Martyr's mind, wearied in a search which had beggared philosophy. He subdued the strong and undisciplined nature of Augustine, richly endowing and inspiring him to show the folly and weakness of all that attempts to rival the peerless Babe. But time would fail to tell of the Norbets, the Gardiners, the Billy Brays who have worshiped with the wise men and with redeemed lives.

Scorned at first, then feared by the rabbis who rejoiced over that grave at the foot of Calvary, malighed as a perverse, malefic and destructive superstition by Tacitus, Suetonius and Pliny the younger, the religion which sprang from that cradle grappled with the sullen despair, the torpid conscience, the enthroned diabolism, the deified lust of a callous or sneering world, and in spite of venomous hate swept away the mass of rotten idolatry, abolished the degrading worship of the emperor, sheathed the gladiatorial sword, made home possible and soared above the eagles of Rome.

Weakened by the results of the conversion of Constantine, it was buried beneath the repeated inundations of barbaric mud. Still it overcame and humanized the barbarians, it planted beneficent institutions wherever they are known, it purified and enriched the language, cleansed the customs and transformed the face of Europe. Rising triumphant from beneath the debris with which the weakness and wickedness of papal superstition had covered it from the sight of men it rushed forward to new and permanent victories. The nations which have nourished it have marched to the front rank of all that is good and powerful among men. In this land it has magnified human nature till its dignity, its incomparable value even when in ruins, fills us with awe and makes us restless for the inexpressible blessings held out to the nation whose God is the Lord.

Not in these lies his chief praise. After man's long and weary search by the candle of reason and the torch of nature, after the vain attempt to live so that justice would not cut him down, the Jewish shepherd, the Persian Magi worship at the cradle whose tiny hands are yet to lift the centuries out of the rut of cruelty and sensuality and place them upon the highways of holiness. He comes to the eyes that are heavy with long waiting, he gives the clear knowledge that in revealing God makes nature, man and history naked and open before the wondering eyes. To the prodigal defeated in temptation, mortified over deep guilt, he discloses the sole fountain that renews the man, by cleansing from all sin. To the weak, beaten by the world's fierce greed and bankrupt in hope, facing bitter and black death, he comes pointing to Joseph's shattered tomb and the radiant light which streams in golden tints along the path of him who has abolished death.

He has wiped away the tears from eyes pained by weeping, he has given the weary sweet rest, he has assuaged the grief of hearts which knew no other consolation, he has opened the heavens to the dying, disclosing rapturous scenes of beauty, he has gilded the sorrow of those remaining by the unquenchable hope that the parting is only till the morning.

About forty years before that hallowed night, Virgil wrote of a babe. He was to crush the Serpent and usher in a new birth of centuries. That babe, when a youth was imprisoned by the brutal emperor and died accomplishing nothing. Gibbon calls attention to Virgil's verse. They form an acrostic, viz., Jesus the Christ. He, dying while a young man has crippled the Serpent, ushered in a few new series of ages. No wonder that while all other religions have spent their youthful force and are descending into the valley, while agnosticism is pessimistic the religion of this Child is aggressive, energetic, youthful and the heir of the future.

Wise men bow before that cradle, and no such royal gifts reach any earthly monarch as the human hearts so freely give in the passionate enthusiasm of their love for this peerless Babe.

Albia, Ia., Dec. 6, 1898.

ARCHBISHOP PURCELL ON ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

J. H. CARTER.

In common with many others I read with much interest the alleged interview with Archbishop Parcell on Alexander Campbell. If I may judge from the reference to the interview contained in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, of this week (under "Our Budget"), the genuineness of it seems to have been questioned. This does not seem to me to be very strange. There certainly appears to be one remarkable inconsistency between the views of the Archbishop as published in the interview, and those expressed in the debate with Mr. Campbell.

In the second column of the interview the Archbishop is reported as saying: "Did he [Alexander Campbell] not kneel before the same cross in spirit, and regard with reverence the Mother of Jesus?" Observe carefully the words of this quotation which I have italicised.

Now let us turn to the Campbell and Purcell debate. Mr. Campbell, in his opening speech said:

"Are we, then, to understand her [the Catholic Church] as the immutable, universal, ancient, primitive, apostolic Church of Christ? Are we to understand this by the Roman Catholic Church of the nineteenth century, with her popes, her cardinals, her patriarch, primates, metropolitans, archbishops, archdeacons, monks, friars, nuns, etc., etc., teaching and preaching the use and worship of images, relics, penances, invocations of departed men and women, veneration for some being whom they call the 'Mother of God?'" P. 12 (italics mine.)

Archbishop (then Bishop) Purcell, in his first reply, referred to Mr. Campbell's language in regard to the Virgin Mary in the following eloquent passage:

"The gentleman says he will use no language that may convey an opprobrious meaning. * * * * But in enumerating the various doctrines of the Catholic Church, I was shocked to hear him use the language, 'some being called the Mother of God.' Great God! didst thou not send into the world thy Son, Jesus Christ, to save perishing man, and didst thou not select one of all the daughters of Eve to be the mother of that child of benediction, and was not Mary this holy one, to whose care was committed his infancy, and to whom he was subject? Was she not the chosen one of heaven, to whom its archangel was sent with the communication, 'Hail, full of Grace,' or as it is in the Protestant version—'Thou that art highly favored—the Lord is with thee,' and do we now hear her stigmatized in such language, and designated as 'some being called the Mother of God?'" (Campbell and Purcell Debate, p. 19.)

Although in the debate Purcell so severely reprehends Mr. Campbell for "stigmatizing" Mary "as some being called the Mother of God," he is represented in the interview as saying: "Did he [Alexander Campbell] not regard with reverence the mother of Jesus?"

Canton, Mo.

[It cannot be supposed that Archbishop Purcell meant that Mr. Campbell accepted the Mariolatry of the Catholic Church, but simply that he in common with all Christian men reverenced Mary, the mother of Jesus, as the highest type of womanhood and one chosen of God for so high an office. There is no question as to the "genuineness" of the interview; it certainly occurred. It is only a question of how faithfully the interviewer represents Archbishop Purcell's sentiments. He believes he has accurately reported what the Catholic Prelate said, and of course, as to that point, each one must judge for himself.—EDITOR].

The Religious World.

In commenting upon the present outlook for a forward movement in China, the editor of the Missionary Review of the World, after referring to the retirement of the emperor and the assumption of its government by the dowager empress, says:

One thing, however, is certain, namely, that the reform movement in China along the line of Western ideas, has had a setback and the time for the emergence of the "Flowery Kingdom" from a state of semi-barbarism has not yet arrived. Doubtless the reforms proposed by the emperor and his advisers were too radical to suit the taste of the majority of his subjects and an attempt to enforce them might have incited further rebellion. The empress dowager, who is now in her sixty-fourth year, is a woman of strong character, though evidently unscrupulous. She is probably more in favor of reform than she is given credit for, but is opposed to radical and immediate changes in the corrupt political system in vogue and to the opening of the country to the wholesale adoption of Western ideas. It may be that she fears her inability to enforce reforms at present.

According to reports the Methodists of America are planning for great things for the opening years of the new century. Their bishops have asked for twenty millions of dollars over and above regular contributions, to be raised in three years, beginning Jan. 1, 1899. One-half of this they propose to use for church and educational endowments, and debts and one-half for charitable uses. The bishops make an interesting inventory of Methodist financial capabilities, saying that they hold church property having a total value of $116,000,000, educational property worth $28,000,000, give $23,000,000 each year for support and extension of Christian work under Methodist control and have individual incomes aggregating $500,000,000 a year. The appeal has been out but a short time, but already individual trustees, conferences and other official bodies are acting in the matter. There has been some opposition to the plan, but it is melted away. Methodists are welcoming the suggestion very generally.

In Utah the Congregationalist and Presbyterian missionaries have joined hands against the Mormons. They are also trying to inaugurate a campaign in Eastern cities against the religious monstrosity of the West. The tale which these missionaries tell is a most doleful one. They charge Mormons with the most nefarious designs, and say many new schemes have been added since the death of the late president and the election of the new official head of the Mormon Church. The charge is made, with proof, that polygamy is more common than ever. Some ministers in the East are much exercised over the matter, and the Presbyteries and other church bodies are taking action. It is charged that no fewer than 2,000 Mormon missionaries are at work in this country and in Europe proselyting for their doctrine, and all of them serving without financial remuneration.

The Christian Commonwealth, London, England, recently contained the following item of news:

Rev. Cæsar Caine, the well-known Wesleyan preacher, lecturer and writer, intends to sever his connection with Methodism. Mr. Cain has read to his church the letter he has sent to the president of the Conference, in which only the following passage throws any light on the reason of his resignation: "My convictions with respect to the doctrine of the church, membership and the sacraments are such that they would continually conflict with the usages of Methodism such as it now is, and is likely to become, though I hold that my views are in full accord with Wesley's own teaching."

The Methodist Episcopal Church will attempt to raise and spend $40,000 for mission work in the Congo Mission Conference, in Africa, this missionary year. Lands and buildings estimated at $40,000 have been tendered Bishop Hartzell by the British Government if he will inaugurate industrial medical, educational and evangelistic missions on them at once. The board at New York has ordered four missionaries sent and two are already on the field.

The Christian Endeavorers of Indianapolis, Ind., are at work to secure the convention for 1901. The convention for 1900 is to be held in London and on that account the 1901 convention is expected to be an unusually large one, especially if held in a central city. It will be a big undertaking for the Indianapolis societies, but they are confident of their ability to take care of it. A committee has already been appointed and is at work on preliminary financial plans.

Current Religious Thought

Of the joys born into the world with Christ, Rev. G. B. F. Hallock, D. D., in Record of Christian Work for December, mentions the following:

Christ is the Christmas giver. Many of the richest and sweetes joys human hearts can experience were born in the world when Christ was born. Let us name a few of the many.

I. One is the joy of knowing the nature of God. Christ was Immanuel—God with us; so near that we could see and understand and know him. Before the coming of Christ men's ideas of God were most hazy and indistinct and even crude. In a true sense—

"Love came down at Christmas,
Love of all lovely, Love divine.
Love was born at Christmas,
Star and angels gave the sign."

The incarnation is simply a great object lesson of God's love. He loved before, but it taught men that he loved and how much he loved.

II. Another is the joy of possessing a divine-human Mediator. Before Christ was born God seemed distant and difficult of approach, so separating was man's sense of sin. But Christ came "that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." This office he executeth in once offering up of himself a sacrifice to satisfy divine justice and reconcile us to God and in making continual intercession for us. The result is that we know the way of pardon, and, having accepted it, carry about with us a sweet and abiding sense of calm and peace. The way of assurance and the privilege of indulging it came largely with the birth of Christ.

III. Still another is the joy of conscious adoption into God's family. Christ revealed himself to us as our brother. Thus we are seen to be children of his Father. Through Christ we have adoption, whereby we are received into the number of God's children, have his name put upon us, the Spirit of Christ given unto us, have his fatherly care and dispensations, are admitted to all the liberties and privileges of the sons of God, are made heirs of all the promises and fellow-heirs with Christ in glory. These privileges were not realized by men until after the coming of Christ.

Major John B. Ketchum in the Preachers' Magazine for December beautifully expresses the undying impressions of the Christ upon the church. He says:

In every period of the growth of Christianity—in its infancy, when all the might of the Roman Empire was exerted to crush it—in its later struggles with northern barbarians, fierce Saracens and rebellious kings—in the maturity of its strengrh and power—the church has never lost sight of the essential facts connected with the birth, mission and death of our Savior, though he has been absent from mortal view for eighteen hundred years. In the most vital sense the Christ may be said to have been appearing constantly in the world since the day of his crucifixion. His life, majestic in its purity, sublime in its integrity, divine in its love, has been at once a model and an inspiration for innumerable multitudes through eighteen eventful centuries. His precepts, founded on the eternal principle of righteousness, and breathing universal charity and brotherly love, through all the varied forms, have been the guiding stars of myriads of human lives.

No doubt the apprehension of the truths which the Messiah uttered has been imperfect, the imitation of his matchless example feeble and faltering, the attempts to become Christ-like full of blindness and shortcoming. It is not given to man to rise to the stature of the Master here below. The saintliest of mankind who has gained strength by unceasing struggle, wisdom by long experience and broad charity, through the steadfast cultivation of the spirit of altruism, is still infinitely beneath the sublime Pattern he has tried to follow.

Yet where the inspiration and purpose of righteousness are, there Christ is. Every cup of water given in his name is a manifestation of him. In each word of loving kindness to the suffering and the sorrowing he speaks. Wherever the spirit of self-sacrifice, of purity, of devotion to humanity is shown, there the Master is present on earth.

It is this fact, so filled with comfort and consolation, and so repeatedly proclaimed in the New Testament, that makes untenable theories of small account. Those who would be in all verity the disciples of the Divine Teacher are not required to trouble themselves about these. It is enough for them to know that his presence is continually with all who faithfully seek to do his commandments. It is enough that he has said, "Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Our Budget.

—A "Merry Christmas" to all our readers!

—This means greetings to a hundred thousand appreciative readers, located in every state and territory in the Union, and in many foreign lands.

—This number will not reach some of our readers until after Christmas is passed, but they may know when they do receive it that they are included in our Christmas greetings.

—The unforgetting Christ accounts for the unforgotten Savior.

—The unforgotten Christ authenticates the historic Jesus of Nazareth.

—The unforgotten Jesus of Nazareth accounts for the decay and downfall of heathen nations now observable in the world.

—The mystery of the incarnation widens, broadens and deepens with the increase of Christ's government in the world.

—The fullness of the Godhead in Christ Jesus becomes more and more apparent as the results of his influence over men, nations and ages, pass to the historic page.

—Men will never tire of hearing the glad song of that angelic choir, sung for the first time to the humble shepherds of Bethlehem, on the night of Jesus' birth. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased" was the glad refrain that burst upon the ear of those shepherds on that joyful night.

—Remember the Ministerial Relief Fund before the old year dies, if possible; but at any rate remember it soon.

—We had intended making this a Jubilee number, but on account of the extra demands of the Christmas season will make our next issue—the last issue of the year—our Jubilee number.

—The program for the Congress of the Disciples has been received, but is of necessity laid over till next week. Look out for it. It contains the promise of a rich feast.

—"Through Difficulties," by Alfred Brunk, is an interesting story begun in this paper.

—Our original article on the "Babe of Bethlehem" will bear close reading. Its broad sweep of the forces and philosophies of the world strongly emphasize its orthodox conclusions concerning the Christ.

—Christmas customs encourage the spirit of "good will" and thus honors Christ even when and where it is not immediately intended or his name mentioned; and it s a fact that "good will" exists among men that pleases our Heavenly Father and his Son, who became flesh for us. It would be well in every possible way to bring the mind of children and parents to think of Christ in every Christmas gift and Christmas service or entertainment, but let us not complain at the manifestations of "good will toward men" manifested in other forms and ways, even among indifferent and religiously careless people. Any gift given in "good will" is a religious act and does credit to the soul of man, and, let us say, pleases God. May God bless every giver and gift-receiver and every heart in which the gift spirit prevails, whether they have the ability to give or not. Every heart so inspired has been touched with the finger of God's love.

—The Foreign Christian Missionary has published a folding circular, book-size pages, for circulation in the interest of the Jubilee Year and convention. The circular is filled with historic information and facts and illuminated with a large globe in blue and white with red stars to indicate the location of our missionary stations in foreign lands. This circular is one of the neatest and most attractive missionary documents for hand-to-hand work that we have yet seen. Let them circulate by the thousands.

—Our Christmas story, "Forgetting Self," is a beautiful illustration of the true Christian spirit.

—The Christmas poems in this paper are of excellent spirit and order, and you will enjoy reading them.

—The St. Joseph Daily News, St. Joseph, Mo., Dec. 12, contains a sermon, so called, in which the preacher, "Rev. Mr. Jackson," gives twenty reasons for the practice of sprinkling and pouring for Christ's baptism. Aside from the painful display of ignorance, or what is worse, the willful perversion of Scripture, we are amazed at his acceptance of immersion as Christian baptism after having so completely disproved, as he supposes, even the shadow of its appearance in the New Testament. But probably being so accustomed to the practice of unscriptural things in his religion, he was not aware of this glaring inconsistency in his sermon.

—Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 9, 1898.—DEAR BRO. GARRISON: The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which I have read from my childhood, deserves the gratitude of its readers rather than criticisms for the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Departments. I should never have thought of such criticisms. Yours for continuance, LOWELL C. MCPHERSON.

—The Foreign Society has found a medical missionary for the Upper Congo country, Africa, to succeed the late H. N. Biddle. His name is Dr. R. J. Dye, of Ionia, Mich. He has been in New York for nearly four years, making special prepartion for his work, and is said to be one of the best equipped missionaries the society has ever appointed. It is important that some one join E. E. Faris at Bolengi at once. Dr. Dye will sail early in January.

—Some of the German as well as English papers are publishing and commenting on J. W. Lowber's lecture on "Genesis and Geology," at Grayson College and at the University of Texas. Pres. J. W. McGarvey fully endorsed this lecture in his review at the Texas Lectureship, and the secular press made a mistake in stating the contrary.

—We are living in an age in which the name of Jesus is above every other name on this earth. Like the morning sun it has been steadily ascending so that it now shines out full and clear above the highest mountain peak of personal fame and power in oriental or occidental lands. The names of the founders of oriental religions are fast losing their splendor and power under the increasing light of the Sun of Righteousness and the smaller lights are paling into insignificance. We do not yet see all things put under the authority of Christ, but we do see his fame and his glory filling the earth, his spirit possessing the nations of the earth, his gospel leavening the world and his disciples multiplying in all lands. To day his is "the sweetest name on mortal tongue, the sweetest carol ever sung."

—The election of a "socialist" for mayor of Haverhill, Mass., at the last election, has created considerable interest in the East, and his administration will be watched with no small degree of anxiety in the minds of many people. On the day of his induction in office he was literally besieged with newspaper reporters from leading journals East and West, anxious to know what his policy was to be. But in so far as the mayor expressed himself there are no indications of revolutionary steps to be taken, at least in the near future. The mayor believes in the referendum doctrine, and will endeavor to give the people an opportunity to test its merits. Some of the things which the mayor with his supporters will try to realize under his administration, as indicated in the above interview are, co-operative production and distribution; municipal ownership of street railways, gas and electric plants; an eight-hour day for laborers with a minimum of $2 per day; the abolition of grade crossings; a more equal distribution of taxes; and the city to furnish shoes and clothing to to poor children, when necessary, to send them to school. If this mayor succeeds in realizing his official hopes the city of Haverhill is to become the leader in real municipal reforms in this country. But we shall have to wait and watch for the new era until it comes.

—Xmas as an abbreviation for Christmas arose in this way: X is the initial letter of the Greek name for Christ, Xristos, and the coincidence of its cruciform shape led early to its adoption as a figure and symbol of Christ. In the Catacombs X is frequently found to stand for Christ. The early Christian artists, when making a representation of the Trinity, would place either a cross or an X beside the Father and the Holy Ghost.—Sunday Magazine.

—The Central Christian Church, Indianapolis, Ind., has adopted the individual communion cup system. The outfit is said to have cost $100 and was made a gift to the church by Charles T. Whitsitt, of that city. This is the first of our people—the Disciples of Christ—to adopt the individual cup system, to our knowledge.

—Few joys are more refined, pure, elevating and heavenly than the joy of giving presents to our friends in Christmas times. It is at such times that we feel like emptying ourselves for others, even as Christ emptied himself for us. How common to hear the wish for more money at such times to make more people happy. And how the heart of the true disciple of Christ swells with anxiety for the poor at such times lest they be unremembered. What a blessed feeling to have toward our fellowmen, and what a sense of "good will;" what a recognition of the tie of brotherhood. But why these blessed thoughts and this good will at Christmas times chiefly? Why should there not be the same joy in giving good gifts unto men at all times? Why not retain the Christmas spirit from one year to another? To the soul in full fellowship with Christ we believe there is the same joy in giving, the same feeling of "good will toward men" and the same spirit from year to year. The Christmas spirit never leaves such persons. The answer to all these questions, then, depends upon our fellowship with Christ. In him time becomes one continual Christmas.

—The Independent is now in its Jubilee Year and appropriately observed the beginning of it with historic articles from some of its prominent correspondents in the number dated Dec. 8th. The Independent was founded at a time in our national history when the people were agitating great social, political and religious questions and when the mutterings of an approaching Civil War could be heard. On these great questions the Independent generally took the side of liberty and the larger life of the people and nation. It was at first a Congregationalist organ, but under the editorial management of Mr. Beecher it became and has since remained largely an undenominational journal. The Independent has always been ably edited, and some of the most brilliant minds of the nation have contributed to its pages. We wish the Independent another half century of usefulness in the world's social, political and religious history.

—L. H. Batchelder, A. M., in an article in the Chautauqua for December, on "The Central Element of Organized Matter," emphasizes his theme by the use of the following quotation: "There is not a living thing, from the minutest microscopic life to the highest mammal, from the tiniest cryptogram to the huge California redwood, which does not contain carbon as an essential element." What an eloquent illustration of what Christianity ought to be in the organized moral universe! There is not a human being from the poorest peasant to the wealthiest monarch, not a social organism from the humblest home to the mightiest empire, but that should contain Christianity as an essential element. Anything in the moral universe that will not unite with Christianity has no right to exist. Christ is the center of the moral universe and his light should penetrate everything; everything should absorb and retain his nature as its central element. There can be no organic life without carbon; neither can there be spiritual life without Christ.

—The Educational Forum, Chicago, says that the number of colleges and universities unable to find presidents is increasing and mentions Amherst, Brown, Cincinnati, Colegate, Oberlin, Rochester and the state universities of Iowa and California among the list of those without presidents. This is a somewhat surprising statement. Can it be the lack of funds, or is it because of a dearth of suitable men for these positions? If the latter, then the fact ought to be an inspiration to young men for the higher education.

—A close observer of the times and undercurrents cannot fail to see in various ways and places a trend of things toward a higher sense of justice and a broader sympathy for the masses. In some respects these conditions are coming about through the agitation of direct reform measures while in others they are the results of the abuses of trusts and the perversion of public rights. That was a significant warning in ex-President Harrison's Washington Day address, in Chicago, when he said that the systematic evasion of the law taxing personal property was bound to produce a widespread demand for retaliatory legislation in the shape of income and legacy taxes, and well illustrates how good sometimes results from evils carried to excess. The people are coming to understand that the public as well as the individual has rights and that public officials have no right to barter these away to private use at any price. Public rights should be the first sources of revenue for governmental purposes, and not until these have proven inadequate should the tax on industry and personal possessions be levied.

—In this paper will be found an article under the heading, "A Day of Prayer," from Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec. of the A. C. M. S., and A. McLean, Cor. Sec. F. C. M. S., requesting that the churches throughout the land observe January 15, 1899, as a day of prayer for fruitful blessings during the Jubilee Year and that pastors and evangelists preach upon these things on that day. This certainly indicates the spirit in which the churches should work this year, and cannot fail of good results if humbly and earnestly observed.

—I read "Farmer Truesdall's Thanksgiving," by the editor, with a great deal of interest. I hope the editor will continue to do so.
ALFRED BRUNK.

This brother is to be credited with unusual literary ability, as he seems to be the only reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who was able to discover the latent merit of the story referred to. We are encouraged.

—EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—In your paper of Dec. 1st there appears a very remarkable article, entitled "Archbishop Purcell on Alexander Campbell and His Work," by "I. C."

I take the liberty of asking you if you vouch for the genuineness of this article. If it be truly a "real" interview, it is certainly well worth preserving. Not knowing "I. C.," or whether you stand back of the articles you publish, I venture to make this inquiry.

We have but lately begun to take your paper and are very much pleased with it.

Respectfully,
D. H. DARLING.

Joliet, Ill., Dec. 9.

The article to which our correspondent refers is certainly "genuine" and the interview is "genuine." How accurately the interview represents the conversation which actually took place is a matter which depends upon the memory of the writer and the means he has taken to preserve a record of the interview. In other words, it is the authenticity of the document, and not its genuineness, that is called in question. The author aims, no doubt, to fairly represent the Archbishop. Dr. W. T. Moore told us recently that he called on the Bishop, in 1868, to get a letter of introduction from him, when he was about to visit Rome, thinking it might be of benefit to him in exploring the "Eternal City," and that he had a conversation with him, in which the Bishop expressed views concerning Mr. Campbell quite similar to those expressed in the interview to which our correspondent refers.

—The word church applies, first, to the universal body of believers in Christ, no matter where found. They constitute the church built upon the great truth put forth by Peter in his confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."—Journal and Messenger.

It isn't strange, in the light of such a statement as the above, that the American Baptist Flag is for turning the Journal and Messenger out of the Baptist fold. The above is a clear case of "Campbellite" heresy.

—The author of the interview with Archbishop Purcell, which has created a great deal of interest and some inquiry, in a personal letter to the editor referring to the question of his reliability refers us to Rev. Willis G. Craig, Professor in McCormick Theological Seminary at Chicago, Judge Ira Julian, of Frankfort, Ky., and a number of other distinguished people. He is a graduate of Center College, Kentucky, later of the Law School at Harvard, and after that was a student of the Sorborne, Paris. There can be no question either as to his ability or reliability.

—It is strange how different human nature is among Baptists from what it is among us, "as a people!" Just read what the Journal and Messenger says of some of their preachers:

It is a great strain on human nature when a pastor who, because of his great dignity and high mightiness, does absolutely nothing for the increase of subscriptions in his church, asks us, either directly or indirectly, to publish long accounts of his sayings and doings, or, what is the same, the sayings and possible doings of his church. It takes a large amount of editorial grace to overcome the feeling that if the pastor really thinks that space in the Journal and Messenger is worth so much to him, he ought to see to it that more of his members read what it prints.

—C. A. Young writes us a letter from Charlottesville, Va., where he is engaged in his Bible lectures, and pours out his homesickness for his native state in the following poetic quotation:

"We love thee Missouri!
Thy sweet rustic grace,
Thy plain homespun manners,
And broad, honest face.
While the star-spangled banner
In triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free
And the home of the brave,
'Twill shelter no prouder,
No nobler than thee!
Missouri! Missouri!
Bright home of the free!"

It may be that Missouri will find a niche for Bro. Young if the rest of creation will let him alone.

—S. R. Ezzell, Ferris, Texas, sends us "An Old Preacher's Final Statement," in which, after reciting a series of financial misfortunes during his 46 years' ministry, including the failure of insurance company and losses by "rascals and dishonest churches," he says:

I am now drooping near my 64th milepost, too poor in this world's goods to pay my burial expenses; but "rich in faith and an heir of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love him." As a conscientious Christian, believing it to be due me and mine, also my debtors and my creditors and the sacred cause of my Master; and believing I shall be the better satisfied living and dying, I do hereby solemnly make and respectfully submit this true, brief, frank statement for the aforesaid reasons. This, the 24th day of June, A. D., 1898. S. R. EZZELL.

—Alvah H. Doty, M.D., health officer of the port of New York, in an exceedingly interesting article on the scientific prevention of yellow fever, says some things which all men and especially all health officers would do well to consider. Dr. Doty thinks that the yellow fever infection always in some way starts from Cuba and says:

A PREACHER'S REPORT

Interesting Statement by Elder Joel H. Austin of Goshen, Ind.

"I was a victim of catarrh and had almost constant pain in my head. The trouble was gradually working down on my lungs. I was weak and irresolute. My wife had the grip and Hood's Sarsaparilla cured her. After this I had the same disease and resorted to Hood's. In a short time the aches and pains were relieved and I also saw the medicine was helping my catarrh. In six weeks I ceased to have any further trouble with it and I am now a well man. The pains and bloating I had in my limbs are gone and I am relieved of a heart trouble. I am thankful for a medicine so intelligently compounded and so admirably adapted to the needs of the system." ELDER JOEL H. AUSTIN, Goshen, Indiana.

"No other place in the world to-day offers such a menace to the public health of this country as the Cuban seaports, notably Havana." And yet, inasmuch as yellow fever, according to Dr. Doty, "is not contagious in the strict sense; that is, it is not communicated from person to person as is smallpox or scarlet fever," even this overshadowing danger can be dissipated. Dr. Doty thinks yellow fever the legitimate product of unsanitary conditions and limited by altitudes and temperatures to certain localities, and that even within its congenial sphere it may be prevented or killed by proper sanitary regulations. Even Havana, the hotbed of fever germs, he says, may be freed from the pest by proper sewerage and sanitary regulations, and that no improvement in the prevention of the infection in this and other countries can be had until new and modern systems of sewerage shall be thoroughly installed in all the seaports of Cuba.

—Considerable interest has been created in the recent successes of Hertz, Brauly, Marconi, Clarke, Tesla, et al., in space telegraphy and as in all new and wonderful achievements of science great things have been predicted of it. For instance, the destruction of a war ship, military fort or city, at the will of a distant invisible agent, and other equally startling and revolutionary things are predicted of it. That space telegraphy is a wonderful achievement, and within a limited sphere may do wonderful things, is not to be doubted, but that it will ever be available for destructive uses at long range, as stated above, cannot be believed by any one who will take the pains to inquire into the things and conditions essential to its existence. In so far as yet possible the discovery is limited to a very narrow field because of essential conditions and inherent dispositions, and it is therefore not likely to become a war weapon or agency in the very near future. Messages have been sent by space telegraphy over a distance of 18 miles, but the difficulties multiply very rapidly with increasing miles from the transmitting instrument. The present known practical uses of the discovery thus far are intercommunication between ships at sea, moving trains and signal purposes. No doubt other uses for it will be found, but as the invention now stands its capacity for general practical purposes is likely to remain as now indefinitely.

—Christmas brings trying times to many people. Some see others with plenty of money buying beautiful presents for their friends while their friends, whom they love just as dearly, must go without these sweet tokens of love and friendship for lack of money to purchase them. These are great trials, trials which those who have plenty know not of, and to keep a sweet spirit and cheerful heart under such circumstances is a great personal achievement—a gain worth more than all the Christmas gifts that could be bestowed. But those who have and to spare ought to think of the thousands of people in the land who have dear ones, but no money with which to buy them even the smallest gift for Christmas, and in some way help to bear their burden. But let not those who are short of money to supply their friends with the number and quality of presents desired become sour and embittered against those who can give if they do not share with you in these joys. Let the world be just as cheerful as possible. Let good will prevail. Let the peace of God reign supreme in the heart and the end will be one of joy. No money is required for these blessings. God's gifts to men are without money and without price.

—EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I would dislike very much to have your Sunday-school and Endeavor departments discontinued. They are a great help to me, as we seldom see any of our Sunday-school publications, and I am but one of a great many, especially in this new country. C. J. CHASTAIN.

Yukon, Okla., Dec. 11, 1898.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST almost every week gives, on its first page, a splendid picture of some one of our prominent preachers and workers. These pictures add to the attractivenes and interest of the paper.—The Christian.

We are glad to hear this word of appreciation from our esteemed brother of St. Johns, N. B., and believe that it voices the appreciation of all our readers. This effort to please our readers in good things is not without much additional cost to the publishers, but the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST know that we do not stop an expense when the way to increase the merits of the paper becomes apparent. Those who will be at pains to cut out these half-tone pictures will soon find themselves the possessors of excellent picture albums of our prominent preachers. Another good way by which to express appreciation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would be to send us new names for our subscription list. And when you do this remember that you are working in your own interest and that your home, your neighbors and the church as well as that of our own. And now that we are at the threshold of a new year it would be a good time to send us a few names at once for our list.

A Word of Congratulation.

MY DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I hasten to congratulate the brotherhood of Missouri on the happy issue of the Educational Conference, as indicated in your editorial of this week. It is, I think, just what ought to have been done, and what I urged in principle at the first Conference. I shall be glad to co-operate with my brethren in trying to make the plan indicated helpful to all our schools. Let me urge patience on the part of all concerned. The work proposed will not be done in a day nor in a year, but with the faithful co-operation of all our preachers much can be done, and confidence and hope inspired on all lines. Would that all our brethren whom God has blessed with means could see their opportunity, and feel their responsibility just now. Let us pray that they may. I regretted my inability to attend the Conference. I was just at that time in the service of the great state of Missouri trying to guard the interest of the helpless blind children in the Blind School of your city. At the close of the protracted investigation I was completely prostrated, and was not able to attend the Conference. It is perhaps just as well.

Allow me to thank you for the picture and the all-too-flattering notice of myself in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST this week. In looking back over a ministry of forty-five years in Missouri I can see many mistakes and some failures, but I can conscientiously say that I have always done and said what I thought to be true and right at the time.

I have loved our cause and plea as I have loved my life, and never more than I love it to-day. I count myself happy to have been associated with the grand men who have so nobly wrought on Missouri soil, and it is a great joy and cause of constant thankfulness that I am so preserved in mind and body that I count the last years of my life the happiest I have known. If there is the appearance of egotism in this letter, lay the blame on yourself, for what youth of 66 summers would not be a little spoiled by your words of commendation?

I have wanted for sometime to say that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST improves with each issue and every passing year. Who knows how many rocks and shoals our good ship of Zion has cleared by reason of its wise counsel and sweet spirit? Do all our preachers read it and commend it to the churches? I hope they do. T. P. HALEY.

Jamaica Printing Press and the Advance Society.

Little Gerald Dever, of Hume, Ill., sends us $1 for the Jamaica printing press, and says: "Mamma told me about the printing press for Jamaica. I belong to the Advance Society, and want to do something to help for Jesus' sake, so I send you $1 for the printing press." His mother adds in a postscript: "I believe if an appeal were made to the Advance Society each member would respond with $1 or more." This Advance Society has a good name, and evidently believes in advancing, and they recognize in the printing press one of the ways to advance. Bro. Ellis is doing a capital work among the young folks, and they are all in a buzz about it all over the country. Have you read about the Advance Scciety in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST? We should be glad to hear from as many members of the Advance Society as feel interested in helping to purchase a printing press for Bro. Randall in Jamaica. It is a little remarkable that the contributions so far have come from Illinois exclusively. Let us hear from some of the other states also.

PERSONAL MENTION.

J. M. Morris is meeting with fine success as state evangelist in New York.

S. W. Glascock, has become the pastor of the church at Rock Port, Mo.

H. W. Everest, of Des Moines, Ia., has gone to Conroe, Tex., for a season.

V. E. Ridenour will assist H. C. Patterson in a meeting at Keota, Ia., beginning Jan. 1.

G. M. Weimer, of Huntington, W. Va., has accepted a call to preach for the church at Vincennes, Ind.

R. E. Lloyd, of Kansas City, Mo., asks churches wanting a meeting or a preacher to correspond with him.

N. R. Davis, who recently ordained E. B. Harris, of Grant City, Mo., to the work of the ministry, commends him highly in every way.

Leander Lane has accepted a call to become the pastor of the church at Fairfield, Ia., where he has been preaching for four months.

N. J. Nichols will remain at Tina, Mo., another year. It is said that he has done a good work there.

C, M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., is to aid pastor Gresham in a meeting at Savannah, Mo., in January next.

O. P. Speigel, Cor. Sec., says that the Alabama Christian Missionary Convention will be held in Selma, Jan. 10-12, 1899.

J. B. Jeans, of Hamilton, Mo., has been called to preach for the church at Sumner, Mo., where he recently held a successful meeting.

M. C. Johnson, of Elliot, Iowa, would like to hold a protracted meeting for some church in January next. He has just closed a good meeting at Elliot.

B. B. Tyler has had a call to Honolulu, Hawaii, but writes us that he feels it his duty to remain at Colorado Springs for the present. D. L. Moody, the evangelist, is stirring up that place with a series of revival services.

J. T. Ogle, pastor of the church at Carrollton, Mo., invites all former pastors of that church to the celebration of its 53rd anniversary Dec. 21st.

The full text of A. E. Ewell's sermon at the courthouse, Wichita Falls, Tex., on Thanksgiving Day, appeared in the Wichita Weekly Times of that city, Dec. 9th. A. E. Ewell is the pastor of the Christian Church at Wichita Falls, Tex.

The name of J. L. Parsons, New Albany, Ind., now appears on the Christian Guide as a contributing editor. Bro. Parsons has written for a number of our papers and is widely known as a writer and preacher.

J. P. Adcock, of Ft. Scott, Kas., who spent last summer in evangelistic work with tent and singer in Oklahoma and Texas, and who wishes to do a similar work next summer, desires work for some church or a few protracted meetings to occupy his time until spring.

Evangelists Scoville and Scott have recently closed a meeting at Buchanan, Mich., with 205 additions; 32 came the last night. Bro. Scoville reports 1,240 additions this year in his meetings, not counting about four months in which they did not work. The Buchanan meeting is reported at length by another in this paper.

T. S. Noblitt, of Ellendale, N. Dak., has been called to the principalship of the academy at Middle Grove, Mo. He has accepted and writes that he will also be able to do some preaching at adjacent points. He will be at Middle Grove Jan. 1, 1899. The church at Ellendale, N. Dak , is in good condition, he writes, and in want of a preacher for 1899.

D. R. Dungan, pastor of Mt. Cabanne Christian Church, this city, spent four days of last week at Columbus, Mo., during which time he delivered four lectures to the Christian Bible College on "Sacred Geography." He was also in demand at Christian College for chapel exercises and talks, and of course greatly enjoyed the visit.

English Topics.

A LITTLE MINCEMEAT.

In a brief space I will in the first portion of this letter refer to a number of interesting matters of current interest, saying only a few words on each. The greatest pulpit power in England at this moment is certainly Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, who seems to be in these days the first preacher whom American visitors wish to hear. The Doctor has of late been sorely tried by the dangerous sickness of his wife. Mrs. Parker is one of the most beautiful women in London, and is famous for her magnificant voice, which for years has constantly been heard in the sacred solos which she sings during the various services at the City Temple. So deeply has Dr. Parker been affected by her illness, which has involved more than one sarious operation, that he has on several occasions of late been unable to appear in his pulpit. A minister's wife, who is the genuine article, has much more to do with her husband's success than most congregations ever realize. Seldom do the wives of preachers gain the recognition of appreciation till it is too late for the tribute to be of any avail.

At the Metropolitan Tabernacle, lately consumed by fire, Mr. Thomas Spurgeon is about to begin to preach in the restored basement, now nearly reconstructed on an improved plan. But the work cannot again become a real power in London till the Tabernacle itself is rebuilt. It will be considerable time before this can be done.

Now let me say a word about our work, which is, of course, to us more interesting and important than all other affairs in the religious world. All through our churches in this country there is a more hopeful spirit than I have observed at any other period. The report of last year has shown the best results yet achieved. Bro. Romig has arrived and has commenced an evangelistic campaign from which we expect great blessings. He will do immense good, especially if it should be found possible for him to pioneer new work. That is what we must heed, seeing that there is so much land yet to be possessed by the hosts of the Lord. Bro. Romig has just had his first meetings. They have been held at Chester.

Brother and Sister Arnold have sailed for China. Their sojourn in England will not be forgotten. Now we have Brother and Sister Remfrey Hunt with us. I am delighted at the wonderful proficiency attained by all our young missionaries, who have been a few years in China, with regard to the language. If a Chinese book is shown them they at once translate anything in it. One of my biggest treats is to get at my home a missionary from India or China, and to draw out volumes of information beyond that which can be given in public meetings.

When I was a Baptist minister I used to practice this method of improving my education, and I am bound to say that some of our own missionaries are amongst the very ablest I have ever learned to know. I feel impelled to bear this testimony because I have occasionally heard criticisms which implied that our workers in foreign lands were not all up to the level of the culture required by denominational societies. Well, I was brought up in the Church of England, and all through my youth and early manhood I listened to many missionaries who were first-class Oxford and Cambridge men. It is a fact that very seldom did I hear from such returned missionaries a speech worth hearing. Even now it is a frequent complaint, after the annual meetings of the Church of England, Congregational, Methodist and Baptist Societies, that the speeches of the missionaries from the field are vapid, languid, vague and uninforming. But I have never yet known any failure at a meeting on the part of any of our own missionaries, whether American or British. Molland posted us up in all the old history of China. We knew after his talk the origin of Chinese paganism. Saw enchanted us by his graphic accounts of his own observations. Hearnden made us feel as if we had actually been in China. Arnold made us feel as if we all ought at once to go and conquer China for God. Hunt and his wife electrified us with proofs of marvelous success in the whole of the Chinese mission field. There is something of vivid and impassioned earnestness, zeal and sincerity in our own missionaries which distinguishes them from the agents of the sectarian societies, excellent and devoted as many of them are. We have no "returned empties," as the Church of England people in irony dub their Colonial and Missionary Bishops when they come home.

THE GOLD PLATE AT ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

At a cost of 7,500 pounds in English money the now notorious Mr. Ernest Terah Hooley about two years ago presented a service of solid gold communion plate to St. Paul's Cathedral. Bitterly have the dean and chapter of the great cathederal regretted their acceptance of this gift from the arch mammonworshiper whose doings have sent so many thrills of consternation through English society. Hooley was one of the mushroom millionaires produced in these days of feverish speculation and reckless gambling in the money market. He rigged up syndicates which gave millions for such concerns as the Dunlop Cycle Company. Into these companies, which bore his stamp of sanction or proprietorship, thousands of covetous people rushed fo invest their all on earth with the expectation of bursting suddenly into wealth without working any more. Thousands of others joined in mere simplicity, and and ruined in the host of impoverished victims. Suddenly Hooley became the biggest bankrupt of modern times. He then adopted the plan of making what he called "revelations" as to the doings of his confederates and friends, many of whom are great people, some being earls, some baronets and some members of the House of Commons. There has been a panic in all directions. The authorities ot St. Paul's have been sorely perplexed to know what to do with the gold plate. It bears Hooley's signature as the donor. Now, here is a conundrum. "Saint Hooley," as many sarcastic people call him, turns out to be a character of a sort whose name is a terrible disgrace in connection with anything consecrated. This gold communion service of eight pieces, all stamped with his name, is a sanctified set of vessels. It was conserated with great ceremony. Therefore, being holy as well as Hooley's, as profane punsters are unkindly reminding the poor dean, it cannot be melted down, and it cannot be sold! How dreadful is the problem which has thus to be faced! This is the dark side, you see, of the ostentatious system of ecclesiastical superstition which prevails in the Roman and Anglican and Greek Churches. At last a way out has been found. A rich friend has come forward who has offered to pay over to Hooley's creditors the value of the plate, on condition that the Hooley inscription is erased. This is now arranged, and the dean, canons and clergy may sleep with easy consciences. But there is a great stir in England about the evil deeds of the colossal pirates and sharks who are devouring honest capital. During the last seven years the sum of twenty-eight millions of pounds sterling has been stolen from the public by fraudulent proprietors of companies which have gone bankrupt after spreading havoc and bringing crowds of unfortunate dupes to ruin.

The Lord Chief Justice has in a powerful speech threatened to call upon Parliament to intervene to render these swindlers powerless for the future.

THE AVENGER OF GORDON.

England will never leave Egypt. Let every American learn that. It is supposed to be a dangerous thing to say what I have just said. On the contrary it is high time to say it, and it is the safest thing to say. England will no more be able to give up her hold on Egypt than America will be able to abandon the Philippines. Either surrender would be a crime amounting to high treason to the interests of humanity. It would have been a mercy to the human race if the United States had seized every colony that Spain possessed. Of course, this could not be done. But as before long England may have trouble about Egypt of the most perilous nature, I will as an Englishman try in my small way to influence in the interests of righteousness and justice the valued opinion of all our American friends. Americans now in England are forcibly struck with the affectionate sympathy felt and displayed through all classes for the American people and the American foreign policy. The proof that this is genuine national feeling is that it characterizes all classes alike. Those who disagree on many other matters of party are all agreed here. Britain would have fought for America had there been recent need of it. Every man and woman I know expresses just that opinion. Now, if Egypt be deserted to please France, then ruin for Egypt is a certainty. I am watching current continental literature, and I easily preceive that a strong and malignant feeling prevails against the whole Anglo-Saxon policy of liberty and progress. The great governments which are crushing their populations under the autocratic burdens of militarism—Germany, Austria and Russia—are plotting busily against the fast-developing predominance in the world of America and Britain. And France, bewitched by her dreams of recovering her military glory, and tortued between priestcraft amongst the women and atheism amongst the men, is about to make herself the base tool of the triple tyranny. A crisis is not very far off. Instead of the disarmament dreamed about by the good-natured young Tsar, of Russia, there will be a frantic haste to arm for the coming Armageddon. The ministers of the Tsar have humored and encouraged him, because they know Russia needs time. The archangel of the coming mischief will be the Kaiser. That restless and arrogant potentate who has kissed the "Abdul the Damned" has hurried home from his pilgrimage in Palestine for no good object. A sensation has been made during the last few days by an anonymous article in the Contemporary Review, on "England's Arch Enemy." That foe is the man who would if he dared try to tear from the claws of the American Eagle the whole Philippine Archipelago. Whether in the fearful struggle which is before us America will stand by us, perhaps Americans can form an anticipative opinion. What we on this side can say for certain is that if the tryant conspirators should first seek to cripple America the whole might of John Bull's resources would be put at the service of Brother Jonathan. Whether it is appreciated or not on the other side, that is the absolute national sentiment here, and it prevails without any thought of a bargain or of conditions of reciprocity.

An Unfortunate Habit.

In conversation a few days ago with a prominent brother from one of our Western churches, he called my attention to what he terms "an unfortunate habit" indulged in by a class of preachers. He referred to the disposition some ministers have of discounting the labors of their predecessors, desiring, it may be, to pass themselves as paragons of ministerial perfection. We sometimes hear or read of some preachers entering upon the duties of a field of labor where he "finds things in a bad condition," and where it will take "weeks and months" of the dear brother's counsel and peculiarly adapted ability to bring "order out of chaos" and "harmony out of discord." One can almost fancy he hears the sighs of this timely rescuer, who has fortunately appeared on the scene, "providentially," to counteract the mistakes, and the lack of wisdom, and the sins of omission and commission of the departed one. Our new pastor sees but little good that has been accomplished, and of course has no word of approval for anything. He notifies the brethren at large that it will take him a long time to straighten matters in his new and hitherto unfortunate field, and hence not much news of advance is to be expected from him for sometime to come. In some of his remarks and insinuations Christian humility and righteous forbearance are entirely lost to sight, and accusations of sinister motives are mentioned often without apology.

Nihil est quin male narrando passit depravari, and so it is with the type of man we write of. Suppressing all that may be good, a case is soon made out, and the new pastor enters upon his duties bidding for a sympathy almost akin to commiseration. We are glad to believe that this unfortunate, unministerial, unbrotherly and unchristian habit belongs only to a very limited class. It is a habit that should be frowned upon by the churches, and I believe is discountenanced by every preacher who is not a mere place-seeker. Such a characteristic is by no manner of means an evidence of superiority, but is rather a mark of narrowness of soul and of inferior ability. No broad-minded Christian worker ever stoops to elavate himself by any such questionable methods.

T. H. BLENUS.

New York Letter.

Knowing that our beloved corresponding secretary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society had just returned from a tour of inspection in Cuba, I dropped him a note asking a few questions, with the view of giving our readers his impressions of Cuba as a mission field. I also asked Bro. McLean to state what has been done by Catholics and Protestants in that island, and what, in his opinion, are the best methods to be employed in effective work there. As the interest in Cuba's present condition and in her prospects is international, I am certain all would like to read Bro. McLean's words. He says:

1. In my opinion Cuba is a fruitful missionary field. The priests as a rule are Spaniards. Naturally, their sympathies were with the Spaniards in the recent struggle. I was told by reputable people that they did not think the Cubans had any more rights than beasts. The archbishop of Cuba offered the Spanish Government $20,000,000, in the last days of the war, to build four battleships. He proposed to get this money by stripping the saints in the churches of their crowns and jewels. For these reasons the church has in large measure lost its influence over the people.

Churches abound, masses are said every day in the week, the confessional is open, gifts are made to the saints, but the people are ignorant and degraded. At no time has the church done much for the moral and spiritual well-being of the Cubans. Lottery tickets are for sale everywhere, bullfights are as popular as they are in Spain. Sunday is like other days; most of the business houses are open; tradesmen of all kinds carry on their work.

Americans are all but worshiped. The Cubans have begun to lift up their heads and to look for their redemption. They believe that the day of civil and religious liberty is at hand.

2. You ask me to state what I think should be done. I think that Bibles and New Testaments should be sent to Cuba by the thousands. These should be in Spanish and in English. Most of the people that I saw want to be able to read and to talk English. They regard English as the language of freedom. Day-schools and Sunday-schools should be opened. The gospel should be preached to the people in their own tongue. Church buildings should be erected. There is nothing that will do so much to stir up the priests to reform their own lives and to do their best work as to have Protestant churches planted throughout Cuba.

3. The Southern Baptists have been at work in Cuba for some twelve years. They bought a theater for $60,000 and transformed it into a church. The location is a capital one. This building will seat about 1,200 people. Dr. Alberto J. Diaz is the chief worker in Havana. He told me that he baptized 3,000 people with his own hands. About half that number are living and remain. He planted seven churches. There are only two left. His converts have been killed in war. The churches in the suburbs have been destroyed. Dr. Diaz has been in prison six times. He was set at liberty on the condition that he should leave the country. For three years and a half he has been in Mexico. Recently he has returned and has reopened his church. This is the only Protestant church in Havana. I was told that there was no other Protestant church on the island. The Sunday evening I was in Havana Dr. Diaz spoke. I think there were at least 800 people present. Being a Cuban and speaking the Spanish language fluently he naturally commands the attention of the people and secures good audiences. His work has been marvelously successful.

4. The Americans are pouring into Cuba. The people in Havana expect at least 20,000 Americans within the next six months. Protestant churches must be planted troughout the island. These churches in a little while will be self-supporting. Meanwhile, the Cubans are poor. They need healp. The island has been desolated by war. With the return of peace and the establishment of good government Cuba will be one of the richest countries in the world. The land will yield three or four crops in a year.

Lyman Abbott, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, Brooklyn, read to his congregation yesterday morning (the 27th) a letter resigning the pastorate of that historic church. He is now sixty-three years old and has begun to feel the burden of advancing age. His physician has warned him that he must either give up his editorial work on the Outlook or the pastorate of Plymouth. He does the later. Abbott has made quite a stir now and then by what has been termed "reckless utterances" in his pulpit, especially so in the recent series of discourses he preached on the Bible. It was reported at the time that his congregation lustily cheered his assaults on the trustworthiness of certain parts of the Scriptures. It is apparent, according to what has come through certain personal channels, from within the ring, that the Doctor found it necessary to try certain "attractions" to get a respectable hearing, at least on Sunday evenings. One season, high-class music was tried and failed. So they thought best to try the old Bible in Plymouth Church. Judging from Lyman Abbott's "Pantheism," and "Evolution," and "Socialism," and "Destructive Criticism" which seem to be uppermost in his reported sermonic and editorial thought, it is safe to infer that the preaching of the simple gospel in Plymouth pulpit is somewhat rare. Curiosity brought the "crowds" out to hear the lecturer attack the Bible. I say lecturer because he is pre-eminently a lecturer, and not a preacher in the New Testament sense of that holy office—to proclaim Christ as the Savior of lost men. Dr. Abbott has a great hearing throughout the weekly issue of the Outlook, and it is to be regretted that the simple, beautiful, and only divine plan of salvation through Christ is not more prominently set forth by him in that journal.

Bro. J. S. Sweeney, who recently resigned at Paris, Ky., after a pastorate of twenty-eight years, is perhaps one of the ablest defenders of the Christian faith in America. He has held between eighty and ninety religious discussions in various parts of this country, having met with wonderful skill Infidels, Agaostics, Universalists, Spiritualists, Baptists and Pedobaptists. He has received into the First Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) over 3,000 members during his pastorate. His church has now about 1,500 members, and through its social, intellectual and financial standing dominates in a large measure Bourbon County, and to a great extent controls the sentiment of Central Kentucky. His father, a minister, is still living at the age of 93, and his three brothers were able ministers of the Word, one of whom, Z. T. Sweeney, was consul general to Constantinople under President Harrison. Bro. Sweeney's purpose in resigning is to lecture in many places on the evidences of Christianity.

Bro. F. M. Rains' tract, "The Success of Modern Missions," ought to be read by every preacher in the land, and sowed broadcast through all our congregations. It is surcarged with vital power and inspiration. It will put a quietus on objections to Christian missions.

Let every pastor see to it that the young people of his flock organize themselves into a Bethany Reading Circle, or better still, let the pastor, if possible, lead the courses of study himself. These three books, "Sketches of the Pioneers," "The Life and Teaching of Jesus" and "Our Mission Fields" are gems. The good brerhren Power, Willett and Lhamon, who wrote them, put their very best into these books. The proper training of our young people is one of the great needs of our time, and these three lines of study are the very ones most needed. Bro. J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, Ohio, will give all desired information about this work. May God guide and bless this important enterprise and sustain our noble national superintendent in his great labor of love.

Memories of Thomas Munnell.

Thomas Munnell, of happy memory, was as those intimately acquainted with him well know, a man of much more than ordinary ability and excellence of character.

Some of his articles in our quarterlies and best weeklies bear the marks of scholarship and much thought. And while he never followed in the wake of any human being, he never aspired to become a leader. What he did with his pen and tongue he did, as I am convinced, in order to accomplish good. And while the reader of his clear, trenchant articles could not always agree with him in premise or conclusion, one thing he was compelled to admit—the manliness, earnestness and sincerity of the writer.

This Reformation or this Restoration movement, in letter and spirit, he had studied thoroughly. He well understood that the central personage, the one in whom all must believe who approach the Father seeking salvation, was and is and must ever be Jesus the Christ the Son of the living God, and that thus believing with all the heart, many cherished opinions become matters of indifference in serving God the Father through the Crucified One.

Some writers are startling—if not that, they are nothing. Much of their time is often taken up in answering objections to what they have said purposely to rouse such as sleep. I think Thomas Munnell was so constiuted, so mentally organized and equipped, as to aim directly at the mark, not intending to shock any one, wound any one or interfere in the least with the freedom of the least or weakest disciple of Christ. He wrote and spoke from a full heart in order to help his brethren in their endeavors to reach a higher plane, to breathe a purer, more healthful, spiritual atmosphere.

He was missionary to the core. No doubt here. To spread the gospel the world over, not only at home, but in foreign lands, this was his meat and his drink. And as well, building up the church of God, filling all hearts with love, fervent love, one toward another—love to God supreme and lifelong.

How deeply interested in every good word and work, so that all the churches liberally and with a cheerful heart should give to the great work of saving the lost. This was his life-work—to save. To this end he gave his best energies, in fact his life. I did not in all matters of expediency agree with my brother. No. But what of that? A Christian man, a fine speaker, a distinguished writer, a man of thought, of great heart and tender sympathies, an untiring worker in the Lord's vineyard, all count for something and my opinion and yours is cast aside. One of the greatest thinkers and preachers in the ministerial ranks of Missouri was at heart a Universalist, I am told. He kept this strictly as an opinion, let but few know as to his feelings. He preached the Word as I have heard him do, lived a pure and holy life, has gone to his reward. Thos. Campbell was in his opinions as to election and predestination a Calvinist. He never got rid of these opinions. He never preached them, never held them up to the public, kept them as private property. This was well. Aylett Raines was a Restorationist when he became a member of the Church of Christ, was such in opinion, not in faith. Wisely he never preached this view, and in a short time his opinion vanished as mist before the rising sun.

Thomas Munnell's faith was strong, unflagging, to the end. God gave him many years, and all these he consecrated to him who had blessed him so bountifully. He never grew old save in years. His heart was warm to young and old, and all alike loved him. Shadows now and then crossed his path and caused him to say or do that which in clearer light or with less burdened heart he would not have said or done. But his feet were ever in the path that leads to that bright and beautiful land where our vision is not obscured and where all cares and budens are forever laid aside. I have been with him in the houses of the rich and the poor, and his conduct was ever becoming a Christian gentleman. He was cheerful, hopeful, in manhood's prime; he was not morose or complaining as the end of his days drew near. He was poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith. The younger take the places of the of the older and feebler in many departments of life work. Of this he was cognizant, but at no time, under no circumstances, was he fault-finding. We who are gray-haired and of feeble step are permitted to look on while the hosts of brave young men are engaging with the enemy. In their need I am sure these young heroes will not forget the men who first chose the battlefield and fired the first gun. If mistaken, I am sure the great Captain from on high will reward the faithful ones when mustered out of service here. The body goes to the desert, the spirit to God who gave it.

With our brother the battlefield of life is over—joys unknown now realized.

"The night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile
Which he had loved long since and lost awhile."

SWAMP-ROOT Is the Great Remedy for Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid Troubles—To Prove its Wonderful Merits, Every Christian-Evangelist Reader May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

Well people have healthy kidneys.

You are in no danger of being sick if you keep your kidneys well.

They filter your blood, keep it pure and free from disease-breeding germs.

Your other organs may need care, but your kidneys most, because they do most.

If you are sick begin with your kidneys, because as soon as they are well they will help all the other organs to health.

The treatment of some diseases may be delayed without danger, not so with kidney disease.

Swamp-Root is the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is a genuine specific with wonderful healing action on the kidneys.

It will be found by both men and women just what is needed in all cases of kidney and bladder disorders, lame back, dull pain or ache in the back, gravel catarrh of the bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, uric acid troubles and Bright's disease, which is the worst form of neglected kidney trouble.

Swamp-Root corrects inability to hold water and promptly overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night.

The way to be well is to pay attention to your kidneys.

To take Swamp-Root when you are suffering from clogged kidneys.

This prompt, mild and wonderful remedy is easy to get at the drug stores in fifty cent and one dollar bottles.

To prove its merits you may have a sample bottle, and a book telling more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail.

The great discovery, Swamp-Root, is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to kindly mention the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending their addresses to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y.

extract from a sketch prepared by Bro. Munnell for a book I propose giving to the public by and by. It is concerning Moses E. Lard as thinker, speaker, writer: "Much of his [Bro. Lard's] time he walked in the shadows, but w walking heavenward all the same. Sometimes he was joyful, almost ecstatic, especially when the wings of his imagination and matchless pathos swept him up almost in sight of heaven; at such moments he saw and felt himself surrounded with all the verities of the upper world: you heard his first burst of glorious surprise in meeting his mother, his own family and the many he loved on earth. You would see him looking back on old earth again, and noting the 'little undulations' in the ground whence their bodies had recently sprung; then turning to them again all around him, you would hear that strange shrill voice of tumultuous joy as he seemed to take the whole situation in. Many ministers can stir the soul to transient ecstasy, but who was ever able to so disturb the deep waters and cause the sea to roll on so long after the sermon was ended?"

What greetings on the "shining shore," in that world of light, life and immortality!

Hiram College Jubilee Endowment.

1. A CONSPICUOUS YEAR.

The year 1900 is conspicuous as the closing year of the nineteenth century—the most remarkable century of the Christian era. It is safe to say that the race has made more progress in all lines of development, both material and intellectual, than during any ten centuries of the world's history. Ought not this closing year of this wonderful century to be signalized by the greatest achievements of any year of the century? The eyes of all are turned upon the coming year. All benevolent and philanthropic enterprises are already beginning to plan for great things during the year that is soon to be ushered in. This is as it should be. Let all awake to the occasion and its opportunities. The year 1900 may indeed be an epoch-making year in every benevolent enterprise.

2. A STRIKING FACT.

It is worthy of note that the closing year of the century is Hiram's Jubilee Year. Fifty years of history will be completed at the Commencement in June, 1900. The students of Hiram, the friends of Hiram, the friends of education, have a double incentive for doing great things for Hiram College in this conspicuous year. $250,000 is a small amount to ask the friends of this institution to give it. No institution is considered adequately endowed in this day that has less than half a million dollars. If Hiram shall receive $250,000 as an addition to its present endowment, it will enter upon the twentieth century with almost boundless possibilities for good in the line of Christian education.

3. THE RELATIVE IMPORTANCE OF OUR EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

The Methodist Church has decided to signalize the close of the century by raising twenty millions of dollars for the general purposes of the church. Ten millions of this will go to the cause of education, the other ten million to missionary and other general interests of the church. It will be seen that the Methodist Church regards education as equal in importance to all other general interests combined, including its missionary work, and are they wrong in this? Is not education fundamental to everything? Certainly this will not be denied by any thoughtful man. May not the Disciples as a people learn a lesson from the Methodists? Has not the time come when education should come to the front and occupy the most prominent place in the eyes of our brotherhood until at least we have a few adequately endowed colleges? With the fullest sympathy for all our institutions of learning and without any desire to monopolize the attention of the brotherhood, Hiram calls upon the Disciples of Christ to join together in one supreme effort to give the institution such an endowment as will enable it to hold a place among the leading colleges of the country.

4. THE NECESSITY FOR COLLEGE ENDOWMENT.

If any fail to see the necessity for college endowment they have but to consider the history of all colleges, to be convinced of its importance. Schools of academic grade that teach a comparatively small curriculum of study and consequently do the work with few teachers, run without endowment; but there is not a college in our land that maintains the average college standard and does work of the average quality that can run without endowment. If colleges had to be supporred by tuition fees the expenses would be so great that three-fourths of the young people of the country would be cut off from collegiate training. Furthermore it is useless to talk about endowing colleges with one hundred or even two hundred thousand dollars in this day of advancing standards, when the field of education has broadened so rapidly. Hiram college teaches twice as many classes as it did twenty years ag and it must do it to meet the demands upon it and compete successfully with other institutions. The same thing is true in a general way of other institutions. This means that colleges must have twice as much endowment as was necessary twenty years ago.

5. HOW TO HOLD OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

A great deal is said about our young people attending state and denominational colleges. It is urged as a duty upon our brethren to patronize our own colleges. I am in sympathy with this demand, but I am fully convinced that we cannot hold our young people in our own colleges unless we make our colleges equal in advantages offered to those of other religious bodies. If we will endow our colleges properly, increase their courses of instruction in number and strength until they are at least up to the average, we will hold our young people. In other words, when we give our young people what they want and what they can get elsewhere, we will have no trouble in keeping them in our own schools. People will not patronize colleges simply as a matter of duty to the college or religious body with which they are connected. They must have what they want, what the age demands and what is furnished elsewhere, and when this is done no argument will be necessary to induce our young people to patronize our schools.

6. A POPULAR ENDORSEMENT.

Why cannot a college be endowed by the people by a great popular movement? Why cannot at least 50,000 persons join heart and hand to the endowment of Hiram College on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary? 50,000 people who would average $5.00 apiece would give Hiram the $250,000 that it needs to insure its perpetuity and enlarged usefulness. Hiram has been a college of the people. Hundreds ot young men and women who have been educated at Hiram never could have had the advantage of a collegiate training had it not been for Hiram College. Expenses have been kept marvelously low for the purpose of bringing higher education within the reach of young people of very limited means. More than half of the young people in Hiram to-day are self-supporting students. Such an institution has a right to call upon the people to endow it. Will not the people respond?

HIRAM COLLEGE JUBILEE ENLISTMENT CARD.

Whereas, the friends of Hiram College are uniting in a movement to add $250,000 to the endowment of that institution on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary in June of the year 1900; and whereas, an effort is now being made to secure the names of 50,000 persons, more or less, who will make a donation of from one dollar to one thousand dollars each for that purpose, I hereby agree to join this movement by promising to pay one dollar or more and will name the definite amount of my donation and the time of payment when called upon to do so.

Mankind needs a herald, like the heralds of old, to proclaim so that all may hear, the vital importance of health. The average man of to-day thinks it beneath his dignity to bother about his health until it is gone. Even then he only takes measures to restore it in an indifferent, contemptuous sort of way.

Men cannot learn too soon that health is the most important thing in life—in fact, is life. Without it the most brilliant man will be a failure, and the most robust man will rapidly become a physical wreck. The man who neglects the little headaches, the loss of appetite and sleep, nervousness, hot flushings, cold chills, heavy head, lax muscles, and the multitude of bad feelings that are the heralds of approaching sickness and disease, must pay a tremendous penalty. For men who suffer in this way there is no medicine equal to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It sharpens the appetite, corrects all disorders of the digestion, invigorates the liver. makes the assimilation of the food perfect, purifies the blood and enriches it with the life-giving elements that build new, healthy flesh. It is the great blood-maker and flesh-builder. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption and is the best of all known remedies for nervous troubles. Thousands have told, over their own signatures, the stories of the wonders it has performed. Honest dealers will not urge a substitute for the sake of a little extra profit.

Thomas Fletcher, of Clifton Station, Fairfax Co., Va., writes: "I suffered terrible tortures for ten years with 'gastralgia' (pain in the stomach). I then took six bottles of Dr. Pierce' Golden Medical Discovery, which completely cured me."

When the bowels are regular the body will feel good and the mind will be active. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. They never gripe. All good dealers sell them and have nothing else "just as good."

The Moody Bible Institute.

In daily life, in all parts of the country, I find that there are hundreds of consecrated men and women with an intense love for souls who feel called of God to do his work. All they lack to do effective service for him is a systematic knowledge of the Bible.

The question asked me hundreds of times by young people convicted by a direct call of God for evangelistic work, or where they could be used for his glory, was, "Where can I obtain this knowledge?" This question started the Bible Institute in Chicago as a training school for Home and Foreign Missions ten years ago.

I have been convinced the way to reach the masses is to reach them—that is, to go after them. I have not announced "Hold the Fort" in my meetings for years; the time for holding the fort is past, and now we must go out of the fort and fight hand to hand with the powers of evil. The Bible Institute at Chicago aims to equip workers who can fight this way—hand to hand.

The school is open the year round, and as the course is in a circle of two years students may enter at any time.

Between one and two hundred of those who have passed through the door of the Institute are telling the story of the gospel in foreign lands and more than seven hundred are engaged in Home Missions and as evangelistic preachers, regular pastoral work and church visitors, to say nothing about those who have gone forth with the gospel message of songs.

The many missions in Chicago give unbounded field for personal work, and the lecture of the morning and the study in the afternoon find practical demonstration in the missions and cottage prayer meetings of the evenings. Students are not only instructed in preaching the gospel, but in singing it as well. No one doubts the power of song, and many a recruit in the army of the redeemed has received a call in some message of song.

Prof. D. B. Towner, the well-known gospel singer and writer, is superintendent of the musical course with competent assistants.

The Institute is undenominational, or better, interdenominational, and enrolls men and women as students.

Separate dormitories are provided for both sexes. Representatives from all races have been enrolled as students the past year, and more than thirty denominations were represented among the students last year.

I shall be glad to hear personally from any who desire to know more of the work of the Institute at my Chicago address, 80 Institute Place. D. L. MOODY.

Christian Science.

I have heard and read a great deal about the mysteries of modern Spiritualism and Christian Science. And upon this subject I do not speak as one "having authority," but as a humble disciple of Christ, who has witnessed the evil influence of those who advocate the doctrine, upon the church. During the past year the disciples of Mrs. Eddy have increased 15,000, or about 60 per cent. Never before did people believe so little and so much as at the present time. The most ignorant and the most highly educated alike consult mediums. Here in the United States, with a free discussion of every question, we have a cradle of new ideas of all sorts. As A. Campbell has said, "There is everything in this great world of inventions, from the cranium of an Indian trapper down to the trap of a spiritual rapper of the Rochester school." And nothing seems too improbable or absurd for the average man's faith.

I wish now to refer to the indictment brought against Mrs. Mills and Miss Lyon for the murder of Harold Frederic, of England. Mr. Frederic suffered a stroke of paralysis about the middle of August, and he called these two women to pray for him. A few hours before his death he called medical aid, and the doctors testify that, if he had been under their treatment, he would in all probability have recovered. This may or may not be true. But to expose the fallacy of this Christian Science doctrine, let me quote from the evidence of Mrs. Mills, one of the Scientists examined in Mr. Frederic's case. It is reported in the Congregationalist:

"What was his condition when you saw him first?"

"We do not take a diagnosis of cases."

"Supposing it is a broken leg?"

"Cannot God take care of a broken leg? God is infinite and all-powerful. He is a good surgeon."

"Do you understand the human body and its rules?"

"I do not study the body. I leave the power of life in the hands of God."

"Have you any medical knowledge or training?"

"No; I know nothing about medicine and disease, and don't want to. I believe in Jesus. I am a convert. Disease is mental and so must the remedy be."

"Is it imagination?"

"There is no reality in disease, for God only is real."

"Do you follow the same treatment of prayer and exhortation for every disease?"

"The same in every case. The whisper of truth in the mortal mind will bring relief. Disease and death have no foundation in truth."

Such science is neither scientific nor Christian. And it is a matter of regret that any of our state legislatures should permit these people to practice their theories at the bedsides of the sick. It is a kind of conglomeration of metaphysics, paganism and Christianity. Let us wage war against it, and cast out of our land those possessed of familiar spirits. The saloon, Mormonism and soothsayers should all go together. WM. H. KNOTTS.

Centennial of Transylvania University.

The committees appointed by the Executive Committee of the Board of Curators of Kentucky University and by the society of Alumni of that institution acting together, have decided to observe the 100th anniversary of the opening of Transylvania University by suitable exercises in Lexington on Sunday, Jan. 1, 1899, which is the anniversary day and also during the commencement week, which begins with the 4th day of June next.

The arrangements for the commemoration on the first proximo have been almost completed. Most of the religious denominations which have churches in Lexington were represented among the presidents of Transylvania University and probably all of them among the benefactors, whose liberality sustained the university in many troublous times. For these reasons the Committee of Arrangements has suggested to the ministers of Lexington that they recognize the anniversary in connection with the morning services of that day in such way and to such extent as they may severally think best.

Formal commemorative exercises will be held in the evening in Morrison Chapel, which will be appropriately decorated for the occasion. The living Alumni of Transylvania University, Bacon College and Kentucky University are invited to be present at these exercises without other notification of their welcome. Invitations will be sent to the presidents of the colleges and universities in the United States and to distinguished persons in other walks of life.

The recognized ability of the Rt. Rev. Thos. U. Dudley, D. D., his high place in the church that gave Transylvania University its first president, and his connection with the family of the Hon. Henry Clay, the fruit of whose active interest in the university is enjoyed by its successor, all designated him as the one who should be asked to deliver the principal address of the occasion. The committee congratulates the friends of the two universities on the assurance of a successful commemoration which Bishop Dudley's acceptance of the invitation affords.

Arrangements for the celebration in June have already begun and will be pushed to a successful consummation. Further announcement of this will be made later. The prospect of a large gathering of Alumni, former students and other friends of Transylvania University, Bacon College and Kentucky University is already encouraging. Steps were first taken in this matter by the society of Alumni at its June meeting two years ago when a committee was appointed to suggest plans, program, etc., etc.

It is indeed hoped that the attention which these celebrations will draw to Kentucky University will stimulate the liberality of friends of higher education and thus result in the ample endowment of the institution, whose income has never been equal to either its opportunities or its needs, but no advantage will be taken of either of the commemorative occasions to solicit contributions.

Bad for Bronchitis

but extremely good for the sufferer from that harassing disease is Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. No medicine can compare with this great remedy in the prompt and permanent aid it gives in all bronchial affections. It stops the cough, soothes the irritated throat, and induces refreshing sleep.

"I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One bottle cured me."

J. C. WOODSON, P. M.,
Forest Hill, W. Va.

"A short time ago I was taken with a severe attack of bronchitis, and neither physicians nor ordinary remedies gave me relief. In despair of finding anything to cure me, I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle entirely cured me."

GEO. B. HUNTER, Altoona, Pa.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

now put up in half-size bottles at half price—50 cents.

Many of the records of Transylvania University and nearly all those of Bacon College, perished long ago in the fires that destroyed their principal buildings or were otherwise lost. The committee, earnestly desirous of collecting information concerning those institutions of learning, the predecessors of Kentucky University will be thankful for authentic information concerning either of them and its graduates, that may be sent to the undersigned at No. 181 West Third St., Lexington, Ky. A reasonable price will be paid for catalogues and other publications of either; also for catalogues of Kentcuky University publised in the years between 1859 and 1866 and in 1868, 1869 and 1877. Would also like to have the present addresses of all graduates and former students of these institutions.

GEO. W. KEMPER,
Secretary Committee of Arrangements.

Methods of Work.

J. H. GARRISON — Dear Brother: I want space enough to express my cordial endorsement of Bro. Lynn's suggestion for a kindergarten department in every church, especially in all our city churches where it is unlawful to take children to the regular meetings on the Lord's day. Many mothers must forego the advantages of the Lord's day meeting or leave her children uncared for. Build a room for this purpose, appiont persons to superintend and teach the little ones and have all the children of the members, and all others who will attend the church, gathered in and cared for.

I think it would be well to have the hired girl go along to assist in caring for the children instead of remaining in the kitchen to prepare a feast for the family.

A Suggestion.

I read with appreciation "Early Times in Indiana," in a late number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, written by D. R. Lucas. I like such themes. They help to bind this active rushing age to the blessed memories of the past. I readily recall the features of Eld. John O'Kane whose portrait I painted nearly a score of years ago for his widow in Pike County, Mo. I could easily discern those traits ascribed to him by Bro. Lucas, in the lineaments of the small picture from which I worked. I love to dwell on the old times in Missouri and the early struggles of the workers, for our plea in Monroe and adjoining counties have a special charm for me because that was, and is yet, home. (My suggestion will come later.)

Although I am just now nearing the half century mark I can see that the old faces that beamed with religious enthusiasm and zeal at the old meetings have about all "passed over the river" and the next generation is growing gray. I can well remember in old Middlegrove vicinity having old Bro. Bassett (who passed away since I have been in Washington, at about ninety-two) pointed out to me the place in the white oak forest down the creek, where the first old log church of our people in that section was built. My good old grandfather helped in that noble work.

Later that rude old building was torn down and moved to the eastern edge of the village. In about 1855, that gave way to our first frame building, which in turn gave place to the present building in about 1883. In these first two old church buildings T. M. Allen, Alfred Wilson and others of like character proclaimed the primitive gospel to an appreciative people. I like to recall what was said of these stalwart old laborers for the Master's cause. That was before my old teacher, Bro. J. A. Berry, now of Ashland, Mo., I believe, came to our home village to take charge of the "Academy" and to preach too in our church. Another thing I remember was that of hearing about the young Haleys who "were making preachers of themselves" over about old Antioch some half a dozen miles away in the edge of Randolph County. Our beloved T. P. is one of those boys. Bro. Alex. Procter's early home was there too and Bro. W. M. Featherston, who took my confession and baptized me over thirty years ago, was raised in that nest of coming religious giants and drove oxen and rode wild colts with the rest of them. Dear indeed must be to them the hallowed memories associated with old Antioch neighborhood. The characteristics of several of those old pioneers who labored before these last named I can remember and Bro. Lucas' narrative brings up several of such to my mind both interesting and amusing. But consideration of space forbids me to narrate them and my suggestion is, cannot some good brother with a genius for gathering data, incidents, experiences, etc., collect and put into book form a history of our early church in Missouri? I would suggest that it embrace only our growth up to say 1860, not too much given to explanations of our plea or other theological subjects now already voluminously written and spoken upon, but filled with the common every-day experiences of our people in their first efforts to establish New Testament Christianity. The advent of every John the Baptist or first evangelist into each and every community I would have recorded. I would like too to have related some experiences in each locality, facts recalled, which would enable us to go back, as it were, and keep step with these our venerated pathfinders and sympathize with them in their joys and sorrows, successes and failures, and thus as near as possible follow or go with them up to the beginning of the Civil War. To attempt to bring it up to the present date would necessitate so much condensation that it would fail to fulfill my idea of an actual history combined with personal reminiscences at once interesting, entertaining and instructive. I would also have it illustrated as much as possible with portraits of our first workers and their houses, if means could be obtained to do so. I hope I've been sufficiently explicit in my suggestion, and if there is no such book can we not have one? R. J. TYDINGS.

Schools of Thought Among the Disciples.

It is not to be expected that all will think alike in any religious community, nor is it to be desired. The toleration of opinion in matters of expediency, and the tenacity of belief in matters of fundamental importance, has always been the boast of the Disciples. This has given wide range and liberty of view, while it has conserved the body and unified its faith. Even in the first century there was this same divergence of opinion, as the result of provincialisms.

Among us just now there are at least five distinct schools of thought.

(1) There are our "sound brethren," who call themselves Old School Disciples, and are often nicknamed "antis" (a term of reproach which should be discarded), who are often so very perpendicular that some of them actually lean over to the side of sectarianism and schism. No more sincere people ever lived than are found among this class of brethren who, too often, have allowed the moss to accumulate on their backs and the kinks to get into their theological wigs. Bless them, they will see things differently some day when they get out of the woods into the open air of larger privilege and opportunity!

(2) Then there are those of the opposite extreme, who are so awfully liberal that they have almost lost their balance and are ready to plunge headlong into the lap of free-thought and latitudinarianism. It is easy to let go of some of the old-fashioned ideas of the past, because they are out of style, but where to stop is the serious question; so that the safe course is to hold fast to the homely old ideas, while scrutinizing with jealous care the new forms of thought lest, perchance, one's equilibrium may be endangered.

(3) Another class are the critics. Our Current Reformation always had a bountiful supply of critics, both high and low. Since my boyhood days they have always been a curious study to me. These chaps that go about with such a complacent air of scholastic importance—how Mr. Campbell used to take them off with his fine sarcasm! They remind one of Dr. Thomas Chalmers and the scientists, in his astronomical sermons. But we need critics, and plenty of them, to be sure, if they will only come to us in the garments of humility. These are the people who go on before the procession and blaze the way into the realms of advanced thought. If, at times, they wander off too far and lose their bearings, by heroically sounding the alarm they will come back again to camp, and start off anew on another scent.

(4) Then there is a class who, while holding on to the conservative teachings of our people, on the one hand, cast longing eyes towards systematic theology, denominational fellowship and ecclesiastical authority et id omnes gen. I confess a sympathy for this tendency myself. Have we not been advocating for nearly a century a plea for the union of God's people? And if, in our anxiety for its consummation, we are tempted to meet the people more than half way, will we not be forgiven for this trifling iniquity? What if we do carry interdenominational fellowship a little too far, and even forget some of our peculiar ideas? To be frank about this matter, however, we need to be on our guard a trifle, right here, and keep a firmer attitude on the position we as a people have so long held.

(5) How shall I speak of a school of thought among us, that is intensely conservative, somewhat narrow, always safe and sound, plodding along with slow and steady gait, like a sturdy old ox, good-natured, cynical at times, cultured, refined and ever on the alert to defend the faith once for all delivered to the saints? How this school has laid down the law on church polity, exploited in many an arena on the music question, in days long since, and even yet maintains a position of "masterly inactivity," watching with ever jealous eye the religious horoscope of our times! Bless their stars! like the Old Guard, they are always to be relied on when the fight rages and the battle waxes hot! Finally, the highest type of a Disciple of Christ among us for this wonderful day in which we live, would be a blending of all the better elements of these various schools. If a composite picture could gather all of their features into one likeness, and our people could use it as a type, it would be suggestive, at least, of what we really are, and how much we have yet to achieve in order to be fashioned unto the likeness of the Lord Jesus Christ. Notes and News.

"Michigan Grains."

I was at Ionia on Lord's day last, and had a pleasant visit with the brethren. Brother Berry preached two excellent discourses. He is doing fine work there, and is loved by all.

The brethren in Ionia are walking in love, and therefore have a bright prospect before them. Their splendid membership is increasing.

The church at Yale will give their pastor, Bro. McColl, a donation and supper on the 23rd. He enters upon the work of the fourth year with the brethren there. He recently baptized a Methodist minister and his wife. Brother and Sister Manley will now be disciples only.

The brethren at Yale will hold a series of meetings in the near future, with a bright prospect of success, as the field is apparently ripe for the harvest.

Brother Spayd lately baptized two promising young men at Owasso. He begins a series of meetings next Lord's day evening, as he closes his fourth year of service there. He has resigned his work there, his resignation taking effect the 31st of December. There is a chance now for some church to secure a good pastor with a good record. It will not be long before he is engaged again, for only when he was engaged as state evangelist has he been without a pastorate. He is just in his prime.

Brother Smith has resigned at Algonac.

Muir is yet without a pastor. "The harvest is plenty, but the laborers are few."

Three have lately been baptized at High Banks, where Bro. Jeffrey labors.

The Indianapolis Co-operation.

The churches in the Hoosier capital have inaugurated a movement that may prove a most wholesome departure. We have been needing a departure ever since we came upon the stage of action; and, long ago, we ought to have learned a lesson from our sectarian neighbors that would have added the element of common sense to our numerous elements of uncommon sense.

The movement is in the way of organized co-operation. There are, in all, fourteen congregations (and five or six incompatibles) in the city. They (excusing the incompatibles) have undertaken to evangelize the municipality. All recognize the fact that the city is growing faster than the church; and it is clear that something must be done or the church will fail to keep up with the duty it has undertaken. While the incompatibles are assembling in little squads and discussing the usefulness of good music, of activity among the young people, and advocating the apostolic authority of the eldership, these fourteen congregations are trying to plan for the salvation of the people.

Haughville is a suburb on the west side of the river. Several years ago a congregation was founded in this then rural section, and its little meeting house has now come to be at the very center of a thriving population. Not stopping to discuss the causes, we have to record the sad fact that the church has failed to grow as the field has grown. In fact, "Judah" is lower there than he was a dozen years ago. The harmony of spirit has been diminished, and the activity of the body is correspondingly reduced. The short way to tell the story is to say their title to the house is in imminent danger, and they plead inability to hold it.

The co-operation is engaged upon the problem of saving the cause in Haughville. The title has been made over to a properly authorized committee of this body, and the co-operation has undertaken to pay off the indebtedness. The plan is to receive from the membership their regular weekly contributions, whereby they have been supporting their preacher, and devote every dollar of it to the debt. Of the many ministers in the co-operation there will always be one ready and willing to supply the pulpit with preaching; and when anything is to be paid the co-operation will furnish the money to pay it.

We are watching this experiment with great interest; for, if it succeeds, it will be a good thing to try elsewhere.

Who knows but that this may be the beginning of what we so sadly need—a plan? If, without any planning, we have surprised the world by a growth to over a million in 80 years, what may we not do with an orderly plan? Long ago we should have been hitting upon something. We have many hundred preachers, and some good ones at that, who are out of employment, and there is more than a congregation for every such preacher which languishes in spiritual inactivity for the want of ministerial service.

Methodism, Presbyterianism, Lutheranism, Catholicism, is better than that. I dare anybody to answer me! WALTER S. SMITH.

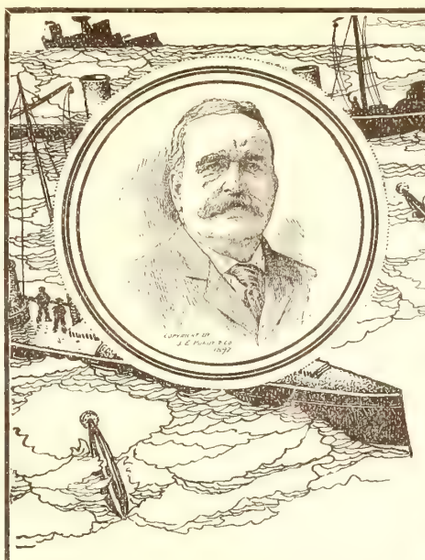
Michigan's Greatest Meeting.

By far the greatest meeting among the Disciples of Christ in America this season, and the best ever held in the Wolverine state, has just closed in Buchanan, Mich., with 205 additions; 32 came last night. We parted only "at midnight," praising God and humbled under his mighty hand.

When in a town of 2,000 inhabitants, with eight denominational churches, such a victory is attained we must exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" For powerful, persistent, patient, pointed, plain preaching of the New Testament doctrine in pulpit and from "house to house," evangelists Scoville and Scott are without peers in their heaven-sanctioned work.

Pastors, listen! Chas. Reign Scoville will preach more "old Jerusalem gospel" in a month's meeting than most of us do in ten years, and it is preached with a simplicity and force few possess. Bro. Scott is a most efficient personal worker and chorister. Their faith in God, in Christ, in the gospel and in men inspires every hearer to do his best. Their work is absolutely free from sensationalism and catchy methods, but their enthusiasm, earnestness and faith are—well—tremendous.

Editors, doctors, college and high-school teachers, graduates, tradesmen, men and women of talent and culture have come to "Jesus and the Bible;" many whole families are now united in Christ. Denominationalism received a terrible blow, creeds and doctrines of men were not dragged into the pulpit, but the Bible was held up so high that men and women by the score just ran to the blessed Book. The isms of churchianity were not exposed to ridicule, but Christ was so exalted that people saw "no man save Jesus only," and they forsook human names for "the only name." At every baptismal service this subject was briefly presented with a clearness that won every person to the truth of the "one baptism."



Cards and tracts on "Our Position," "Baptism," "Christian Unity," etc., were placed in every home. Our evangelists are humble as John, daring as Daniel, earnest as Paul and dependent on God, giving all praise always to him.

They drew men to Christ, not to themselves. Converts know whom they believe and why. No, we are not afraid of their falling away as much as we would be of the few converts who came in an ordinary meeting. "Christian unity" was preached with mighty emphasis and won the very best people from the denominations. Charts, banners, blackboards, helped much in teaching the people. The opposition and persecution of the churches of the town greatly helped us and the truth. The spirit of the martyrs was inspired by the preacher and possessed the converts. Some few were kept from obedience by ungodly or sectarian parents. We had a noble church to begin with and "every man stood in his place." Like the Spanish-American war, this meeting means to us "enlargement" in every way.

May God help us to be true to our trust and may God long spare these noble evangelists and continue to use them for his glory.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

At Oregon, with my friend, Clyde Darsie and the army of assistants, we had one of the pleasant and happy institutes of the year, the only shadow being caused by the fact that the minister would soon leave them for a post-graduate course at Chicago, and the church was feeling as if the place would not soon be filled. Quite a compliment to a young man in virtually his first work, but it was worthily bestowed. The sessions were all well attended while the Sunday work was very heavy on all of us, but was happily and so profitably spent. Oregon is one of the schools that in all its labors never forgets others. A message of love and sympathy was sent to Bro. Hugh Benton, sick in the Philadelphia hospital, one of the devoted boys of the school and church.

Oakland (Boone) has for years had a constant effort to carry on the Master's work on account of removals, deaths and reverses, but in the band remaining a few are determined to continue honoring the Christ by helping the poor, hence their giving to this work, more or less, every year.

At New Franklin our work was under circumstances similar to Oregon, for W. T. Henson had resigned against the wish of all and could not be persuaded to recall the resignation. J. M. Settle continues as superintendent, while our brother, Col. Estill, continues the main support of the church and was in the past most kind and generous to our work.

In the new year's work, hear of but few changes in the superintendents of the state, which speaks well for the superintendents and good for the schools.

At Huntington, Alfred Munyon, one of the host of Canton boys, mentioned our work, asking the church to help the faithful in the school by paying the pledge, and the secretary now remits. Thanks to such friends as Alfred, who is doing such a successful work for Christ while qualifying himself for even better things.

Four young misses did us great favor last summer at Merwin, but by some mistake it did not reach this office, so the school sends us another offering for the children and Christ, and it goes to-day to John Giddens who is so faithful and devoted in all this good work, and who never consults ought save the work.

At Dover we had the Lafayette County Bible-school Rally, but the severe weather cut off the attendance, but for interest it was fine. Brethren Scott, of Higginsville, and Fenstermacher, of Lexington, were ever helping in our counsels, while W. H. Cook, the preacher, never missed a session. Mrs. E. L. Peddicord is our county superintendent, and one more faithful is not in the state. My home with Bro. and Sister Harwood was delightfully pleasant, thanks to good Christian friends. But my association with that genial scholar, Geo. W. Plattenburg, ws indeed a feast in every sense. Quiet and unpretentious, yet well versed in biblical lore, I always court such opportunities and associations as his. Wish such men never grew old. Geo. B. Gordon, the school superintendent, seemed right in his element with us, while he gave me the dues from Dover to date, as he always does. The Lord bless such.

Good reports are coming in from the home department, but more schools ought to enjoy its blessings. Have you ever tried it in your school? If not, then you are losing an opportunity to help the school, the home, the church. Do you want to try it, and can I help you in it? That is mywork and I am glad to do it.

W. H. Hawkins, county superintendent in Nodaway, writes for the apportionments of all the schools of the county and he means to be one that has a Teacher's Bible at Plattsburg convention. Good. Who else of the county superintendents will?

To the many friends, especially the preachers who helped us in our fanancial straits, thank you all, and God bless you for it, is the prayer of H. F. DAVIS.

Arkansas Mission Notes for November.

Bro. M. A. Smith has had 45 additions to the church at Bald Knob and vicinity during the last few months. He is "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Arrangements have been made to retain him in that field at a better support. The writer spent a few days with them.

Bro. Crutcher is doing a fine work at Pine Bluff.

Proper energy and appreciation of responsibility by the few members of Lonoke and vicinity can secure a house of worship and a live congregation in that important center—the county-seat of Lonoke county.

W. R. Johnson, who has done valiant service at Atkins and in a number of churches near by, talks of going to Texas. His praise is heard from all.

Van Buren is arranging for a preacher to begin with the beginning of the year. This is a very important point.

Bro. T. N. Kincaid gives a most excellent report of three months' work at Hot Springs. Sermons, 23; pastoral visits, 300; money raised on salary, $120; current expenses, $23; missions, $2.80; total, $143,80. Bro. Kincaid, if he can be supported, will bring the Hot Springs church to the front.

Bro. Clark presents his report of good work during the month in the Southwest District. Report is not at hand at this writing, being left on file. His work has been interfered with the last two months by ill health.

Mena has called F. F. Wyatt, of Kansas City, Kas. This place must be helped. To neglect it would be the loss of the most sacrificing work that has been done in the state.

The state convention of the colored Disciples will meet Dec. 15, at Pea Ridge, in Lonoke county.

A SUGGESTION.—Is there a man, or a congregation, or several combined, that would like to select Hot Spring, Mena, or any one of the three other cities in Arkansas, where $100 in addition to what can be raised in the field will keep a good preacher for one year, or who will put $50 or $100 into any one of the three missionary districts, where it will enable a good evangelist to work? This would enable you to see just what your money is accomplishing. This may not be better than putting it into the general fund—probably not—but it would be much better than not doing the work. The churches in our own state that are not making prompt payments are preventing success.

Brethren, let us have all arrearages paid before Jan. 1, 1899. Happy holidays and increase of the Christ-spirit to all.

The Christian Library—Questions and Answers.

DEAR BRO. PHILLIPS:—What is the Christian Library of which you write in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and how can one be obtained? If it would not be too much trouble I would like a few particulars of your peculiar plan of work.

Yours, E. M. HAILE.

Kingman, Kan., Dec. 3, 1896.

REPLY.—The above card is a fair sample of of what we are daily receiving, and the publication of the following reply may serve for the enlightenment of others as well.

As its name implies, the Christian Library is a superb collection (ninety-one volumes) of the very best books of the Christian Church. They cover every possible phase ofthe "Current Reformation"—history, doctrine and work. Included in this collection is the celebrated "Christian Sunday-school Library" (forty volumes), a full line of C. E. works, the leading debates of our brethren, our best commentaries and works of reference, a number of missionary books and books of travel, and the best productions of our story-writers. In short, it is just such a library as every Christian Church, S. S. and C. E. ought to have.

My "peculiar plan of work" is to visit a church (when invited), hold a two weeks' meeting and endeavor by every means in my power to lead men to Christ. After each invitation I shall talk briefly on the Christian Library work, and endeavor to organize a library club of at least fifty members. To each of these members the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will be sent one year free.

At the close of the meeting proper, a series of four popular lectures will be given, at popular prices. In this way we shall endeavor to secure enough money to average $2.75 per club member, and also to pay my traveling expenses.

If this fails, other methods will be tried until success is assured.

After the library is secured, a "reading circle" is formed, a competent instructor selected and a systematic study of the books begun. Each circle will be allowed to arrange its own courses of reading if desired. The purpose of the library is threefold: 1. To thoroughly inform the brotherhood; 2. The sectarian brethren; 3. The outside world, as to our doctrine and work. If after such meeting the library is not placed I shall only ask the brethren to pay me at the rate of $12.50 per week and bear my traveling expenses.

I am arranging to visit Kansas and Missouri immediately after the holidays, and shall be glad to hear at once from all churches in that part of the country wanting meetings and library. Address the founder,

S. J. PHILLIPS.

A Day of Prayer.

A Jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you. —Lev. 25:11.

Without me ye can do nothing. — Jesus, John 15:5.

I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.—Paul, Phil. 4:13.

I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So, then, neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase.—1 Cor. 3: 6, 7.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Mal. 3:10.

I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 18:19.

There is manifest intense activity of thought and feeling pervading the church; the hearts of all true lovers of God's cause are full of earnest hopes and expectation for great things to be done for God's cause in this, the Jubilee Year of the American Christian Missionary Society. The friends of missions are stirred to intense interest in the hope that our missionary work is to be lifted to a higher plane than ever before.

Believing that all this is well-pleasing to God, and knowing that without his help all human plans must fail, we earnestly ask our churches and our brethren everywhere to observe Lord's day, Jan. 15, as a day of prayer to the Head of the Church, that this Jubilee Year will be a blessing to the churches, and that souls may come into the kingdom as doves fly to their windows, and that our missionary work may be blessed of God.

We suggest that a sermon along these lines would be a help to the work of the churches.

Evangelistic.

ENGLAND.

Chester, 21 Seller St., Dec. 10.—Our work nere continues most favorable, with 17 added first three weeks; 16 by confession, and the interest and attendance growing. We expect to open on a larger scale in our next meeting where we can reach the masses, and fully expect the same measure then as God has given us in America.—J. A. L. ROMIG.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, Dec. 12.—One added here by letter yesterday.—W. H. BAGBY.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Miller, Dec. 12.—One confession at Sunbeam.—E. W. BOWERS.

KENTUCKY.

Lexington, Dec. 15.—A. P. Finley closed a two week's meeting at the South Side Church, Dec. 11, with 16 additions. The interest was good throughout. Bro. Finley did splendid preaching.—WARD RUSSELL.

OHIO.

Shreve, Dec. 13.—Closed a very successful meeting in Loudonville last Sunday night, resulting in an organization of 35 members, 20 of whom were added during the meeting. It was a hard-fought battle, but the truth was victorious. The inspiring solos of Miss Mary A. Sanborn contributed much to the success of the meeting.—G. F. CRITES.

Mapleton, Dec. 16.—We closed a meeting with our home church (Indian Run) last Lord's day with seven confessions. Bro. A. Baker, of Malvern, did most of the preaching and did it well. He is a true man, faithful to God and his Word.—R. L. LOTZ, pastor.

KANSAS.

Halstead, Dec. 12.—Our meeting still in progress; 45 accesssons to date. Organized a Y. P. S. C. E. last night with 32 active members.—L. B. COGGINS.

La Crosse, Dec. 12.—Closed a three weeks' meeting at Alexander with 19 confessions. We have 27 members at that place.—A. NEESE.

Council Grove, Dec. 10.—Eight persons responded to the gospel invitation in our Fairview, S.H. meeting 10 miles out in the country. Will continue over the 11th and maybe the 18th inst.—J. A. WALTERS.

Fall River, Dec. 16.—Just closed a good meeting six miles southeast of Fall River. I labored five weeks and organized a church with 30 members; one from the Catholics, six from the Methodists, the rest from the world. Many others are about ready to come in with us.—S. JONES.

NEBRASKA.

Fairfield, Dec. 12.—Six additions at regular appointment at Randall Schoolhouse; five by confession. I have been preaching one-fourth time for the last four months. My work at Oxford is moving on nicely.—E. W. YOCUM.

Beatrice, Dec. 12.—Closed a short meeting here last night; 13 additions, 12 by baptism. Church in good working shape.—F. A. BRIGHT, pastor.

Fairfield, Dec. 12.—Yesterday closed my engagement with the church here, having been here two years. The church has received quite a number of additions during that period and has also lost by removal quite a number. Found the church in debt and leave it entirely free from debt and with surplus in treasury, besides having paid for Home and Foreign Missions $100 the last year. Two additions yesterday by letter and one baptized since last report.—GEO. LGBINGIER.

IOWA.

Bedford, Dec. 11.—Thirty-two accessions to date; interest increasing. Will continue indefinitely.—R. A. OMER AND WALTERS.

Meeting at Elliott two weeks old. Six added by obedience, four by letter and statement. Crowded houses.—M. C. JOHNSON, evangelist.

Lenox, Dec. 12.—Just closed a meeting of four weeks with 16 accessions. The greatest revival was among the church members. Those who were cold and indifferent are now enthusiastic in the work.—W. D. RYAN, pastor.

Sloan, Dec. 12. — Meeting, three weeks. Evangelist, pastor J. R. Mowry preaching; closed. Six baptisms; two husbands and wives, two ladies. Bro. Mowry is a faithful man of God, a plain, practical, pungent preacher.—Wm. B. CLEMER, pastor.

Keokuk, Dec. 15th.—One confession last Sunday at Elsbury, Mo., where I have been called to preach one-fourth time. Paynesville, Mo., has recalled me to serve them for another year for half time, and Lin Knoll, Mo., takes one-fourth. I am continuing my studies in medicine and surgery in the Keokuk Medical College, and long to re-enter the missionary field as soon after I graduate as possible. Yours very truly.—W. W. RUMSEY.

WISCONSIN.

West Lima, Dec. 12.—Closed a short meeting at Wesley with four additions, two by obedience and two from the Christian (New Light) Church. We have a noble band of workers who are working hard to build up primitive Christianity in that part of the state.—D. G. WAGNER.

INDIANA.

Columbus, Dec. 14.—Closed a three weeks' meeting at East Columbus with 53 additions. Begin at Walesboro to-night.—EUGENE T. MARTIN, evangelist.

Peru, Dec. 12.—Two accessions yesterday; 300 enrolled yesterday since I organized the congregation a little over five years ago.—CHAS. M. FILLMORE.

NEW YORK.

Syracuse, Dec. 12.—State Evangelist J. M. Morris just closed a series of meetings with the church here of 16 days with 12 baptisms and one by letter. Our church passed a resolution commending our evangelist for his fidelity to the truth. He is a good man for the pioneer work needed in this state.—E. RICHARD EDWARDS, pastor.

Buffalo, Dec. 16.—Four persons united with the Richmond Ave. Church of Christ last Lord's day evening; three by confession and one by baptism. Two of these were heads of families. Our work moves along most encouragingly.—FLOYD DARSIE.

KANSAS.

Kansas City, Dec. 12.—Just closed a four weeks' meeting at the Tabernacle, 7th and Gar Ave., Kansas City, with 23 additions. W. E. Harlow and his singer, Miss Murphy, conducted the services, and they certainly make a strong team.—C. M. WICKHAM, pastor.

Pawnee Rock, Dec. 14.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Ponca City, O. T., with six added; three confessions. Our church is the best location in town and they are much in need of a good young preacher and can support the right man. The population of Ponca City is about 3,000 and our plea ought to be well presented. Mrs. Dora Short is church clerk.—ELLIS PURLEE.

ARKANSAS.

Eureka Springse Dec. 12.—We are assisting Bro. Daniel Trundle in a meeting here. Meeting four days old with four additions. Good interest and large audiences. Last night the M. E. and Presbyterian preachers dismissed their audiences and attended our services. Our short but pleasant meeting at Cowgill, Mo., did not result in many additions, but believe it did much good. This is a grand church. Bro. J. T. Shreve has done a good work there. He goes to Milan, Mo.—MORGANS AND DAUGHTER.

Eureka Springs, Dec. 10 —Nine additions to date. Meeting one week old. Morgan Morgans is doing the preaching and his daughter, Mary, leads the singing. Bro. M. is an expositor of God's Word. His arguments are clear-cut and strong, his language good and his manner reverential. He is wise in presenting controvertial themes, where so many fail because of tact, kindness or fairness to the position of others.—DANIEL TRUNDLE, pastor.

ILLINOIS.

Blandinsville, Dec. 12.—Two additions to the Old Bedford Church yesterday at our regular service.—A. R. ADAMS.

The church in East. Louis recently reported one addition. W. R. Jinnett is the pastor. The church is in a prosperous condition.

Atwater.—Closed our meeting of three weeks' at Boston Chapel with 12 additions; nine confessions, one by letter and two reclaimed. Good interest and order prevailed. It is to be hoped that the fruits of this meeting may last for years and that there will be other fruits follow as the result of the seed sown in this meeting. God be the praise for the gospel of love.—H. J. HOSTETLER.

Pekin, Dec. 14.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at the Malone Christian Church, six miles southwest of Green Valley, with nine confessions and 14 reclaimed. B. L. Wray, of Eureka, has rendered efficient work and will continue to supply the pulpit twice a month.—FRED E. HAGIN.

Two confessions Sunday night. Audiences large and interest good. Geo. T. Purves and the writer are doing a little outside work at Lost Creek, Wever and Niota, the last-named in Illinois. The prospect of a new church house is bright.—R. H. INGRAM.

Watseka, Dec. 12.—Four added since last report; two by letter and one by obedience at our mission point in Watseka and another at Pitwood, where I spoke last Saturday evening. The work throughout the county seems to be progressing.—B. S. FERRALL, pastor.

DISFIGURED FOR LIFE

Our little girl's humor commenced with a tiny sore on one nostril, but it kept on spreading, till we thought she would never get it cured. We tried everything we could get, but it kept getting larger all the time, till both nostrils, the upper lip, a part of the lower lip, and up one side to the eye, were a solid sore. We thought there was no cure, and that she would be disfigured for life. Finally we tried CUTICURA REMEDIES. We used CUTICURA RESOLVENT and nearly a box of CUTICURA (ointment), and in a short time she was entirely well, with no scar or trace of the humor.

Pittsfield, Dec. 16.—Meeting at Chapin resulted in 27 additions; 16 baptized. A. O. Hunsaker had charge of the singing.—W. H. CANNON.

Springfield, Dec. 12.—Six added to the church here at regular services Sunday, Dec. 4th. We raised $1,000 Sunday morning, Dec. 11th, for changes we expect to make in the church building and to pay for a new furnace just put in. Fraternaly yours.—J. E. LYNN.

MISSOURI.

Ham's Prairie, Dec. 12.—Two added by statement at Cedar City, last Lord's day. The church is very weak there. J. D. Greer is to hold them a meeting in January, and we are working and praying that they may be mightily built up.—FRANK J. NICHOLS.

Sumner, Dec. 13.—J. B. Jeans, of Hamilton, recently finished a three weeks' meeting in Sumner, with 21 additions. Those added are the best citizens of the community; some whole families made the confession.—J. W. W.

Closed a short meeting at Summit with 17 added; 10 of these are new to us. They want a pastor one-fourth or one-half time. Address Joe Wilson, Mound City, Mo. The meeting paid off $65 church indebtedness. I am now at Hackberry, near Savannah, Mo. Prospects good for a meeting.—T. W. COTTINGHAM.

Lockwood, Dec. 14.—Closed a two weeks' meeting at Newport, where V. B. Burr is preaching once a month, with five added; three by baptism and two by recommendation. Bro. Burr was with me a part of the time. He also preaches at Center Point and Round Prairie; also Antioch in Dade County. I am now ready to take evangelistic work or one or more churches as pastor.—DANIEL E. PALMER.

St. Louis.—There were three additions at West End Christian Church recently, not formerly reported.—O. A. BARTHOLOMEW.

St. Louis.—One week ago the First Church of this city reported eight additions, and the Compton Heights Church nine additions.

Carrollton, Dec. 12. — Just closed a two weeks' meeting here with 13 additions; two from M. E.s, five by letter and six by baptism. Yesterday at our regular services there were five more confessions, as a result of the meeting, and one by letter. It was a glorious day. This makes 19 additions to the church here recently.—J. T. OGLE.

Schell City, Dec. 16.—I have just closed a meeting of 36 days at Buffalo, with 56 additions. The minister, J. D. Babb, is a good, true man. I was glad to have the presence and help of F. J. Yokeley, S. E. Hendrickson and T. S. Tinsley. The church has been greatly blessed, I think, in the work done during the meeting.—E. WILKES, California, Mo.

Bigelow, Dec. 16.—A three weeks' meeting at this place just closed, conducted by J. R. Hardan, our pastor, assisted by T. E. Blanchard, of Barnard, resulting in 12 additions; six by baptism. — A. W. CHUNING, superintendent Bigelow Bible-school.

Ring, Bells, Ring!

NELIA MCGAVACK.

Oh, bells, in the steeple old and gray,
With joyful motion swing and sway,
Ring out glad peals for Christmas Day,
Ring, bells, ring!

And bells in the steeples fair and new,
With holy joy thrill through and through,
Ring out your Christmas message, too,
Ring, bells, ring!

Ring, bells, all over this listening earth,
With one glad peal our planet girth,
Ring the news of the Savior's birth,
Ring, bells, ring!

Ring till earth shall with gladness say:
"Dear Lord, I bring my gift to-day,
My life at thy feet I lay."
Ring, bells, ring!

What Two Boys Did—I.

BY ALFRED BRUNK.

"Hooray!" shouted Harry Latham, as he came into the dining room on Christmas morning and beheld a fine sled with his name plainly written upon a tag which was fastened to the sled. "I don't know of anything I wanted so bad as a sled. I have a fine pair of skates and Christmas books by the dozen. Now for a fine ride down the hill." He was opening the outside door when his father came downstairs and called him.

"Where are you going, my son?"

"Just out to the hill to try my new sled," he replied.

"No, Harry, not now. We must have our morning devotions, and after breakfast you and Myrtle must hasten to the church for the last practice on the anthem you are to sing to-day."

Harry hung his head sullenly, but made no reply. Just then Myrtle bounded into the room and in the exurberance of her joy she threw her arms about Harry's neck. "Oh, Harry, look! Just see what I got for Christmas! A mandolin! I am going to play it for the poor children at the mission." She was a beautiful child, with golden curls and eyes which reflected heaven's own blue. Mrs. Latham entered the room and after their prayer and praise service they all sat down to breakfast.

Mr. Latham was a prosperous wholesale and retail grocer in the seaport city of Worthington, and was an elder in the Cedar Avenue Church, which was one of the most wealthy and popular churches in the city. Mr. Hollingbrook, a learned and eloquent preacher, was the pastor, and in addition to his Cedar Avenue work had established a mission among the tenement dwellers on Breaker Street.

At the close of the Christmas services at the church, Harry went home and had lunch, after which he repaired to the hill with his new sled. Just beyond the foot of the hill the railroad had thrown up quite a grade, cutting away the lower part of the hill. A telegraph pole stood on the hill near the cutaway. The boys would coast down the hill and let their sleds jump over the cutaway. A large crowd had already gathered when Harry arrived.

"Here comes Hank Latham, now," shouted one of the boys.

It was a motley crowd. Representatives of almost every grade of society were there, from the gamin of the streets to the aristocracy of Cedar Avenue. They had a wide pathway beaten down in the snow and were going over the cutaway with many a shout, and sometimes an oath. Harry was soon in the midst of the sport with his new sled which was one of the finest on the hill. Many of the boys had no sleds and depended on the generosity of the more fortunate ones, and some of the most reckless would wait until a sider was fairly under way and then jump on behind him, which created no little confusion, and caused an occasional fight. Among the onlookers was Fred Gotleib, the only son of his widowed mother and who was familiarly known among the boys as "Dutchy." He watched the exciting chases down the hill with a longing, hungry look in his eyes.

"Why don't you take a hand, Dutchy?" asked Solly Hughes.

"Vell, I aindt got no shled, so you see I candt ride, don't it?" replied Fred.

"Maybe Harry Latham will let you have his," said Solly, with a sneer on his lips.

"No, I vouldn't ags him. He vas too high alreaty," answered Fred.

"Say Harry, Dutchy wants to take a ride on your sled," said Solly, as Harry came puffing up the hill.

"Well, he can't have it, if does," snapped Harry. "If you wan't him to ride so bad why don't you give him your sled?"

"Because I thought you would be glad to let him have yours, seeing as his mother washes for your folks and gets her pay in wormy cheese and stale butter."

"Take care, Solly Hughes," said Harry, drawing back his arm and doubling his fist.

"Oh, I'm not afraid of you nor any of your folks," said Solly; "but if you won't let him have your sled he shall have mine. Here Dutchy, take my sled and ride. I am tired and will rest awhile. Look out for telegraph pole!"

Fred thanked him and taking the sled went on up the hill, and carefully seating himself started down the slope. As he came opposite Solly and Harry, the latter gave the sled a vicious kick, which turned it from its course and it made straight for the telegraph pole. Fred had lost all control of it, and sat with his head bent slghtly forward and held on with all his strength. Several of the boys saw Harry's act and watched the sled in breathless expectation as it sped down the hill. With terrific force it struck the pole and was smashed into ruins. Fred, with some of the pieces still in his hands, passed the pole and tumbled over the cutaway.

"Harry, what did you do that for?" asked Solly, as they all started in a run down the hill. "You have killed him and broke my sled. I'll have yours in place of it."

Harry said nothing but his heart smote him. They found Fred at the bottom of the cutaway unconscious.

"Its knocked him sensible," said one of the boys.

"He's passed his checks," said another one.

"Yaas, he's kicked the bucket this time, you bet," said one.

"Look ahere, boys, Dutchy's done for and we can't help him none, now, so I say let's put him in the brush over there and go ahead with our play," said Bobby Simpkins.

"Tut, tut, Bob, we can't do that. The correner's got to see him and tell what's the matter with him," said Solly.

Harry edged his way to Fred. "Boys," said he, "I was too rash and am sorry for it. I will pay Solly for his sled; but first something must be done with Fred. He may not be dead after all. So let's take him to our house and get a doctor."

The sentiment which had been strongly against Harry now turned in his favor, and more than one ragged boy in that group shouted, "Hurrah for Harry Latham!"

Fred was gently lifted up the cutaway, placed on Harry's sled and with much care was taken to Mr. Latham's. On the way he returned to consciousness and began groaning with pain.

"See! boys, he aint dead after all!" exclaimed Solly.

When they reached the house Harry told the servant that he wished to see his parents, whereupon they came to the door accompained by Myrtle.

"Father, Fred Gotleib got hurt and we brought him here to see what is the matter with him. Where can we put him?"

"You had better take him in little Willie's room and get a doctor."

"I'll go for the doctor," said Solly.

"Get Dr. Markham," said Mr. Latham, and Solly was off like a shot, followed by a dozen of his companions.

"No, not in there," said Mrs. Latham.

"Why not, wife?" asked her husband. "Willie always wanted to do good to everybody and I know it would please him if he could know."

"You are right, and I suppose it was a feeling of selfishness on my part to wish to keep a poor wounded boy out of my dear baby's room. I know he always wanted to help some one."

Fred was taken into the room which had been Willie's and placed upon the little bed. On the wall opposite hung a large picture of a fair, bright-eyed boy, apparently about eight years of age. It was the picture of Willie, who had gone to live with the angels.

Dr. Markham came in and made a careful examination. "Ahem! bones broken above the knee. Nerves somewhat shattered by fright. Must be kept very quiet and should have a skilled nurse. If you can let him remain here it will be an act of humanity, Mr. Latham, as it might endanger his life to remove him now."

"Certainly, he shall remain here doctor. He is the son of our washerwoman and we could not think of turning him out."

"Ah! well, I am glad to know that he will have good treatment. You had better get Eva Steadwell to nurse him, if she can be had, as she is the best in the city, and in a few days if he improves his mother may come and remain with him. Let him be kept quiet."

The boys all went back to the hill and continued their sport, and just before they left for their homes, Harry took his sled to Solly and said: "Here, Solly, take my sled for the one I broke for you."

Solly hesitated, but Harry urged him and he finally took it.

Harry treated Fred like a brother and he did all he could to repay him for the pain he had caused him. When Fred had fully regained his health and strength, Mr. Latham employed him in the retail department of his great store. The two boys now began the study of the Bible. The life of Jesus was especially fascinating to Fred. When going over the scenes of the trials and crucifixion, for the first time, his frame shook with anger:

"The hadeful Chews! undt dey kildt him! Shust like 'em. Dere ish dot Lubenstein vat lies so aboud your vader. I shust guess he hat a hand in id do."

Harry laughed. "No, Fred, this happened 1800 years ago in Palestine. Lubenstein was not living then and he is not from Palestine anyway, he is from Russia."

"I dond gare, he vas shust mean enough to a kildt him if he could a godt dere alreaty," replied Fred.

Mr. Hollingbrook began a series of meetings at the mission, and one night Harry and Fred went forward. Myrtle was already a member of Cedar Avenue Church and it was expected that the boys would take membership there after being baptized, but they decided to cast their lots with the mission.

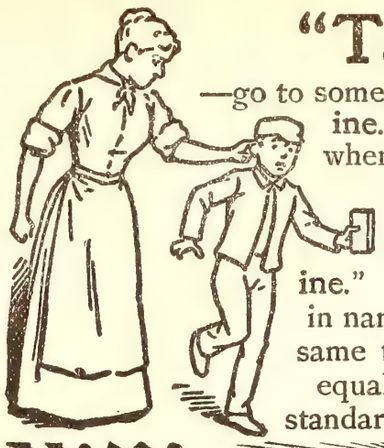
"Mr. Latham, I have come to the conclusion that I am not cut out for a business man, and shall leave your service when agreeable with you," said Fred one day to his employer. He now spoke good English, but with a strong German accent.

"I can dispense with your services now," said Mr. Latham with some warmth, "but I will say that I never had man or boy who did more faithfully his work." He turned to his desk and wrote a few lines upon a slip of paper.

"You have been very kind to me sir, and I am sorry to leave you, but I wish to undertake a work among my own people and other foreigners here in the city. I have been very much impressed with their needs and am going to do what I can for them."

"Why, my boy, your ambition is a laudable one, but you can't do a work like that without money."

"True," replied Fred, "but I believe the Lord will open the hearts of his people and that they will furnish the necessary money. If not I will do what I can, and perhaps some one in years to come will see the importance of the work and carry it forward to success."



"Yes, father, and I am going in with him, and we are going to teach them not only the gospel, but how to save their money, to keep out of saloons, how to keep their house and bodies clean, and we will teach the children to read and write and how to grow up good Christian, American citizens."

"Well," said Mr. Latham, "you have set a large task before you and a worthy one, but Harry I was thinking it is time you were learning business. So you must let Fred try his experiment alone, while you take your place in the firm of Latham & Son."

"Well, father, I will not disobey you, but I had my heart set on joining Fred in his mission. We have already rented a hall and Myrtle has promised to play the organ for us."

"Myrtle!" exclaimed his father in surprise, "You surely don't mean to take her among such a low, filthy, wicked people! No, Harry, you are going too far. Be ready to enter the store Monday. Fred, take this to Harvey," and he handed him the slip of paper upon which he had written. Fred took it to the bookkeeper who paid him the balance due him, made the proper entry and closed the account. The boys then went away with sadness depicted in their countenances and sorrow in their hearts.

What a Boy Thinks About Santa Claus.

BY JOHN S. MARTIN.

I'm but a very little boy,
And once I had a funny toy
Which mamma said was brought to me
By Santa Claus who roams so free;
That every year when Christmas comes
He somehow visits all our homes,
And fills our stockings full of toys
And things that's nice for girls and boys.
And mamma says he comes at night
When all the doors are locked up tight;
That through the chimney open wide
Is how he makes his way inside.
But I could never see just how
He gets through one that we have now;
For it is scarcely big enough
To hold my sisters little muff.
Another thing I cannot see—
And one that always puzzles me—
Is how he travels in a sleigh
When all the snow has gone away.
(Sometimes you know it happens so,
When Christmas comes there is no snow.)
But mamma says that Santa Claus
Can travel even though it thaws.
And if the roads be mud or snow
They're never so he cannot go.
And all because his team so queer
Is made of ten tiny raindeer,
That skip with Santa and his load,
No matter what the kind of road.
And when he taps them with his lash
They're off at once just like a flash,
With such a rattling, clashing noise,
You'd think they were a lot of boys.
But I'm not sure if it be true
That that's the way they always do,
For I have lain awake at night,
But never yet have caught a sight
Of Santa Claus, nor heard the bells,
Of which my mamma often tells.
And so I've thought that good old St. Nick,
Who travels o'er the earth so quick,
Must pass throughout the sleeping town
With no more noise than thistle down.
And when he gets into the house
Keeps just as still's a little mouse.
But mamma says I went to sleep
And never could such vigils keep.
And after all I guess it's so,
For surely mamma ought to know.
And what she says is, is so,
No matter whether 'tis or no!

Jessie's Experience.

(A CHRISTMAS STORY FOR LITTLE ONES.)

STELLA STRAWN.

Jessie and Beulah were cousins, and had come to spend Christmas with grandma.

The day before Christmas grandma said privately to each girl, "I am going to be out this afternoon. I trust while I am gone you will not go in my room. Don't look in a little box which is on my bureau."

Beaulah said, "Of course not, grandma," and thought no more about it. But Jessie was different. She wondered what was in the box. The more she thought of it the more she wanted to see it.

"It would not hurt to see what kind of a box it is," she thought, but when she saw the box, it was only a little thread-box.

How Jessie wished to know the contents of that box.

And alas! She slipped softly up, and took the cover off the box.

Jessie looked all around and then, peeped in. There was nothing in the box but a little note. Jessie with eager haste took the note and opened it. A ring dropped out, such a lovely ring, with white and pink sets in the gold ring. The note said, "To the little granddaughter who does not look in the box. A Christmas gift from grandma."

Jessie put the ring and note back and shut the box, and went down into the sitting room where Beulah was reading.

Just then grandma came in and guilty Jessie left the room.

"Beulah," said grandma, "did you look in the box?"

"Why, of course not, grandma," said Beulah, "didn't you trust me?"

"Oh yes," said grandma, "I wanted to be sure, was all."

Grandma left the room and met Jessie in the hall. Grandma delayed Jessie and said, "Jessie, did you look into the box?"

Jessie hung her head, but though she was meddlesome, she would not tell a lie, so she said, "Yes, grandma, but, I'm sorry. Will you forgive me, though you do give the ring to Beulah?"

"Yes," said grandma, "I only did that to see who deserved the ring, I hoped you both would earn one. I hope, Jessie, you will learn a lesson from this experience, to-day.

A Christmas Message.

BY L. R. HORNISH.

I thought, as I stood by a manger,
Where the cattle were munching their hay,
Secured from the storm-cloud or danger,
Of the Babe that at Bethlehem lay.

I thought of the poor and the friendless,
The hungry, the sick and the lame;
The burdens of life seemed so endless,
And then—I recalled his dear name.

And I knew the light that, gleaming
On the shepherds in times long ago,
All bright o'er earth, was still beaming
And shedding its Christmas glow.

And faces bowed down and saddened,
White, on pillows of pain,
Were lifted, lightened and gladdened
By music of angels again.

And I said, all this is well in his keeping,
And he who the sparrows doth feed,
Will dry the tears of the weeping
And care for his world in its need.

Forgetting Self.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

The post office building loomed up proudly. It towered high above the great white snowdrifts, and looked down with supreme disdain upon all minor buildings, as though it knew and gloried in its reputation—that of being the finest building in the little city.

Inside this proud edifice was a beelike business. The heavy Eastern mail had just arrived and all hands were busy sorting and distributing.

Miss Ennis, of the stamp department, wore a frown on her face. 'Twas the week before Christmas, and all morning she had sold stamps and weighed packages till her head swam, and somehow the faces that had looked in at her window had in them so much joyous expression, the forerunner of Christmas happiness, that envy stole in and took possession of her heart, and then, as she reflected upon the, to her, joyous holidays, discontent came in to keep envy company.

"Seek out some one who is less fortunate than yourself and make his burdens lighter," the pastor's wife had ventured to advise when Miss Ennis once complained of her cheerless life.

The words of the pastor's wife came back to her to-day, "but," she argued to herself, "there can be none more miserable than I. Christmas is a most appropriate time for doing good and the poor we have with us always, but—what is the use! I have seen washerwomen and ragpickers whom I have envied," and the frown deepened.

"How cross she is!" said Miss Deane, of the money order department, to her pretty assistant, as they met the stamp clerk in the hall, going out to luncheon.

"Like a bear," answered the pretty assistant.

"She's good though—"

"Certainly. Old maids usually do make conspicuous some admirable quality," giggled the pretty assistant.

—"That is," resumed Miss Deane, not noticing the interruption, "she's a great church worker, but she impresses me as being one who—well—one who finds no soul-satisfying happiness in a Christian life. But people say her life was embittered long ago when the lover of her youth went West to seek a fortune and died of thirst on the plains. Then her parents died soon after and she was left alone in the world. She owns a cozy home, but nobody is ever invited there; she just lives alone and broods over her troubles. No wonder she is disagreeable at times," and Miss Deane and her pretty assistant passed on, quite unmindful that the subject of their conversation, having forgotten her gloves, had turned to retrace her steps and heard every word.

For a moment she stood thoughtfully at her desk and drew on the returned-for articles. Then she took up and read for the second time as odd a little missive as she had ever seen. It was addresssd to Santa Claus, and ran thus:

"Deer Santy Klos my papa is dead and my dear mama is sick, but I will hang up my stocking and I know you will come. I thot I would rite early and give you plenty of time to make up your mind what you will bring to me. I will put down the number so you can find the plais it is 425 maple street. I send you a kis dear santy and if you will let me se you i will give you one of my curls this letter is from Zoe."

Dropping it upon her desk, Miss Ennis went out to a restaurant, but somehow that plaintive little letter was before her. All afternoon she thought of it, and upon retiring that night she thought of it again.

"I wonder if the little thing will be disappointed. I've a notion"—and then she tried to go to sleep.

Two hours later she sat straight up in bed and said aloud:

I'll do it. I'm a cross, selfish old maid, but I'll make a call on Maple Street before I come home to-morrow evening," and then sleep came.

Next evening a well-wrapped figure turned down a narrow street and knocked at 425.

A little blue-eyed maiden of six years or thereabouts opened the door—a fair sweet little thing was she, with curls all about her dainty face and shoulders.

"The author of the letter," thought Miss Ennis, and then she asked:

"May I come in?"

"The little girl opened wide the door, motioned her visitor in and brought a chair before she spoke in a low tone:

"My mamma's asleep and we must not talk loud."

"Is your mamma any better to-day?" asked Miss Ennis, feeling her heart warm toward the thoughtful little daughter.

The blue eyes filled with tears and the little lips trembled:

"I'm afraid she isn't."

"Does the doctor come to see her often?"

"He does not come now because dear mamma has no more money for him. She has no money at all, now, for she gave the last to the man who brought the coal to-day. But mamma says that God's children will never be forsaken."

"How old are you, dear?" asked Miss Ennis.

"Six. Mamma calls me her little lady."

"Zoe! Zoe!" called a faint voice from the other room, and the little girl ran to answer.

"To whom are you talking, little daughter?"

"A lady who has come to see us, mamma," and then Miss Ennis was shown into the sick room.

It took but a glance to see that little Zoe would soon be left motherless.

Miss Ennis sat down beside the bed. She could be charming when she chose, and somehow she felt her heart go out to the mother just as it had to the little daughter, and soon the invalid was pouring into sympathetic ears a story which brought tears to the eyes of the listener. The death of the husband and father had occurred two years before, leaving wife and child almost penniless; but with an energy beyond her strength the widow had earned a living for herself and child, until six months before, when a severe cold hastened the disease which had been slowly creeping upon her. For the past two months she had been bedfast the greater portion of the time. "And would you believe it," said she, "my little Zoe has been my principal nurse, for indeed I could afford no other. You would be surprised to see how helpful she is, and so hopeful, too. She wrote a letter to Santa Claus yesterday, and I have been wondering how I can save her from a bitter disappointment, but—"

"Never mind," interposed Miss Ennis gently. "I will see to it, if you will allow me. I've nobody to care for, and it will give me great pleasure to make little Zoe happy."

The invalid looked searchingly into the face of her visitor.

"Give me your hand, dear friend," said she. "All night long I prayed God to send a friend to my little one, and I know my prayer is answered. I can read it in your face. I could not leave her until he sent you, but now—I—am—ready—"

And little Zoe was motherless.

A week later — Christmas Eve — Miss Ennis sat in her cozy parlor, but not alone. A little head nestled against her breast, the curls of which she caressed lovingly as she spoke in soothing, loving tones:

"Yes, my little Zoe, your mamma is so happy up in heaven, that she wants to see her little daughter happy, too. So close your eyes, my precious, and dream of what Santa Claus and the fairies will bring you to-night."

Then softly:

"Dear Lord, I thank thee that thou hast given to me this sacred trust, this little one who has broken down old barriers, has opened up the fountains of my heart and has saved me from my old bitter self. And I do thank thee, that in my heart to-night there is peace, and toward my fellowmen there is naught save good-will. Oh, the joy of forgetting self!"

TEXT.

The Son of Man is come to save that which was lost.—Matt. 18:11.

SERMON.

Yesterday morning I witnessed a rare but sadly beautiful and very suggestive sight. Being out on the street at an early hour I saw a lost child, or rather a child that soon would have been lost had it not been for an observing, kind-hearted man. The gate in front of the house had been left ajar and the little fellow had found it, while playing in the front yard, and had gone out, and was almost a block away from home when the thoughtful man coming down the street saw that the child—two and a half or three years of age—was alone, and recognizing it was one of his neighbor's children he stooped down and said coaxingly, "Put your little hand in mine, and I will take you home. You might get hurt on the street." The wee one immediately reached up its tiny, chubby hand and placed it confidingly in the hard, horny hand of its savior—the man like our Master, was a carpenter—to be led safely home. Looking back over my shoulder, as I passed on, I saw the man and the child walking together, hand in hand, away from danger—toward home.

APPLICATION.

How strikingly this illustrates the mission and work of the Savior and his disciples. He came to save the lost, and is saying to every one who is wandering away, "Put your hand in mine, and I will lead you safely home."

All Things Work for Good.

BY ALBERT SCHWARTZ.

All things work together for good to them who love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.—Rom. 8:28.

Glorious thought! Oh, message sweet! Words heaven-inspired and full of brightest hope!

I.

All things work for good?

Yea, verily, "to them who love God." He is the master workman, infinite, kind and loving; "all things" are but his tools, while "those who love" are the blessed recipients of the Heavenly Father's ever-present, ever-needed watch-care and mercy.

II.

All things work for good?

Truly, to "the called according to his purpose," to those who have heard and heeded the pleadings of tender love and mercy as they call from the wounded hands and feet and side of the crucified, yet triumphant and glorified Savior. As the Father freely gave his beloved Son, will he not much rather fulfill to us this sweet promise? Trust him, then. Let no doubt abide. Do joys and pleasures gladden the way? They are the Father's sweet gifts to make his children nobler. Do clouds overshadow? Murmur not. All sunshine may spoil the fruitage of the soul. The Father knows best "how much of joy and how much of sorrow" we may need. Be sure no evil can harm the soul that trusts in him. Though he may permit the course of life to be changed suddenly and violently—changed from sunlight to darkness, from sweet gladness to bitter sadness, from cherished plans and hopes to unwelcome and unplanned tasks and conditions—trust even then. "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him."

III.

All things work for good?

Yes, for so the inspired soldier of the God of battles says. Then "let courage rise with danger," let it brave the hardships and trials of life. The good soldier bravely endures a thousand hardships and willingly faces danger, nor shrinks he back from the greatest sacrifice. His life is ready for the altar.

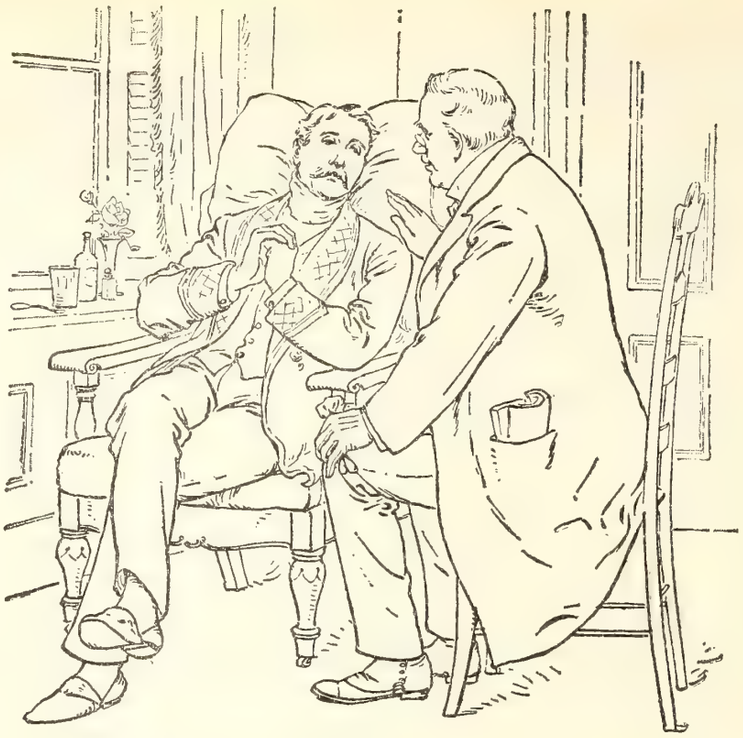
Though along with every trial and every sorrow, with every joy and every responsibility comes some new conflict with Satan's hosts, let us faint not; for "the Captain of our salvation will lead into no useless battle, nor will he ever allow defeat to come if we keep ever at his side. Let the drooping heart revive. Let tears and sorrows drive us to the fray; for unless there first be tears, trials and battles there can be no victor's reward and crown.

IV.

All things work for good?

Yes, unless the Word may fail. Then what ceaseless thanksgiving should flow from the heart! Yet, unless joy-bells gayly ring, unless sweet and easy fortune breathes its benediction upon us, unless the circle of friends is unbroken we mortals—selfish and weak—find it exceedingly hard to be grateful. Indeed, when adversity, heavy affliction, sore trial, loneliness, crushed hopes and desolating death cast their deep shadows and cause the fount of tears to flow, we find it hard even to accept them, harder yet to trust, and hardest of all to be thankful while enduring them. But as our Father is the master workman and as he knows our needs completely, why not look up 'midst pain and tears and say, "We thank thee, Father?"

V.



All things work for good?

Without such assurance, how could patience be maintained? Whom God loves he chastens, and all chastening is grievous.

Without patience we would fall out by the way or possibly rebel, but patience would die except for heavenly assurance. Knowing that chastening is "for our profit that we may partake of the holiness," we patiently endure. We have seen men ruined by prosperity and pleasure. We have also seen fellow-travelers on life's highway made more noble, lovely, useful and godlike through suffering and sorrow borne with patient spirit. Shall we, then, shrink back and rebel against those things which may likewise refine us, fit us for nobler service to God and man, and unlock for us God's storehouse of truest and everlasting honor? Would we be pure gold? If so, we cannot avoid the refiner's fire. Would we be Christlike? He was made perfect through suffering.

Abundant reason, indeed, why we should "let patience have her perfect work!" And if tears must fall, behold how beautifully God adorns them with the bright bow of his promise that "all things work together for good to them that love God!" "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Grote.

George Weston got to Sunday-school a little late, on account of thinking out a plan by which Jim Dancy's parents might be made to promise to read history and poetry before their novels. But that didn't matter, because the Sunday-school was a little late in beginning, since the teachers wouldn't come at half past nine. It was a way of theirs. Jennie Weston was already in her place. Jennie's teacher was a splendid young lady, very much loved by her pupils, because she was so kind and explained the lessons so clearly. There was only one serious objection to her as a teacher: she was hardly ever at Sunday-school. She was not present this morning, and Jennie was disappointed, because this is the one she had meant to ask to join the Advance Society. "I wish I was grown!" she whispered to herself; this is the way she always expressed her disappointments.

There was a faithful member of the church, Bro. Putt, that the superintendent always got to take the place of an absent teacher. Not that Bro. Putt could teach, but he was willing to try, and was always so cheerful and modest, saying, "You know I am no teacher," which was very true. So he came over to Jennie's class, and held tightly to his lesson book, and had the scholars read the verses aloud, as if it were a reading class, and he asked the questions that are answered right under the verses in black letters and they answered as if they were still in a reading class. Since each knew which verse was coming, she hunted up her answer and sat with her finger on it, as if she were trying to keep it warm. Once Bro. Putt skipped a girl, but the next girl said, "That ain't my verse, Bro. Putt," and he said, "Sure enough," and looked disturbed.

Between the time Sunday-school let's out and church begins, the younger people sometimes take a walk on the broad sidewalk before the building. During this walk, Jennie asked a girl to join the Advance Society. "Who belongs?" asked the girl. Jennie answered that she was the first one asked to join. "I'll belong if the girls of my set do," said the other. "You ask Linnie Breezely. If Linnie Breezely joins, I'll join." Most of the girls in Mizzouryville belong to "sets," as if they were china cups or water-pitchers. Linnie Breezely was the ruler of one of these circles. Jennie decided to hunt up Linnie the next day at school and win her over.

That evening George Weston drew his father aside and unfolded his plan. "You know how Mr. and Mrs. Dancy spend all their time in reading novels," he said. "If it wasn't for novels, Mr. Dancy would tend to his jewlery business, instead of taking people's watches to regulate, and then putting them away somewhere and forgetting about them. And people never know when he will be in his office. So he is losing all his trade. And if it wasn't for novels, Mrs. Dancy would clean up, you know, and get to church and keep buttons sewed on and be like other women."

"This is all very true," said Mr. Weston, "and if Dancy wasn't my old schoolmate,"—

"But here is a plan to stop it all!" and George explained it with great eagerness. Then he added, "in this way, you can make them promise to do anything reasonable. So you bear down on them hard and say to them, 'Unless you promise to read twenty pages of history every day, and 200 lines of poetry, and a chapter of the Bible, and memorize a quotation, all before you pick up a single novel, you may know what to expect!' Then what will happen? Why, rather than read all that, they will tend to their work, and Jim won't be an orphan with a living father and mother!"

"Do you have to read all that to belong to your society?" asked Mr. Weston, looking very much amused.

"Oh, no! We only have five pages of history a week and thirty lines of poetry with just a verse of the Bible a day and a quotation to learn once a week. But this is a bad case and you must try a bad medicine. Ain't that a proverb? Will you do it papa? And hunt out the dryest history you can find and the poetry with the least sense in it!"

"I'll see," said Mr. Weston, who never told his children whether or not he would do a thing. But the next day, as he went to town to his office after dinner, Mr. Weston stopped at the Dancy's. Jim was hurrying off to school with a big piece of cornbread in his hand, because Mrs. Dancy had been so fascinated by the love passages in "Her Own True Love," that she had not noticed the time of day, and so failed to get any dinner. Mr. Weston had to stand at the front door a long time, while strange and hurried noises came from the interior. At last Mr. Dancy opened the door in a breathless state, his fur cap fixed on his head, and his pocket bulging with a book which he had crowded into it. Mr. Weston followed him into the parlor where Mrs. Dancy presently came, with an annoyed look which she tried to cover up with a large smile. She was wondering if the heroine of her novel fainted on Theodore's shoulder, or whether he sank beside her and chafed her hands. Theodore was the young man in the story.

"Just a minute to stay," said Mr. Weston, briskly. "Here's a package of four books I have brought to lend you." The Dancys brightened up, but looked rueful when they saw the first volume of Grote's "History of Greece" and Hallam's "Middle Ages," side by side with a translation of the "Iliad" and Milton's "Samson Agonistes."

"Dancy," said Mr. Weston suddenly, looking quite stern, "you know I've let the time run on that mortgage, till I couldn't make back my interest if I sold you out to-day, and all because you were my old chum in school. But I need the money, and I'm sorry to tell you I must give you notice that I shall foreclose!"

Mr. and Mrs. Dancy forgot all about their novels in a moment. "Weston," said Dancy with a troubled look, "I know you've been uncommon kind; but I haven't got the money and I don't seem to be getting along well, anyhow. And if you foreclose the mortgage, I'm a ruined man!"

Mr. Weston paced up and down the floor. "I'd be sorry to ruin you, Dancy. In fact, it is you who have ruined yourself, by giving your time to novels when—but it's no use to touch on that. You would never listen to me. This is a business affair. I must foreclose!"

Mrs. Dancy began to cry. Mr. Dancy pulled off his fur cap and looked at it with a frowning brow, as if he would say, "Where did you come from?"

"On one condition," said Mr. Weston slowly, "I will extend the time." Then he told about reading the history, poetry and Bible every day before they began on the novels. Of course they were glad to make the required promise, which he drew up in writing for them to sign. Then he went away. The Dancys hurried back to their sitting room, and Mrs. Dancy took off her Sunday dress and put on her wrapper. With a sigh of relief she was going after the heroine and Theodore, when she remembered her promise. She took up Hallam; Mr. Dancy got Grote. For a while silence reigned in the room. Presently Mrs. Dancy yawned. Then her husband said, "I believe I'll go up town and fix that watch of Bob Anderson's; I declare, I've had that watch on hand three weeks!" He laid Grote carefully away on the shelf, as if he did not expect to need him for sometime. Not long after he had left the house, Mrs. Weston, looking from her side window, was surprised to see the Dancy bedding stretched along the top of the garden fence in the sun, while the yard was filled with furniture. Mrs. Dancy was giving her house a "thorough cleaning."

I want to find out what kind of books children love to read. I believe you will be glad to know what other children like. I invite all to send me a list of their ten favorite books (not counting the Bible) and three favorite authors. If older than 14, tell what you preferred before you became 15. When a grown-up person knew I had asked this of our members, he laughed and said not many children had read ten books before they were 15. What do you think of that? Why, I have already received some answers. But if you haven't read ten books, send those you have read, or that have been read to you, that you liked—if you can only name two. Were you not interested in the letters of our members last week? Next week we will have another page of them, full of bright, interesting facts about other members' with funny stories, etc. Then the next week our continued story again, which will describe the school life of the Westons.

And, children, Sunday is Christmas! Maybe you had forgotten it. What are you going to give? More than you get, I hope. How? By returning love and smiles and kind words for your presents, and by being kind to some one less happy. I hope every one of the Advance Society (and we now hail from 18 states and from Canada) will take Christmas into somebody's life. Wherever you may be, there are others not as happy as you. Share with them a little of your happiness. Don't give everything you have to your kinfolks. Save a smile for the poor, and a loving word for the sorrowing, and a thought, deep and tender, full of gratitude and love for the Christ of Christmas.

THE PROLOGUE.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The lessons for 1898 were occupied for six months with the life of Christ, and for the remainder of the year with the story of the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah. Those for 1899 will deal with the life of Jesus as recorded in the Gospel of John, which will occupy the first six months, and will then return to the narrative of the last period of Old Testament history as recorded in the book of Ezra and Nehemiah, with side lights from the prophetic books of that age.

The Gospel of John is unquestionably the most important book in the Bible. If there were nothing else to make it an interesting volume, the fact that it grows out of the experiences of the disciple dearest to our Lord would give it this value. But the contents of the book are of supreme importance, expressing as they do the latest thought of the New Testament age regarding our Savior. The life of John is, perhaps, the most notable example of the uplifting influence of the companionship and teachings of Jesus and the quickening power of the Holy Spirit which the Scriptures record. He was by no means the quiet, calm, spiritual man of whom we usually think, when he began his acquaintance with Jesus at the Jordan. The picture presented by the four Gospels is that of a young man of Galilean characteristics, sharing the ardent Messianic hopes of the time; impulsive and fiery; an eager follower of the stern and prophetic ministry of John the Baptist, a man to whom, with his brother, Jesus gave the significant title, "Sons of Thunder;" a man displaying at times intolerance, anger and ambition (Lu. 9:49-56; Mk. 10:35 f), qualities hardly to be expected in a disciple "whom Jesus loved." Yet there was in him the promise of a noble spiritual manhood, and the discipline of Jesus' ministry was the beginning of that long process of education which led up to the mature and unique qualities which voice themselves in the Gospel and the first Epistle. He was never so conspicuous a member of the apostolic group as was Peter, and in the book of Acts plays a wholly minor part, disappearing almost entirely soon after Pentecost. Of the second period of his life, that marked by the great persecution at Rome and the destruction of Jerusalem, we have only the memorials furnished by the Apocalypse, which seems to date from this period, about 68 A. D., and to show that the spiritual education of John was still incomplete, though at the time he was the sole survivor of the apostolic circle. The closing years of his life, after his return from Patmos to Ephesus, brought him the full responsibilities of the only living representative of Jesus' personal ministry, and completed the rich character which has always been the charm of John's personality as expressed in his Gospel and his Epistles, the first of which is probably the closing word of the New Testament.

The Gospel of John is thus the product of the latest portion of the first Christian century. It is not an attempt to tell the story of Jesus' life, for the Synoptic Gospels were already in circulation and John had no need to tell their message afresh. His work is rather that of an interpreter who presents the message of those events of which the others had spoken, and interprets to us the meaning of Jesus as the incarnation of God in the flesh, his self-expression or "word" (logos) in the terms of human life. It is a special privilege to be permitted to study this book for the next six months. It is not so easy to understand as the other Gospels, but it is the mountain peak of New Testament thought and the mature utterance of one whose spiritual vision grew brighter and brighter unto the perfect day.

There is no more splendid utterance in the Scripture than the prologue to John's Gospel, contained in John 1:1-18, the whole of which should have been included in the present lesson. It takes us at once into the clear white light of eternity and shows us the place of Jesus in the life of the universe. Its first utterance is full of the profoundest meaning. The whole life of God is a process of self-disclosure to men. From the very beginning has he uttered himself; therefore, in the beginning was the Word. This Word was with God, nay indeed it was God. The first thought of the writer is not that of the personality of the Word, but rather that God's revelation of himself was not a recent thing but an eternal process. Then swiftly follows the emphasis upon the personality of this representative or expression of God. The Word is not merely personified, though personification is a common method with the Bible writers, especially of the Old Testament. Nor is there in the use of the word "logos" the adoption of the meaning which Philo associated with that word. The attempt to make John's phrase synonymous with the speculations of the Alexandrian school is not convincing. This expression of God, this Word, was the instrument of creation; which not only signifies the fact that creation itself is a method of expressing God's thoughts, but as well that the Word was the Creator. Thus in creation as in redemption the Father is the designer, the Son is the executor, and the Holy Spirit is the finisher. Nothing is planned without God; nothing is created without the Christ; nothing is completed without the Holy Spirit. The element which was especially Christ's to impart was life. "That which hath been made in him was life," seems to be the better rendering of the words in verses 3, 4. Both in creation and in redemption it is the work of our Savior to impart life. He came "to give life and to give it more abundantly;" without him there can be no life worth the name, for that life is the light of men, the only principle which can enlighten. But this life which was the light of the world and was first of all personalized in himself came into human society and was totally unrecognized. The world was darkness, and it did not perceive the light that was in its midst.

But the light did not come unheralded. A man sent from God came to announce the coming of that light and to bear witness of his approach. This was John, who in the fourth Gospel is never called John the Baptist, since the writer never names himself, and refers the name John only to the prophet of the Jordan. He plainly said that he was not the expected one, but only a witness; and the process of witness which was begun by John was continued by men of every class who saw Jesus.

But while John was preaching the light was already "coming into the world." This seems to be the meaning of the words in verse 9. The true light which lighteth every man had been coming into the world through the Old Testament dispensation, which was a preparation for his full disclosure. This gradual process of the coming of the light into the world was consummated when Jesus manifested the Father in his life. But still the world did not know him. He came to his own possessions, but they who were his own, that is, the Jewish people whose preparation had been so long under way, would not receive him. But there were those who received him and to them he gave the right to be the children of God, as that right had been possessed hitherto only by the children of Abraham. Nor was this relation one of human birth, but spiritual. And thus the Word was embodied in flesh and dwelt in the world full of grace and truth, and his glory was seen by his believing followers. The incarnation is thus the most significant fact of the centuries; a fact eternal in its outreaches and significance. The Gospel of John is the Gospel of the Incarnation.

THE ANGEL PRESENCE FOR THE NEW YEAR.

(Ex. 23:20-25.)

The dangers were thick about Israel as the people crossed over the Jordan into the land that had long been their destiny. And precious indeed must have been the promise that an angel should guide their steps amid all snares and pitfalls, that he who so long had guided them in the wilderness would be with them yet, lest they forget.

Our own nation at the dawn of this last year in the old century is facing perils such as it has never known before. The long safe sojourn in the wilderness of national seclusion, where we have been fed by the manna and guided by the Presence, has come to an end. We have crossed the Rubicon, the Jordan, we have burned our ships, England's splendid isolation has been ended by the end of ours, and unknown reaches lie before us. Grant, O God, thine angel to be with us yet, and guide us aright!

So, in the lives of some of us there is doubtless dawning a new year of perils and of opportunities. We have left behind us the old days with their guidance and their safety, we are crossing into the untried regions of the future years. We can see only far enough ahead to perceive a way crowded with enemies, possibly thick with ambuscades. Precious to us, then, is God's ever-living promise, "I will not leave thee nor forsake thee, I will guide thee with mine eye, I will send an angel before thee to keep thee in the way."

It was a beautiful idea, that thought of Israel, that each had his guardian angel, which always watched before the Father. And is it not in all essentials a true thought, too? Our Savior put the stamp of his approval upon it. Knowing, then, that in each of our dangers some sweet messenger of certain knowledge wings its way to the Father's heart, that in every joy somehow the throbbing pulse of our exultation reaches him, that in all our doings, if we will but trust him, he guards us more carefully than he does the sparrow or the wide-winged waterfowl, how secure ought we to rest in his care!

Special Providence? Why, of course we should believe in it. There is no other kind of Providence. All of it is special Providence. Does he not care for nations? Does he not care for men? Those who put their trust in him are never forsaken, provided they do their best to do his will. Trust God, and exert thy strength, O Sampson! Trust God and blow your trumpets, Gideonites. Trust God and pay your debts, Christians. Trust God and keep dry powder, soldiers of the Lord. Trust God and work hard, missionaries of the Lord's kingdom here on earth.

It would seem that if one of the Lord's own should become so beset with enemies that his life is actually in danger and finally is lost, it is the greatest evidence that he has been forsaken of the Lord. But such was the case with Jesus, his own Son. In those darkest of dangers the Lord's presence was with his Son. Not at any time was his comfort withdrawn. In the dark hours of the garden the angel of God spake in various ways the sustaining message to his heart. Sydney Lanier has beautifully fancied it thus:

"Into the woods my Master went
Clear forespent, forespent.
Into the woods my Master came,
Forespent with love and shame.
But the olives they were not blind to him,
The little gray leaves were kind to him,
And the thorn tree had a mind to him,
When into the woods he came.

"Out from the woods my Master went,
And he was well content.
Out from the woods my Master came,
Content with death and shame.

When death and shame would woo him last
From under the trees they drew him last,
'Twas on a tree they slew him last,
When out from the woods he came.''

The Lord did not forsake him at any time, though even the Master himself once thought that God had forsaken him. But he did not think it long. In a few moments only he saw the everlasting arms reached out to him, and into those hands he commended his spirit.

BETHANY C. E. READING COURSES.

Genesis of the Disciples of Christ.

F. D. POWER.

Taking the New Testament as the special authoritative rule of faith and practice for Christians, the Campbells were consistent. They recognized in a practical way the distinction between the law and the gospel, the Old and the New Testament. They said: Let men inquiring the way of salvation no longer be referred to Job and the Psalms, Isaiah or the Proverbs. God's revelation is progressive; first the family, then the tribe or nation, then the world—the Patriarchal, Jewish and Christian dispensations. We are no longer under Moses, but under Christ. The New Testament involves the abrogation of the Old. ''In that he saith a new covenant, he hath made the first old.'' The old had its purpose. The moon has its uses, so has the sun; the night is worthy, so is the joyous and glorious day. The old covenant, the old order, circumcision, the Sabbath, have passed away. ''The law came by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.'' ''Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.''

Here, they said, are four books—Mathew, Mark, Luke and John—to produce faith in Christ. ''Many other signs truly did Jesus that are not written in this book; but these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing, ye might have life through his name.''

Here in the Acts of the Apostles, showing how the gospel was preached to all classes and conditions of men; and that the apostles treated all as possessed of reason, capable of understanding and believing, of hearing and doing the will of God.

Here are the Epistles, written to Christians to show them how they should live as subjects of the kingdom; and here is the Apocalypse, or Revelation of John, casting light upon the fortunes and destinies of the church.

Going thus to the original sources of Christianity, these men declared: We must take the names given to the followers of Christ in the New Testament—Christians or Disciples of Christ. We do not read here of the church of Rome, or of Luther, or of Wesley, but the ''Church of Christ.'' ''The disciples were men called Christians.'' Party names divide God's people. Divisions hinder the progress of the kingdom. Christ prayed that his people might be one, that the world might believe.

Sects say: ''Lo, here is Christ, and lo, there.'' There is not an Arminian Christ and a Calvinistic Christ. God's people are sinning when they say: ''I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ.''

The party hatchet must be buried, party shibboleths given up, party banners furled and party names abandoned; and together, elbows touching, faces lifted in one direction, keeping step to the same music and advancing under the one banner of the Messiah, the church must move to the conquest of the world.

Accepting only the names of the New Testament, they took the ordinances also. Here is the Lord's Supper, they said, observed on every Lord's day as a solemn memorial feast. We must so observe it. Here is the institution of baptism, administered to believing penitents, by an immersion in water, in the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Walking in the old paths, we must so practice it. Of this ordinance, what is apostolic? they asked. What bears the stamp of catholicity? What is the practice of the Greek Church? What does all scholarship agree to have been the primitive practice? What do the founders of the religious bodies, Luther, Calvin, Wesley and the Roman Catholic, honestly admit to have been the exclusive practice of the apostles?

Show us the way of the book. We are tired of big popes and of little popes. We want no man's system of belief. Let us know what Jesus says, and the men authorized by him to speak. The world is sick of the rabid and venomous conflicts of sectarianism, of mind-shackling and soul-crushing human creeds. Thousands are wandering in the night with no stars to light them, with no sunlight, their barks driven by every storm, tossed on every billow, whirled in every eddy, praying for some one to guide them to a haven of safety and peace.

Let us bring the restless world back to the old foundations. Let us restore Christianity as in the beginning. How far these men succeeded, let the world judge. At first they were like—

"An infant crying in the night,
An infant crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry."

To-day millions hear the voice. It will not do to reform the clergy. We must go to the original preachers—Christ and the apostles. It will not do to reform the creeds; one creed is as good as another. We must go to the Word of God.

A New Feature in the Reading Courses.

It has been suggested that the value of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses might be greatly increased if they would adopt the method of University Extension. I am favorably inclined to the suggestion, but wish the advice of those who are interested in this effort to instruct and indoctrinate our young people.

The method, as I understand it, would be something like this: Selecting those points throughout the country where the Disciples are strongest as radiating centers, specially equipped men and women could be sent out to weaker points to give courses of popular lectures on our three chosen lines of study. As these lines of study are of interest to the church, the Sunday-school and the C. W. B. M., as well as to the Christian Endeavor Societies, all these could be united in awakening a public interest in these special lectures on Bible study, on world-wide missions and on the fundamental principles and history of our own plea. It seems to me that three courses of lectures given by picked persons would be of far greater value to many communities than the average revival service. They would awaken thought, start inquiry, set the people to reading and develop an intelligent, uplifting and abiding religious influence.

The expenses would be comparatively light and could easily be provided by the sale of tickets for the entire course. With proper enterprise, these tickets could be placed at a price within the reach of the poorest, and in many cases well-to-do persons would be glad to supply to the less fortunate this means of self-improvement. These lectures might be given in close succession as at an institute, or they may be distributed throughout the season. Local considerations would determine this.

This method would enable us to utilize quite a good deal of our very best talent now only partially employed. It would enable us to bring to bear directly upon the masses of our people and in connection with the most fundamental subjects, very much of the unused treasures of knowlege. It would do much to disseminate among the masses the valuable results of scholarly research. I am sufficiently radical to believe that our treasures of learning as well as all other treasures, are to be held in trust under Christ for the greatest possible good of the greatest possible number of people. All our treasures and our talents are for use to the very utmost. This is my conception of Christian service and out of this conviction the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses were born. It now seems to me that the suggestion to apply University Extension methods to these courses opens the way by which we may utilize the best among us for the systematic instruction of the masses of our people. It seems to me that the application of this method would do very much to make all our people intelligent concerning the evangelization of the world and concerning our plea to divided Christendom. It seems to me that there is thus opened before us a vast and most inviting field.

Will every one who reads this please write me a line that I may know how the suggestion strikes our thoughtful people?

J. Z. TYLER.

768 Republic St., Cleveland O., Dec. 3, 1898.

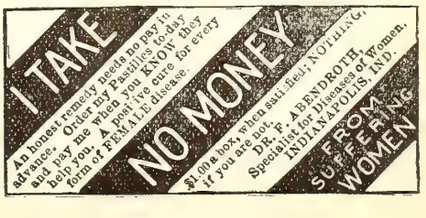
[We do not see why the foregoing suggestion is not entirely practicable and why this extension method should not form a feature of our Jubilee activities. If found to produce desirable results, as it would, no doubt, it might become a permanent method of educational work along religious lines. We hope that many of our readers will write Bro. Tyler, giving their opinions as to the feasibility of the plan.—EDITOR.]

Catarrh of the Stomach.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.



The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and bes treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drugstores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. These tablets can be found at all drugstores.

Literature.

JERUSALEM, THE HOLY. A brief History of Ancient Jerusalem, with an account of the Modern City and its conditions, Political, Religious and Social, by Edwin Sherman Wallace, late United States Consul for Palestine. Price, $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, New York and Torronto. 1898.

Perhaps no other city in the world has passed through quite so many changes, and been the scene of so many important events, as the far-famed City of Jerusalem. This volume gives perhaps all that is known to date concerning this wonderful city and its strange history, the author having availed himself of the latest scientific investigations and best works, including Prof. Sayce's "Patriarchal Palestine," Edersheim's "Jesus the Messiah," Dr. Robinson's "Biblical Researches," Williams' "Holy City" and Barclay's "City of the Great King." It contains illustrations and maps that serve the better to set forth the facts and conditions of the city, past and present. The author says in his preface that "some fifty years ago the appearance of Williams' 'Holy City' and Barclay's 'City of the Great King' gave the English public two real histories of Jerusalem." He adds, however, that the greater length of these excellent works has confined them mainly to the shelves of large libraries, while the growth in knowledge has thrown fresh light on many phases of the subject; hence this volume. Any one anticipating a visit to this ancient city, the Mecca of both Jews and Christians, and desiring an accerate knowledge of the history and present condition of the city, certainly cannot do better than to possess himself of this work, and give it careful study before making the journey. It is a volume of 359 pages, aside from the preface and index, and the mechanical quality of the book adds to its value.

THE POST-APOSTOLIC AGE. By Lucius Waterman, D. D., with an introduction, by Henry Codman Potter, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of New York. Chas. Scribner & Sons. 1898.

This is Volume II. of the Ten Epochs of Christian History, edited by Jno. Fulton, D. D., LL. D. The author of this volume professes to have written the work in the true spirit of scientific investigation, and the work itself bears evidence of this feature so far as we have examined it, though, like all authors, he, of course, is influenced largely by his point of view. He says, however, "For those readers in particular who have never trodden this way before, I have tried to be an honest guide, fairly indicating to them the places where another might guide them altogether differently." A review of this work will be given when we have had time to examine it more fully. Meantime, we simply call the attention of our readers to the appearance of this volume.

"MISSIONS AND POLITICS IN ASIA." By Robert E. Speer. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, publishers. Price, $1.00; cloth binding, 270 pages.

"The lectures composing this volume were suggested by the studies and observation of an entended tour in Asia, in the years 1896 and 1897. They are printed substantially as they were delivered to the faculty and students of Princeton Theological Seminary in February, 1898. Their object was to sketch in broad outline the spirit of the Eastern peoples, the present making of history in Asia and the part therein of Christian missions. They are at once the fruit and the ground of the conviction, vindicated by the obvious facts of history and of life, that Christ is the present Lord and King of all life and history, and their certain goal."

"DOCTRINE AND LIFE." By Iowa writers. Edited by G. L. Brokaw, A. M., editor Christien Index, and published by the Christian Index Co., Des Moines, Iowa. Cloth binding, 504 pages. No price given.

This is a book of 28 sermons, by Iowa preachers. It also contains a half-tone cut and biographical sketch of each preacher. Themes of the sermons or addresses in this book indicate a strong grip upon gospel truth and present-day issues, and is worthy of a place in every preacher's library.

AMERICAN REVISED BIBLE. Being the Revised Version set forth in A. D, 1881-1885. With the Readings and Renderings preferred by the American Revision Companies incorporated in the Text and with Copyright Marginal References. Printed for the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. New York, American Branch, 91 and 93 Fifth Ave., 1898.

This is the Bible many have been waiting for. It has incorporated in the text the preferred readings and renderings of the American committee, all of which, in our judgment, add to the value of this version. "In" is substituted for "with" in connection with baptism, "Jehovah" is substituted for "Lord" throughout the Old Testament, pneuma is rendered by "Spirit" instead of "Ghost," and many other equally important changes are made. The references made for this version are a valuable addition. The typography and print are all that could be desired. We welcome this version and hope it may prevail over all others.

"THE LIFE AND TEACHING OF JESUS." By Dr. H. L. Willett.

This book is the finest compendium of the facts in the life of Jesus, and the chief characteristics of his teaching, which we believe to be in print. Its condensation is only equaled by its lucidity of style. To master this little volume is to have a very clear knowledge of the history of Jesus and of his doctrine. It is divided into two parts, the first part dealing with the life and the second with the teaching of Jesus. Following is the list of the chapter headings in the two parts:

Part I. I. The The Gospel Records. II. Birth and Early Life. III. The Opening of Jesus' Ministry. IV. The Period of Public Ministry and Success. V. The Climax of Jesus' Ministry. VI. The Week of Tragedy and Triumph.

Part II. I. Characteristics of Jesus' Teaching. II. Jesus' Teaching Regarding God. III. Jesus' Teaching Regarding Himself. IV. The Kingdom of God. V. Jesus' Teaching Regarding Man. VI. Jesus and Judaism. VII. Jesus' Teaching about the Holy Spirit. VIII. Jesus' Teaching Regarding the Future.

This volume belongs to the series of books issued by the committee for the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses. It would be a good thing to enlist the whole membership of our churches in the study of such books as this and others of the series, as indeed is done in a few instances. They contain the very information which our membership need most at present.

"WHY I AM A VEGETARIAN." By J. Howard Moore, Frances L. Dusenberry, Chicago, publisher. Paper cover, 48 pages, price 25 cents.

This is the address delivered before the Chicago Vegetarian Society, by J. Howard Moore, and is now in its seventh thousand edition. It is in strong language and intended to carry conviction at first reading.

IN CHRIST JESUS, OR THE SPHERE OF THE BELIEVER'S LIFE. By Arthur T. Pierson. Funk & Wagnals Co., New York, Publishers. 196 pages.

This book contains a treatise on each of the Epistles of Paul to the early Christians in which the new man and the new life in Christ Jesus is ever-apparent and well-defined, developed and emphasized theme of the writer. The careful reading of this book cannot fail to enlarge the believer's conception of his privileges and blessings in Christ Jesus.

THE SAMBO BOOK. By Isaac Coale, Jr. Williams & Wilkins Co., Baltimore, Publishers. 96 pages, large size primer type.

Sambo's stories make interesting Christmas reading for children. A good Christmas gift book for juvenile readers.

PROFESSOR SHALER, the eminent geologist, predicts that in the distant future the great lakes will cease to pour over Niagara, and that the four upper lakes will find their outlet at Chicago. He gives his reasons in a most interesting article, which he has written for the next volume of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION. Professor Shaler has written another article for the same periodical on "Klondikes, Old and New."

BRYAN.

Bro. Walter J. Bryan's death occurred at the Bryan residence in this city, Dec. 3, 1898, aged 18 years. He died in the triumph of a living faith, and has entered into his rest. Though this is the old home of John A. Logan, the people could not have honored him any more than they did this our friend and brother whose future was so bright and hopeful. The funeral occurred Sunday afternoon from the Christian Church. The writer conducted the funeral services. The church was crowded and many were unable to get in. The casket was literally covered with floral designs sent by friends. From the church to the cemetery Grear's Concert Band, of which the deceased was a member, played a funeral march, and a long procession followed. Peaceto his ashes, and rest to his soul. W. H. WILLYARD.

Murphysboro, Ill., Dec. 16, 1898.

CLARK.

Nicholas S. Clark, born Nov. 9, 1832, at Glasgow, Howard county, Mo., died at Fortuna, Humboldt county, Cal., Nov. 16, 1898. He came to the Pacific Coast in 1853, and to Humboldt county in 1886. He was the father of nine children, seven of whom are living, and with the mother all were present at his death except one daughter. Though not a Christian, his wife was an honorable one. Funeral services at the Christian Church conducted by the writer. A. B. MARKLE.

CLARK.

Dr. John H. Clark died at the home of his son the Hon. Champ Clark, of Bowling Green, Mo., on Nov. 26th, in the 86th year of his age. He was born in New Jersey, near where Atlantic City now stands, on March 6th, 1813. Somewhere in the forties he went to Kentucky, settled down at Lawrenceburg, and was married to Althea Jane Beauchamp, a woman of rare beauty, refinement and education. After seven brief years of happiness, she was called up higher, but he ever fondly cherished her memory, regarded her children as a sacred trust from her, and looked forward always to meeting her in the better land. He was the grandson of a Quaker preacher. In early life he had been a Methodist, but more than fifty years ago had cast in his lot with the Disciples of Christ, and from then till the day of his death he remained an ardent advocate of the truth, as he understood it. He had a fine original mind, was fond of reading and well informed, and so long as he lived never considered himself too old to learn anything. He had not only the mind to understand, but the deft hand that executes, and all of the Eastern man's versatility, and so it came to pass that in the course of his life, he had worked at many things and did them all well: carriage building, clock-making, plough-making, singing, teaching and dentistry. After the death of his beloved wife, he removed to Washington Co., Ky., where for thirty years he successfully practiced the profession of dentistry. He left two children, the Hon. Champ Clark, of Bowling Green, Mo., and Mrs. J. J. Haley, of Cynthiana, Ky. Two things he had loved supremely: his church and his country, and he lived to see his son recognized as one of the most brilliant and able congressmen of his beloved Democratic party, and his daughter an efficient and earnest worker in the church, both in this country and in foreign lands. Seldom has there been a more earnest student of the Bible; to earnestly study it, to examine its truths, to write out his understanding of its teachings had been the delight and occupation of his old age. After his death there were reams of manuscript found amongst his effects, all relating to the Scriptures. Even during the last two years of feebleness and infirmity, his Bible was his daily companion. He died from a shock to his system, the result of a fall caused by a slight touch of paralysis. After three days of unconsciousness, he passed quietly into that "sun-bright clime, undimmed by sorrow, unaurt by time," of which he had delighted to sing. No one that saw his peaceful face, could doubt but he had entered with joy into the presence of his Master—

"Where those angel faces smile,
Which he had loved long since, and lost awhile." H.

JONES.

Died, Dec. 3, aged 30, Myrtie, daughter of Wm. Jones and wife, granddaughter of Harrison Jones. She united with the church at 16 and she was one of the pure ones of earth. She will be greatly missed by the church and community and especially at her home. Her presence was always a blessing. While it is hard to have the tender ties of earth broken, yet heaven means more to us when we realize that our sister has taken her abode in the city where God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes. J. D. JOHNSON.

Canton, O.

PARRY.

Sister Eliza Ann Parry died Nov. 23rd, 1898, in the 53rd year of her age. She was born near Cherry Tree, Pa. On Sept. 27, 1866, she was married to Bro. Wm. H. Parry, who departed this life Sept. 6, 1886. Subsequently removed to near Pineflats, Pa., where she resided to the time of her death. Her life was one of quiet peacefulness with her friends and neighbors, and was a consistent member of the Pineflats Church of Christ, and though she was hindered by ill health from attending worship during the last few months of her life, her conversation showed that she was in active sympathy with the cause of Christ. She leaves two sons and two daughters to mourn their loss. The funeral was conducted by the writer at Pineflats, Pa. CHARLES E. SMITH.

REAVIS.

Miss Lucy J. Reavis, born in Boone County, Ky., July 26, 1841, passed from her home on earth to her home in heaven, Dec. 2, 1888, aged 57 years, four months and six days. Sister Lucy united with the Church of Christ at Pleasant Grove, Monroe Cou ty, Mo., about 36 years ago, since which she has been a quiet, inoffensive and devoted Christian. She seemed to make two objects the primary aims of her life—to do right and to make others happy. Her mother died several years ago, since which she has been a ministering angel to her aged father who lingers to long for the summons to follow across the silent river. She leves also three sisters and two brothers to mourn her departure. Her funeral was conducted by C. H. Strawn in the. church where she so long had met fo worship.

A Complete Commentary

FOR

EVERY TEACHER AND BIBLE STUDENT

This should be the watchword of every Sunday-school in the land. Thorough, systematic work cannot otherwise be expected. In selecting these books it is always wisest to secure the Best.

I. The Christian Lesson Commentary,

for 1899, prepared by W. W. Dowling, is the most systematic, thorough and helpful published in all this broad land. Scores of the most competent critics, reviewers and practical teachers of various religious denominations have so testified. It contains 416 large pages, with many illustrations, maps, charts and helpful tables—64 pages more than PELOUBET'S, and 24 pages more than HURLBUT'S, the only other Lesson Annuals that belong to its class.

Style and Price.—Neatly printed on calendered paper and substantially bound in cloth, $1.00 per copy; $9.00 per dozen—25 per cent. cheaper than the much smaller books noted above.

II. The Lesson Helper

by the same author, is considerably smaller in size than The Lesson Commentary, but contains much of the same material in a more condensed form, designed especially for Senior Classes and their teachers. Schools and Teachers that feel that they must have a lower priced book than the one first noted above, will find The Lesson Helper very satisfactory; and they may order it with the full assurance that it is more complete every way than any lesson annual or quarterly published by the Christian Church, with the single exception of The Lesson Commentary.

Style and Price.—Printed on fine calendered paper, and substantially bound in heavy boards, only 35 cents per copy; $3.60 per dozen.

THE SPANISH WOMAN.

It has been said that every native Spanish woman is energetic; whether she be from Andalusia or Asturias, the South or the North, she has none of the creole languor of Spanish-descended women of Cuba, Mexico and tropcal America.

In the current number of the Singer series of national costume illustrations a typical picture is presented, showing a man and woman of Seville, where the orignal photograph was taken in 1891.

How characteristic are the accessories! The woman is industrious, and regards with an air of distinct disapproval the weak-faced individual before her with his guitar and glass of wine.

Because of the war, many a Spanish woman would now be driven to hard straits were it not for the Singer sewing machine, which is furnished to her on the most liberal terms of payment; thus she easily becomes self-supporting. Singer machines are almost universally used in Spain because of their simplicity, great range of work, and superior construction. They are "built like a watch," and never bother their fair operators, whether in Spain or elsewhere.

Publishers' Notes.

THE UNIFORM SERIES OF PRAYER-MEETING TOPICS FOR 1899.—Seventh consecutive year—are ready and being sent out in large numbers. Every church should follow these Topics during the coming year, as very many of the foremost churches have for years past. The first Topic in each month provides for a Concert of Prayer for Missions in harmony with the resolution adopted at the Chattanooga Convention. The Topics are published by the Christian Pub. Co., and sent postpaid at the rate of 25 cents per hundred.

TOPICAL OUTLINES is a neat Booklet of 32 pages containing a careful analysis of the Mid-week Church Prayer-meeting Topics—uniform series—with copious Scripture references that will serve as a guide to the leader and as an aid to the members in taking a prompt and intelligent part in the service. Every member should have a copy. Only 25 cents per dozen. Published by Christian Pub. Co.

COMPETENT WITNESSES TESTIFY

Concerning Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899:

It is a fitting volume with which to close the Sunday-school work of the century. The Christian Publishing Co. is fortunate in having W. W. Dowling to superintend their Sunday-school publications. His work has always been done well and in some respects superior to any other. The very best that could be found has been annually and intelligently laid before the teachers in our Sunday-schools. The Commentary for 1899 is a valuable addition to the splendid series.—F. M. Green, Kent, O.

I have examined Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, by W. W. Dowling. Whatever other commentaries we may have, he will find something in this one additional to all and which he needs. I know of no other which in itself will so fully prepare one for teaching the lesson, if all of its sections are carefully and thoroughly mastered.—Chas. M. Fillmore, Peru, Ind.

Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899 is on our table. It grows brighter and better as the years come and go. We have used it for thirteen years and now start in for the fourteenth volume. It is pure in doctrine, full in explanation, pointed in application and we trust international and general in circulation. It is well arranged, the notes are full and the illustrations are helpful.—Christian Index, Des Moines, Ia.

Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, by W. W. Dowling, is an 8vo. volume of 413 pages. For thirteen years this valuable publication has made its annual appearance. The volume before us is fully up to the high standard of its predecessors, and its pages are replete with notes, comments, illustrations, applications and suggestions gathered from various sources, the designs being to throw the best light possible on the Scripture text. We commend this commentary to all Sunday-school workers.—The Religious Telescope.

The Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, edited by W. W. Dowling, is a beautifully bound and richly illustrated volume of over 400 pages. No Lesson Help more fully and satisfactorily illustrates the lessons of the International Series. In our preparation of the Quarterlies no commentary gives us more satisfactory, if equal, aid. If the teacher wishes best help in his work, he will find it in Dowling's Commentary. We would be glad to see the Christian Lesson Commentary in the hands of all our teachers. With its aid we can hardly see how further help would be necessary in the line of commentary matter.—Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio.

The Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899 contains 414 pages, and from title-page to the end is loaded with good things. It presents the best plan for the study of the lesson that I have yet found. If carefully and intelligently followed for preparation it will thoroughly equip any thoughtful teacher to helpfully and efficiently teach the lesson. The preliminary helps, the lesson analysis, the expositions, the illustrative material, the truths to be applied, the practical lessons to be emphasized, the suggestive material provided, certainly furnish, in rich abundance, all that any intelligent person requires to make him a teacher "that needs not to be ashamed," properly teaching his class. J. H. MACNEILL,
Pastor Christian Church.
Muncie, Ind.

The price of Christian Lesson Commentary for 1999, by W. W. Dowling, is $1 per copy postpaid, or $9 per dozen copies not prepaid. The book is printed on good paper, with red edges and bound in a splendid quality of dark-green cloth. Address Christian Publishing Co., 1522 Locust St., St. Louis, Mo.

Expansion.

This is the paramount question of the day. We believe in expanding—the list of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Do you?

We believe in it, because in increasing the number of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—

(1) More minds will be enlightened concerning the achievements and needs of the cause;

(2) More hearts will be warmed with love for others of our race less fortunately situated than ourselves;

(3) More charity of opinions and more unity of action will obtain among us because our zeal in a common purpose, kindled by knowledge and love, and—

(4) The kingdom of Christ will thereby be rapidly extended and the will of God be more nearly done on earth.

Will the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST be useful in bringing these desirable things to pass? Well, we think—but never mind, here are a few opinions from others.

"The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is an ably edited paper and sound to the core." CEPHAS SHELBURNE, Fredericksburg, Va.

"I consider the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST one of our very best religious papers. I admire its Christian spirit and am sure it is doing much in advancing the cause of our blessed Master." H. C. SAUM, Decker's Point, Pa.

"I think I have neglected a duty in not expressing sooner my continued delight in the broad, liberal Christian tone of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I left one of the leading denominations twelve years ago in search of "Liberty with Loyalty," and shall ever be thankful that I became acquainted with the Disciples of Christ. Sometimes, however, in my six years' rambling in your great country, I have seen occasionally the bitterest kind of sectarianism amongst even the Disciples. Your paper will save the grand cause from crystallizing into Ishmaelites on the hand and Sadducees on the other." T. R. HODKINSON, Clarksville, Ia.

Once in awhile I find something in your paper that I do not heartily approve, but after all necessary abatements have been made I think that in the moderation of its temper, in the substantial value of its discussions and its general literary excellency it incontestibly leads, by an ample space, all of our weekly publications. This is the opinion of one after the "Old Methods." GEO. PLATTENBURG, Dover, Mo.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S PRAYER MEETING and Its Improvement.

BY CAL OGBURN.

This book is the offspring of experience and observation, setting forth how to make the Young People's Prayer-Meetings most interesting and profitable. It has been written, not for the young people of the past, but for those of the present and future—not for the experienced, but for the inexperienced; "and now, little book, may God bless your mission of usefulness to the young men and young women, to the boys and to the girls who have pledged themselves to be loyal to Christ and the Church."

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Ethen Allen Hitchcock, at present United States Ambassador at St. Petersburg, has been appointed successor of Mr. Bliss as Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Hitchcock is a native of Alabama, but has been for many years a resident of St. Louis. Now, for the third time in the last twenty-five years, a citizen of St. Louis becomes Secretary of the Interior. It is believed that the original appointment would have fallen to Mr. Hitchcock instead of Mr. Bliss had not considerations of geographical distribution of Cabinet positions demanded that a New Yorker be put in the place. The first part of the prophecy quoted last week has already been fulfilled in the appointment of a Western man to the vacancy in the Cabinet. The way is now clear for the fulfillment of the second part by the appointment of Mr. Choate, of New York, or some other Eastern man, as Ambassador to the court of St. James. There have been an extraordinary number of changes in the McKinley Cabinet. During its less than two years of existence, Secretaries Sherman, Day, McKenna, Gary and Bliss have resigned their positions, either to retire or to accept other places.

A recent cartoon, referring to the Czar's proposition for disarmament, pictures the Czar in crown and gown standing upon the shore of a boisterous sea whose waves threaten to engulf him. The waves of this sea are labeled "Survival of the Fittest," "Natural Selection," "Selfishness," and against these the monarch waves a scepter labled "Peace Proposition." Below is the inscription, "A Modern Canute." So the Czars's attempt to stay the tide and still the waves of selfishness with a proposal for peace, is characterized as a vain and foolish attempt to avert the inevitable and resist the irresistable. We remember that there was one, who once sailed the Sea of Galilee, in whose mouth the word "peace" was potent for the stilling of waves, and who combated human selfishness with this same weapon — peace. Contemporary satirists might have depicted his method in some such cartoon as that described above. Perhaps the Czar's position is not consistent and perhaps he is but a dreamer of dreams. But one cannot believe in the final triumph of the principles of Jesus without seeing in this suggestion of a victory of peace over selfishness, not an idle dream, but a vision, distant perhaps, but true.

The War Inquiry Board goes on with its investigation. Last week it had a series of prominent witnesses, including Generals Miles, Shafter, Merritt and Howard. Gen. Shafter was inclined to dismiss all criticisms with the sweeping generalization that "hindsights are always better than foresights," a remark which contains some truth, to be sure, but not enough to justify an army officer in a failure to exercise foresight. One of Gen. Miles' most striking statements was his condemnation of the refrigerated beef, which was furnished to the army to the extent of 327 tons, which he said might better be called "embalmed beef." Frequent complaints were made to the commissary general, but he seemed to insist that it should be used. The canned fresh beef, of whtch about 100 tons were supplied, was also condemned by the officers whose commands used it. The statements to the board the next day by Adjutant-General Corbin do not accord with those of General Miles, and the differences still remain to be reconciled.

The details have been arranged for the transfer of the sovereignty of Cuba from Spain to the United States. At noon, Jan. 1, the Spanish flag on Morro Castle and the public buildings of Havana will be hauled down, and the American flag will be raised. At the same time the government will be surrendered to the American evacuation commissioners and by them to Maj. Gen. Brooke. The American commissioners have done good service in hastening the departure of the Spanish troops, but the evacuation will not be complete on the day of the surrender. The articles, which have been agreed upon to govern the transfer of sovereignty make liberal provision for the rights and privileges of the Spanish soldiers pending their embarkation, but at the same time guarantee, as well as any agreement can, that they shall not be able in any way to obstruct the work of the American Government in purifying and civilizing Cuba.

We are told that there is imminent danger of a Cabinet crisis at Madrid, and we are not disposed to doubt the report. When, during the past two years, has that danger not existed? When affairs are in such a condition that they can't become worse, any change is apt to be acceptable, and Cabinets have with difficulty kept their places in this situation. It has been said that Gen. Weyler is not in sympathy with the Sagasta ministry and will try to overthrow it. He himself denies this report in a signed statement in which he proclaims his complete reconciliation with the Liberal party. As he acutely remarks, the issue upon which he separated from the party, viz., the administration of Spanish sovereignty in Cuba, is now a dead issue. We should say it was. It is just as dead as Spanish colonial sovereignty is, and nothing could be more conspicuously defunct than that.

We believe that, in the end, justice will be done in the Dreyfus case, but it is sometimes hard to keep up that faith. As our readers well know, the case is being retried by the Court of Cassation, the highest civil tribunal in France. The most important document in the original trial was the "dossier," said to have been the chief item in the conviction of Dreyfus. Its contents were so dangerous to the safety of the state that it was necessary to observe absolute secrecy. Consequently, the accused was convicted upon evidence which was never presented to any but his accusers. The important question in the new trial is, what shall be done with the dossier. The Minister of War refused to submit the documents to the Court of Cassation without a guarantee that their secrecy would be preserved, i. e., that they would not be shown to the council for the defense. The court very properly declined to accept them upon these terms. Still, Dreyfus could never be completely cleared and restored to his former standing in the army unless these documents were examined and pronounced spurious. Such is their confidence that the dossier is a forgery, that the council for the defense has waived the right of examining the documents. In the present trial, then, as in the court martial, the chief evidence will be of a sort against which no defense is possible. The difference is that in this case the court is not especially interested in the condemnation of the prisoner.

Senator Frye, a member of the Peace Commission, now lately returned from Paris, has made a statement in regard to the future of the Philippines, which is highly significant, coming as it does from one so thoroughly acquainted with the matter so far as it is affected by the treaty of peace. The fact of chief importance which he emphasizes is that the treaty settles nothing in regard to the Philippines except that Spain is not to have them. We have not bought them for twenty millions, but have agreed to pay Spain tnat amount to leave. The future ownership of the islands is still to be determined, though obviously it must be determined by us. Senator Frye says: "The suggestion that we could sell these islands is one not likely to be considered by self-respecting Americans. But the ratification of the treaty will leave us free to do as we please, and whatever the people desire will probably be done." This view of the significance of the treaty is gaining ground and will probably completely nullify the opposition to ratification. Further, Senator Frye says: "I believe we will retain the Philippines, and that the people of this country would not consent to their abandonment. I think that wlth patience and wisdom in government—by treating the people of the Philippines justly—that nearly the entire population of the Philippine Islands will be an intelligent, industrious, prosperous, self-sustaining and contented people."

THIRTY YEARS AN EDITOR.

Three decades have elapsed since the editor of this paper wrote his editorial salutatory. This is not a long period. We used to think it was, but it is not. It hardly seems possible that so many years have come and gone between that editorial and this; and yet it is a matter of simple substraction: 1899—1869=30. This testimony of figures is confirmed by a glance in the mirror. And so in the mouth of two witnesses — arithmetic and the looking-glass—the truth is established.

In January, 1869, the aforesaid salutatory appeared. It was written with gre trepidation, but with abounding hope Here is the closing paragraph:

"Our bark is ready. Carefully, hopefully, prayerfully, we commit it to the great sea of religious literature. Her sails are unfurled. Our colors float proudly from the summit of the mast. With our hands on the helm and our eyes steadily fixed on Bethlehem's Star, a 'God bless you' and a 'Happy New Year' to all, and we make our editorial bow."

Alas! little did we then know of the storms that blow upon the sea of religious journalism. It is needless to say that the sails fanned by those early zephyrs were long since blown into shreds and displaced by steam, and that we no longer rely upon vagrant winds to waft our bark into port. And even with this change, the deck of our noble bark, now enlarged to a ship, has often been under water as our vessel has "listed" under stress of fierce opposing winds and heavy seas. Sometimes timid passengers have thought us a little reckless in encountering such gales, and have advised a change of direction in order to reach an easier port; but so far the good ship has, by the grace of God, kept its prow turned steadfastly toward the Star of Bethlehem, in spite of wind and wave. In other words, it has aimed to be true to the light of Christ as it has been able to see and to receive that light.

Dropping now the nauticalfigure, we have witnessed many changes—social, political and religious—during our editorial career, and of course have encountered some opposition, as any man or any paper is sure to do that seeks to know the truth and to be loyal to the truth. But of this we do not complain, seeing that we "have not yet resisted unto blood" nor suffered as our fathers suffered for the cause they loved. In looking back over these thirty years of editorial experience we can see many evidences of God's goodness and forbearance, and recall many pleasant reminiscences along the way. Among these are the friendships and confidences and kind and helpful words of many of God's faithful ones, many of whom remain with us; but some have joined the great Majority. There have been shadows, of course, but they have only served to make us appreciate the sunshine all the more. The work has been arduous and the burdens have been heavy, and sometimes the way has been exceedingly difficult, but God's hand has led us on, and to Him is due the praise and gratitude for whatever good has been accomplished by the paper through all these years.

Our own religious brotherhood has undergone many changes in these thirty years. The change in leadership has been almost complete. The men who were then bearing the heavy responsibilities of leadership, and to whom the brotherhood looked for counsel and guidance—where are they? Many of them have passed on to the holier fellowships and more glorious activities of the life beyond, while most of those who remain are resting in the quietude of old age, waiting for the great change when they shall join their comrades who have gone before. Isaac Errett was then but just entering well upon his brilliant editorial career, so full of promise and blessing for the cause he loved; O. A. Burgess was in the full zenith of his splendid manhood, vindicating the claims of the Bible against the attacks of infidelity and standing as a mighty leader among the hosts of his brethren; Thos. Munnell, patient, resourceful, liberal - minded, was leading on our missionary columns; A. I. Hobbs, a prince in Israel, was attracting wide attention by his ability and zeal; Dr. Hopson was in the zenith of his fame as a pulpit orator; D. P. Henderson's silvery voice was still ringing out in musical tones as he urged his brethren to fidelity and plead with sinners to turn to God; G. W. Longan, with pen and voice was seeking to bring his brethren into larger life and liberty; Moses E. Lard had scarcely reached the meridian of his splendid powers, and was holding vast audiences by the spell of his genius and writing wonderful articles in his quarterly; R. M. Bishop stood as a pillar in our missionary work, and the lamented Garfield was already rising into national fame. But time would fail us to tell of other stalwart leaders who stood with these men in those days, but who have been called to the experiences of the life unseen. But others, true and tried, have been raised up to fill their places. "God buries His workmen, but carries on His work."

There has been a great change in numbers, in strength and in our organized activities. Our membership has more than doubled within that period, and the position we now occupy in the estimation of the religious world is very different from what it was thirty years ago. Then newspaper and pulpit misrepresentations of our teaching and position was almost the rule, instead of being the exception as at present. We have witnessed a vast abatement of partisan bitterness and sectarian illiberality within this period. There has been no little growth among ourselves in this respect. While we are not less loyal to what we call "Our Plea" now than we were at the beginning of this period, we are coming to appreciate more the religious work that has been done and is being done by others, and to have a kindlier feeling of fellowship to all who love Christ and are seeking to advance his kingdom in the world. We have come to a clearer understanding of our place and our mission among the religious forces of Christendom, and to recognize more clearly that this mission can only be fulfilled in the spirit of the largest catholicity and Christian charity.

Another change among us is that of greater charity toward each other in our differences of opinion. There was the flavor of intolerance in many of the discussions of those days which only lingers yet in exceptional cases. Education is the enemy of dogmatism. The air of infallibility is not so manifest now in our newspaper controversies, and it is not so easy, as it formerly was, to down a man with the simple cry, "Unsound!" We are learning to differ as brethren. There is more room among us than there was thirty years ago for differences of opinion.

It is not for us to say how much the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has done to bring about these changes. Our readers will bear us testimony, however, that we have stood as the steadfast champion of the fullest Christian liberty, and of the largest charity, through all these years. We may be permitted to add, also, that hundreds of brethren have attributed their escape from the bondage of a narrow legalism into the larger and freer life of the gospel and a wider comprehension of our plea for Christian unity, to the ministry of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Here we raise our Ebenezer. Hitherto the Lord hath helped us. We trust Him for the future. We go forward, not knowing what awaits us. Nor are we anxious. It is not probable that there remain to us thirty years more for service of any kind, but what remains shall be given to Him whom we love with an increasing passion as the years go by.

THE YEAR OF JUBILEE.

The Year of Jubilee was a year of joy among the Jews because it was the year in which Hebrew slaves were ransomed, and alienated estates came back into the possession of their original owners. It must have been a year, therefore, to which toiling bondsmen, imprisoned captives and landless tenants looked forward with joyful anticipation. It was a year of joy, of liberty and of gracious favor from God.

We have called this our Jubilee Year, as it is the fiftieth year of our organized missionary work. It ought, therefore, to be a year of liberation from bondage to false prejudices, to low ideals, to injurious customs, and of our entrance into the larger life and liberty of the gospel. Jewish promises were mainly temporal; those to the Christian are chiefly spiritual. The spiritual antitypes of those temporal blessings which the Year of Jubilee brought to the Jew are a larger measure of spiritual liberty, of release from error and superstition, and entering upon our spiritual inheritance.

What are some of the false ideas in which many among us have been in bondage? One of these is that the Bible furnishes a prescribed method of missionary work, and that we are compelled to carry on our missionary work according to such method. This is a misconception of the Bible, particularly of the New Testament, which is our rule of faith and practice, and fails to appreciate the liberty which we have in Christ. This view has done much to provoke controversy, to stifle missionary zeal, to prevent co-operation of churches, and so to hinder progress in missionary work. It would be a glorious thing if during this Jubilee Year those who have been imprisoned by that misconception of the gospel could be liberated and enabled to rejoice in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.

Some of us have been held captive by the idea that if we meet the demands of our local congregations or, at least, of our city, neighborhood or state, we have done all that duty requires at our hands. This, too, is an utter misconception of the obligations which rest upon us as disciples of Christ, whose marching orders are: "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." It is not enough that we give the gospel to our own community or neighborhood, while nations and tribes are languishing for the "bread of life." O, that men's ideas of their obligations could be enlarged this Year of Jubilee!

Another false notion to which many churches and preachers have been in bondage is that the more they do for the general work of missions, the less they will have for local work. If our fifty years of experience in missionary work has shattered any false idea it has certainly destroyed that. The churches that do most for general Home Missions and Foreign Missions are those that do the most work in their immediate localities. The reflex influence of mission work has enriched all the churches that have engaged in it, enlarging their gifts and their spiritual power. The poorest church is the one that contents itself with caring for itself.

There is an inheritance from which many of us have been shut out these many years, into which we ought to enter this Jubilee Year. It is the supreme joy that comes from the consecration of our time, our talents and our resources to Christ and the demands of his cause. Many of us have not known the peculiar joy and the deep spiritual peace which have come to our missionaries, because we have made no adequate sacrifices to the Lord's cause. What a splendid thing it would be if thousands of our able, well-to-do brethren should decide this Jubilee Year to give a larger portion of their earthly goods for the welfare of humanity, and should thereby enter into an inheritance of blessedness and of Christian peace of which they have hitherto known little or nothing.

Finally, this Jubilee Year should remind us that there is an inheritance of unattained Christian life into which it is our privilege to enter. Said Joshua to the hesitating tribes at Shiloh: "How long are ye slack to go in to possess the land which the Lord, the God of your fathers, hath given you?" How long, oh, faltering, hesitating Disciples of Christ, will ye be slack to go forward and possess the rich spiritual inheritance which Christ hath provided for us through his death and resurrection from the dead? There are spiritual Sierras before us, on whose glowing heights our feet may stand, if we but press forward courageously under the heroic leadership of Jesus Christ our Guide. "We have not yet already attained, nor have we apprehended that for which we have been apprehended of Christ Jesus." Let us go forward with joyful strides to the realization of this sublime purpose and make this year a Year of Jubilee indeed.

EBENEZER.

Memorials are pleasing to God and profitable to men. Because God believed in memorials he gave many to the Jews, and the crowning one was the Jubilee ushered in by trumpets, releasing every Jew from the burden of indebtedness, restoring to every Jewish family its patrimony, and to every bondslave his freedom; the Jubilee was the gladdest festival in all the Jewish economy.

We are coming into the Jubilee of our organized mission work, that of the American Christian Missionary Society; it is well for us to look to some of the reasons of our rejoicing and ask ourselves whether and why we should raise our Ebenezer.

The American Christian Missionary Society was organized in 1849; it is the mother of all general organized work among us. What is there in our history and in God's dealings with us that we should rejoice in the retrospect in this Jubilee Year?

We might well say that we will build our Ebenezer because of our high calling in the great plea he has given us to make before the world. The plea for Christian union on the basis of God's Word alone, with no test of fellowship but what God's Word makes a test of salvation, is the grandest, the simplest and the freest plea made under heaven among men. God has honored us in permitting us to make this great plea.

We could raise an Ebenezer for God's providence in our movement; our location as a rural people, yet in the heart of this great country, is a cause of thanksgiving. As leaven in the meal, as the lungs and heart in the body, as the religious mother in the home—so God has placed us in the midst of this good land.

We can raise an Ebenezer for the men whom God gave us to lead this great movement. Grant that we may have idealized them, yet we have a roll of worthies of which the roll of members of our 1849 convention is a part; men who loved the truth and loved the Word of God better than they loved houses or homes or lands or earthly store; who labored and sacrificed for the spread of the simple gospel of the New Testament. We are entered into their labors and reaping that which they sowed with so many toils and tears. We can say, "Hitherto the Lord has led us." Their names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life. When we think of their eloquent voices, of their hopeful hearts and their devoted lives, we honor them and thank God for the men who led us to this good year.

We can raise an Ebenezer as we study the great increase which God has given us. The highest estimate of the number of our brethren when the American Society was organized is one hundred thousand; to-day the lowest is one million, who stand upon the simple platform of New Testament faith. Far beyond our membership has gone the leavening influence of our plea, and the whole religious tone and thought and practice of American Protestantism have been influenced by the teaching and practice of our movement.

The Lord has given us good reason for our Ebenezer in the success which has attended our organized mission work. The statistics do not tell the whole story, but some items make us to rejoice. The organization of 2,185 churches as the result of missionary effort is a result over which all good men will rejoice in this country. Eighty-five thousand souls baptized into Christ is a result that brings joy into heaven itself.

So now let us build our Ebenezer, and with thankful hearts help the American Christian Missionary Society celebrate its Jubilee with thankfulness in the works of our King.

ARE WE PAGANS?

Henry Watterson, quoted in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, said in a recent issue of the Courier-Journal, that paganism was a matter of faith, not of morals. While this is the practical distinction of paganism, it has much in every way to do with immorals. In common with Christianity it recognizes an unseen power behind phenomena, ruling the world, but it has never occurred even to pagan theology to connect this power in any vital sense with moral conduct and character. Paganism is religion minus morality. Christianity is religion plus morality. The power not ourselves is one that makes for righteousness. I once heard George Adam Smith remark that the God of Israel was a God with a character. Pagan deities are gods without character and their devotees, in consequence, are people without morals. Pagan religion consists of ceremonies and sacrifices to appease the wrath of an offended deity bent on the destruction of his people. Worship with paganism is an end, with Christianity it is a means. Churches, creeds, doctrines, theologies, ministries, ordinances and organizations are not ends with the religion of Christ, but means that contribute to the redemption of humanity and the making of character. The supreme end Christ had in view in coming here was to make men. No doctrine or institution is an end in Christianity, character alone occupies that position. Realization of the ideal in Christ, perfection of manhood after the likeness of the Son of Man, is the essential end and purpose that Christianity is working to achieve in the history of humanity. Paganism lives in the flesh and seeks to avert the displeasure of fickle and non-existent gods.

The religion of Israel was consecration to God, and the expression of that consecration by separation from the world. It knew from the perfection of Jehovah's character that righteousness and holiness belonged to the people. The Christian religion is separation from the world, and union with God in love and righteousness that goes out to save the world from sin. Does the pagan consciousness still survive and dominate in the control of human affairs? How many still regard Christianity as dogma, creed, ritual, sacrament, officialism and church as an end in itself; and while admiring the life of Christ as unique and beautiful, look upon it as ideal and wholly impracticable under existing conditions? How many agree with the dictum of Archbishop McGee, that no government could stand a week if it undertook in hard earnest to carry out the principles of the sermon on the Mount? How many have realized the significance of the fact that an ethical sermon and not a theological creed is placed in the forefront of the teaching of Jesus? What proportion of the male members of Evangelical churches understand that the ethics of the gospel must of necessity control politics, business, social relations and the common life of men? Is our mode of celebrating the anniversary of the world's Redeemer indicative of a Christian or a pagan civilization? How far have we got in these nineteen centuries toward making the question, "What would Jesus do?" the basis of our own individual and corporate action? How much of New Testament

Christianity have we restored to our churches, to say nothing of the world at large?

Nothing so forcibly reminds us of the dominance of paganism as the Christmas festivities through which we are now passing, professedly in observance of the birth of Christ. The paganism just under the skin breaks out in a violent eruption of frolic and revelry, drunkenness and social dissipation, unequaled by any other season of the year; and no doubt a visitant from another world, if he should honor us with his presence, would unite with the decent denizens of the earth in profound surprise that a Christian nation should thus celebrate the birth of its Savior. Our heathen convivialities are painful reminders of the fact that too many have the motto of the wild-eyed, long-haired German socialist who exclaimed, "This world is my paradise and in it I will revel and not rot." The dear Dutchman missed it, however, by a single conjunction. According to fact and logical sequence, the declaration should have been: This world is my paradise and in it I will revel and rot.

Modern society is built on the mud foundation of the pagan philosophy of life. Its devotees live for pleasure, for amusement, for excitement and for the indulgence of its lackadaisical propensities. Strip life of its moral aims and it becomes mere animal existence of eat, drink and be merry, and this has been the bane of the world's society from the beginning. Pleasure is both the means and the end of its existence. Dress, fashion, cards, social amusement, an incessant whirl of pastimes and gayeties constitute the beau ideal of the social pagan. The intellect is dwarfed and there seems to be no consciousness of the spiritual nature at all. Greed of gain was never more rampant and voracious than it is to-day; not that men love gain merely for the sake of gain, but for the sake of the pleasure and power and luxury that gain will purchase. Ages of wealth and leisure become materialistic and morally decadent, and this means the ultimate degeneracy of a nation's manhood and the near approach of the end, as it did with pagan Rome. This is yet a vigorous and virile nation, but there is too much of this death-dealing paganism in our blood to bode well for the future of our civilization.

I am not ignorant of the fact that there is a legitimate element of pleasure in all healthy life. Relaxation from strain and pressure of work makes a certain amount of enjoyment and even amusement essential. This would be a gloomy world if there were nothing diverting or pleasurable in it. The world is not all tragic and humdrum. The comic is a part of the cosmic. All social relaxations in the way of diversion must not be indiscriminately condemned, if they do not wholly disregard the moral elements of life. While extremes should be avoided in this direction, it must be borne in mind that the diversions of life must be subordinated to the serious aims and fundamental purposes of existence. As we have long since learned from Longfellow's familiar verses:

"Not enjoyment and not sorrow
Is our destined end or way,
But to act, that each to-morrow
Find us farther than to-day."

Hour of Prayer.

THE SECRET OF ALL FRUITFULNESS.*

(John 15:1-10; Matt. 7:16-20.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Right doing depends upon right being; conduct upon character; the outward act upon the inward life.

With this topic, the first for the New Year, we begin the uniform topics, which have been arranged by a committee appointed by the Chattanooga Convention. We sincerely request all who may read or use these Prayer Meeting lessons to pray for God's guidance in their preparation and His blessing upon their use in the prayer meetings.

It is altogether meet that in this first prayer meeting of the New Year, with all the mighty responsibilities of the year confronting us, we should turn our thoughts to the secret of that fruitfulness which Christ expects in all his followers. First of all, read prayerfully and thoughtfully the Scripture citations above given. They are the words of the Master Himself. Notice, first, the importance of fruit-bearing. If the "chief end of man" is to "glorify God and to enjoy him forever," the question as to how we may best glorify God is exceedingly important. Let the answer to this question be read in John 15:8: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." Let it be noticed that it is not enough to simply bear fruit; the Master expects much fruit. Fruit-bearing, then, is the way to glorify our Father. Furthermore, it is the test of discipleship: "And so shall ye be my disciples."

There can be no question about what the Master means by fruit-bearing. He refers to the good deeds and good influences that go out from our human lives to the blessing of other lives. By noble, pure, unselfish deeds of kindness and of service, we glorify our Father in heaven and furnish the only test of our discipleship which either heaven or earth will recognize. The missions of the church are among its noblest fruit.

But the secret of this fruitfulness—what is it? "Abide in me and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine, so neither can ye except ye abide in me" (v. 4). Union with Christ is an essential and unalterable condition of fruitfulness. As the branch draws its life force from the vine by which it produces fruit, so we derive from God, through union with Christ, the life which manifests itself in "good fruit" and "much fruit." How vain it is, then, for any individual or for any church to depart from the divine method in order to enjoy spiritual prosperity. The only way for a church or an individual to be fruitful, to enjoy real genuine prosperity, is through a close and vital union with Jesus Christ, pursuing His work in His spirit and with His unselfish motive.

Another condition of increased fruitfulness is spiritual cleansing: "And every branch that beareth fruit, He cleanseth it that it may bear more fruit" (v. 2). This process of spiritual cleansing cannot be neglected by one who desires his life to be abundantly fruitful. This cleansing or pruning process is not always agreeable to us, but the Master sees that it is necessary in order that our fruit-bearing capacity be increased. Are we able to pray, "Cleanse me, O Lord, that I may bear more fruit to the glory of our Heavenly Father?"

The words of Jesus, as given by Matthew in the passage above cited, deal more particularly with fruit-bearing as a test of charcter. He is giving His disciples instruction as to how they may detect false prophets, who come among them in sheep's clothing. The principle, however, applies universally: "By their fruits ye shall know them" (Matt. 7:16). Not by their professions, not by their reputations, not by their letters of commendation even, for even bad men sometimes manage to get letters of commendation, but by their fruits—by their lives and conduct—you shall know them. Not only are we to judge each other by this rule, but Christ will, no doubt, judge us by this same standard in the great day: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these ye have done it unto me" (Matt. 25:41).

The great central truth, then, that Jesus is teaching us in this lesson is that the heart of man must be made right, the character changed from evil to good, before the life can be transformed and abound in good deeds. This emphasizes, beyond all mere human words, the absolute importance of spiritual renovation in order to success in Christian work. Then, in order to continuous fruit-bearing, we must abide in Christ—live daily in conscious fellowship with him. It is not enough to "put on Christ." We must walk in him.

Are we to make this a great missionary year, in which many thousand souls are to be brought to Christ? Are we to increase our missionary offerings until other messengers of the cross shall be sent into the dark places of the earth with the message of light and salvation? This must come about by such a spiritual change as will bring us into accord with the mind of Christ, and the putting away of all evil from our lives that hinders our receiving the fullness of the divine love and blessing. This is the supreme duty, as it is the supreme privilege, that confronts us.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we thank Thee that Thou hast called us out of the world unto Thyself, and hath cleansed us by Thy Word, and hath brought us into union with Thyself, to the end that our lives may be fruitful unto the glory of our Father who art in heaven. And yet, we must acknowledge that we have not surrendered ourselves fully to Thy will, and have not been thoroughly cleansed from all our evil ways. Draw us closer to Thee, we beseech Thee, O Lord, and help us to put away every evil desire and false ambition from our hearts, and every evil practice from our lives, that we may receive the full measure of that abundant life which Thou didst bring into the world, and receiving which we may abound unto all fruitfulness in every good word and work. And grant, we beseech Thee, that this fresh consecration of our lives, at the dawn of the New Year, may enable us to do more the coming year than we have ever done before for the spread of Thy gospel and for the salvation of our fellowmen. For thy Name's sake. Amen!

*Midweek Prayer Meeting Topic, Jan. 4th, 1899 (Concert of Prayer for Missions).

Rev. J. M. Campbell, Congregational minister, Lombard, Ill., writes us follows:

I think that the space given to the S. S. department in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is most profitably filled. Prof. Willett's articles are like himself, fresh, modern and interesting. He has a wonderful faculty for investing old scenes with movement and life, and of making Old Testament worthies who had become mere names stand out before us as men of flesh and blood like ourselves, but the main charm in his articles is their sweet, spiritual tone.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Just a glance backward along the track of the old year before we cross over the line into the new will not be amiss. It has been a wonderful year. Do our readers fully appreciate that fact? We believe the future historian of the republic will treat the year 1898 as a turning-point in our national history. The year opened portentously, with ominous mutterings of a coming storm, our relations with Spain growing more estranged every day. Prospects of Spain's putting down the insurrection in Cuba had completely vanished, and it was becoming clear that something must be done to end the sad drama. Spain was deaf to the appeals of the United States and refused our good offices in behalf of peace. A state of intense excitement and suspense existed both in this country and in Spain. The elements of war were in solution in the political atmosphere. What would precipitate them?

Then came an explosion in Havana Harbor, February 15, and 250 of our brave sailor boys were hurled into eternity, and one of the proudest battleships of the United States, wrecked and ruined, sank in Spanish waters. That was the precipitant. Things hastened to a crisis rapidly. March 9, Congress appropriated fifty millions for national defense. On the 19th of April Congress passed intervention resolutions. The President's ultimatum went to Madrid on April 20th, and was haughtily rejected. On the 25th war was declared to exist between Spain and the United States. The North American fleet, under command of Commodore Sampson, was sent to blockade Cuba, and the Asiatic fleet at Hong Kong, under command of Commodore Dewey, was ordered to capture or destroy the Spanish fleet in the Philippine Islands. Nine days later, on the last day of April, Dewey sailed through the channel into Manila Harbor, and on the morning of May 1st attacked and destroyed the Spanish fleet and raised the American flag on Fort Cavite, and the nation had entered upon a new epoch of history.

Events followed each other in rapid succession until, with the destruction of Cervera's fleet at Santiago, July 3d, and the capture of that city by the United States troops a few days later, Spain was brought to her knees asking for terms of peace. Then came the protocol, the peace commission, and but recently the completed Treaty of Peace, ceding Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, the Island of Guam in the Ladrones, and relinquishing Cuba to work out her destiny under the protection and guidance of the United States. The war was short, sharp and decisive. The victories at Manila and Santiago were almost unparalleled in the annals of history. The campaign about Santiago attested once more the valor of our American volunteers and regulars. The war loan and the swift response to the call for volunteers have revealed the deep patriotism of the American people, and astonished the world.

What are some of the results of these stupendous events? Cuba is free from her long-time oppressors, and has the opportunity of establishing a republic of her own, after the pattern of her deliverer. Ten millions of people in the Philippines are freed from Spanish tyranny, and the people are guaranteed civil and religious liberty, and will be permitted, under the fostering care of a liberty-loving people, to work out for themselves such a destiny as they may choose. Our own nation is united as it has not been before in its history, and has a prestige throughout the world that it never had before. It has been born anew, as it were, to the consciousness of its high mission as a great civilizing agency in the world, and can never again go back to the narrower ideas that prevailed before the war. Bonds of sympathy and friendship have been woven between Great Britain and the United States which will unite in closer unity these two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon family in spreading freedom and Christian civilization throughout the world. These results are so magnificent in their importance and far-reaching influence that it is yet too early to estimate them. It will take some future historian to rightly value their influence upon the future history of the world.

One thing stands out in clear light as we glance back over the history of the year, and that is that God is still the Ruler of nations. His hand has been mightily manifested in all the events of the year. Who can doubt but that out of these events have come wider scope for the gospel and a freer course for the kingdom of God? It would be cowardly and unworthy of a great people with a great destiny to shrink from the responsibilities which God has laid upon us in the wonderful events of this wonderful year. Rather let us, cleansing ourselves from all our national sins and girding ourselves for the mighty tasks that are before us, go forward unfalteringly to accomplish our national destiny, and to aid in bringing in the universal reign of rigteousness and peace over all the earth.

THE CHRISTIAN PORTRAIT GALLERY.

Early in the year the Christian Publishing Company will begin the publication of a quarterly magazine of 32 pages, 8vo, containing the pictures of the leading men and women who have been connected with the history of our Reformation from the beginning to the present time, together with historical sketches of the same. It is believed to be due to the memory of the heroic men who have devoted their lives to the cause of religious reformation, that their work, their names and their faces should be made familiar to the present and coming generations, and that these should be put in a form for permanent preservation. This is believed to be due, not only to these persons of the past and of the present, but to the cause to which they have and are giving their lives.

Some of the special features of the Portrait Gallery will be special numbers devoted to men who have been associated together, more or less, in their work. There will be, for instance, one or more numbers of the pioneers; perhaps another of their successors. Another number will contain our missionaries; another, perhaps, men associated with our missionary organizations. Another number, one or more, will consist of our college men; another, perhaps, of the publishers, editors, etc. In this way we will put it in the power of the brotherhood to become familiar with the faces and features, the names and characters of the men and women who have contributed most to make our cause what it is.

The price of this quarterly publication is put at $1 per year in order to bring it within the reach of all. The first number of the Christian Portrait Gallery will appear in February. Subscriptions should be forwarded at once in order that we may form an idea as to the number of the first edition. Address Christian Publishing Company, 1522 Lucas Place, St. Louis.

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for 1899 will contain a notable series of historical sketches of the great Restoration Movement of the nineteenth century, by a number of the ablest writers in our ranks. These articles will begin in January, and will probably run through the entire volume. As this is our Jubilee Year in organized missionary work, the primary object is to furnish a somewhat condensed but clear historical outline of these fifty years from 1849 to 1899. But in order to furnish the proper background for this history there will, first of all, be a series of articles covering the ground briefly from the inauguration of the movement in 1809 until the organization of the American Christian Missionary Society in 1849, a period of forty years. Prof. C. L. Loos, of Kentucky University, will be the historian for this period, covering such events as the Declaration and Address, the organization of the first church, the connection with the Baptists, the Mahoning Association, founding of Bethany College, the Christian Baptist and Millennial Harbinger, and other events leading up to the Convention of 1849. The Jubilee period is divided as follows:

Period I.—From the organization of the American Christian Missionary Society to the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861. The historian for this period is B. B. Tyler, a student of our earlier history.

Period II.—Covers the years of the Civil War, and ends with the death of Alexander Campbell in 1866. Historian, Dr. W. T. Moore, Dean of the Bible College, Columbia, Mo., whose memory covers these stirring years.

Period III.—Is bounded by the death of Mr. Campbell on the one side and the organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in 1875. Historian, T. W. Grafton, pastor of the church at Rock Island, Ill., author of the Life of Alexander Campbell.

Period IV.—Covers the ground from 1875 to 1899, and will be treated by two historians, A. McLean writing the history of the Foreign Society, and B. L. Smith the history of the American Christian Missionary Society from that date until the present. Their special fitness for this work will be apparent.

The purpose of each of these writers will be to give a sort of bird's-eye view of the period which he treats, including the leading men, most important events and measures, and whatever else may furnish the reader a clear view of the Reformation in the different stages of its progress. By this means the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST hopes to make this Jubilee Year the occasion of acquainting the rank and file of the brotherhood with the leading events, the leading men and the leading principles of the Current Reformation.

We feel justified, in view of the extra outlay involved in this and other striking features of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for 1899, together with the reduction of the price of the paper to $1.50 per year, in asking the co-operation of all our readers in greatly extending the circulation of the paper. They can do this by calling the attention of their friends to this remarkable historical series and urging them to subscribe at once.

Our Budget.

—Exit 1898, annis mirabilis.

—Enter 1899, which may be another wonderful year.

—How rapidly the century hastens to its close —this glorious, much-vaunted 19th century!

—Two years more and the doors of the 20th century will be flung wide open, and the world will march on through it toward the nearing dawn of the Millennium.

—Not only do the years fly swiftly, but history is being made with greater rapidity than in any previous age of the world. It will take a large volume to contain the events of the year 1898 and their logical consequences.

—Jubilee number.

—For the C. W. B. M. this year $90,000.

—For the A. C. M. S. this year $100,000.

—For the F. C. M. S. this year $150,000.

—For our combined missionary societies this year $340,000. This is a modest sum for a people a million strong to raise.

—An awakened people a million strong could easily raise one-half million dollars this year for missionary purposes.

—Being at the threshold of a new century ought to be an additional reason for a much larger offering for missions this year than ever before by our people.

—The year 1899 ought to witness vast progress in our own religious movement, being as it is, the Jubilee Year of our co-operative missionary work. All the signs point to such progress, culminating in a great Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati in October.

—We scarcely need call attention to the pages especially devoted in this number to a historical review of the American Christian Missionary Society and the notes of preparation for the Jubilee Convention. Our readers could scarcely miss this feature of the paper, in this closing number of the year.

—A glance at the faces of the men of the past and of the preseut, whose pictures are presented in this number, cannot but impress our minds with the fact that men live in history in proportion as they give themselves unselfishly to the highest and holiest of causes. These men of the past are not dead. They live in the affectionate remembrance of those who love the cause they served so well.

—The program, so far as it is completed, of the Congress of the Christian Churches, or Disciples of Christ, will be found elsewhere, and we think will in itself beget interest in the minds of all who are interested in our future growth and development. We hope those who are interested in such discussions as are contemplated in this Congress will give publicity to this announcement and assist us in making it an occasion of great interest and profit. St. Louis never fails to extend a cordial welcome to its guests.

—One of the handsomest Christmas numbers of any of our religious exchanges is the Christmas number of the Christian Oracle, and its contents are quite in keeping with its beautiful exterior appearance. The Oracle is showing great enterprise and vigor under its new management and bids fair to forge to the front in our religious journalism. The older religious papers must look to their laurels.

—See list of the Uniform Series of Midweek Prayer Meeting Topics for 1899, which we print elsewhere. These will be furnished on topic cards, at a nominal charge, on application. See advertisement of same in this number. The coming year should be marked by its great prayer meetings. The uniform topics will help the churches in making good prayer meetings. They will be commented on in the various papers of the brotherhood, and in that way interest will be stimulated in the weekly prayer meeting. An examination of these topics will show that the committee has given a good deal of thought to their selection. As it is another step in the direction of closer unity, we hope all our churches will adopt the uniform series.

—The extension of the Master's kingdom in the world at home or abroad means the salvation of souls, and the salvation of men by conversion to Christ at home or abroad means the extension of the Master's kingdom in the world. So whether we aregiving for missions or converting men to Christ we are working for the Master.

—Next October will probably witness the largest representative convention of the Disciples of Christ in their history. This year is the half-century milepost of our missionary endeavors and the event will stimulate unusual activities in every way. Greater ingatherings into the churches, greater offerings for Home and Foreign Missions, greater diligence in preaching the Word and greater growth in spiritual things are some of the blessings anticipated for the year, and if realized will produce such an outpouring of delegates and of praise at our next convention as we have not yet seen. The churches of Cincinnati are already preparing for the feast and the leaven of a great convention is at work already. Let there be such an awakening of the spirit of primitive Christianity that its circular waves will not cease until they shall have encompassed the earth.

—For a church to increase in numerical strength is good, but at best is not the best of church growth; to grow in grace and in knowledge of the truth is better. We should then strive this Jubilee Year to bring about a spiritual awakening in all the churches. The year should abound in refreshing showers of spirituality from the presence of God. Should there be a large ingathering of souls in the churches without a corresponding growth in spirituality the results of our Jubilee efforts will be of short duration. Let the devotional spirit, then, be more diligently cultivated in every Endeavor and Junior Society, every Bible-school, every prayer meeting and every public service of the church throughout the year.

—I have read nothing better for quite a time than the article in a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on "Archbishop Purcell on Alexander Campbell and His Work." Why not tract it? It seems that it would be especially useful to hand to those who "have never heard of the Disciples." You know we still meet a few of this kind. You may put me down for 100 copies, at whatever may be the cost of the article in tract form. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a welcome visitor to me and is read with pleasure and always with profit. Hoping that you can give us this tract,

I remain fraternally yours,

ROBT. G. FRANK.

Nicholasville, Ky.

—It is an inspiration to any true church of Christ to see men accepting Christ and falling into ranks in the Lord's army. In this sense every church is a recruiting station and during this Jubilee Year should witness the enlistment of many soldiers under the banner of the cross. In this work every activity of the church can and should engage from the pulpit to the pew; from the Bible-school to the Junior Endeavorers. The sweet invitation of Christ should be kindly and earnestly urged upon the weary and the heavy laden. Let men everywhere know that "to-day is the day of salvation" and urge upon them to accept God's forgiving mercies at once. There is danger in delays; there is death in negligence. This Jubilee Year should witness the addition of at least 100,000 souls to the Lord's army under the ministry of the Disciples of Christ.

—The Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., exists for the promotion of those Christian reforms on which the churches sociologically unite while theologically differing. It proffers co-operation to all associations that stand for the defense of the Sabbath and purity; for the suppression of intemperance, gambling and political corruption; for the substitution of arbitration and conciliation for both industrial and international wars. The Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, is the superintendent and treasurer, and F. D. Power, pastor Vermont Avenue Christian Church, secretary. The work of this bureau is sustained by membership fees and by voluntary contributions. The bureau now has a number of reform measures before the present Congress and is urging the people everywhere to urge their congressman by letters and by petitions to support these measures. Some of these are the Hoar bil prohibiting the pictorial reproduction of prize fights, the Ellis bill to prohibit the sale of liquor in canteens and in government buildings, the Gillett bill forbidding inter state gambling by telegraph or telephone and others, eleven in all. Whatever influence you can bring to bear on your congressman and on congress to insure the passage of these bills will be a step toward a purer and higher national life and a protection for home and childhood. Wilbur F. Crafts well says at the close of an address in behalf of these bills: "Whole trainloads went hundreds of miles to see Candidate Mckinley in the interest of 'sound money.' Shall we not be willing, a few of us, to go to the next street or the next town to see our congressman or senator in behalf of 'sound morals?' "

—The Y. M. C. A. Educational Council of this city is planning to secure an excellent Christian reference library of ten thousand volumes or more. The council desires that the learned men of the city as well as the young men who are starting in life shall be able to find in this already well-equipped moral, religious and literary home just the books they need. This sort of a library will greatly enhance the power of this association for good in this city, and it is to be hoped that every public-spirited man in St. Louis will take a pride in this movement and also assist to create the library designed by the council.

—There seems to be more or less uneasiness in W. C. T. U. circles about the outcome of the Temple controversy, and its bearing on the Union, notwithstanding their action at their late national convention at St. Paul. A circular has recently been issued stating at some length the financial condition of the Temple as a reason for the action of the convention. Without going into details of the figures given, it appears that if the Union had succeeded in raising the $300,000, to meet certain bonds of like amount, as Mrs. Carse was trying to do, they would still be a long way from owning the Temple, or even from having secured the control of it, as there was a first mortgage on it of $600,000 building bonds, besides a later floating debt. After reviewing assests and liabilities of the Temple, the circular says: "The fact that since the sum of only $49,400 is available for the Temple (all other sums named at any time being prospective or speculative), it would at this writing still require $1,215,600 to pay in full for the Temple. These, and many other considerations, including the fact that up to the last year only 7 1-2 per cent. of the meney given to buy the Temple had gone for that purpose, while 92 1-2 had been eaten up by the expenses, made it plain to all who investigated, that the National W. C. T. U. must free itself from the responsibility of encouraging the enterprise, and that there was nothing left but to discontinue the Temple as an affiliated interest of the National W. C. T. U."

—We have just been informed that the Board of Church Extension has recently received $833 on the Annuity plan and an unexpected gift of $500 on a named loan fund. The receipts of this board since October 1, 1898, are over $9,000, being one-third as much as was received for Church Extension last year. This is a fine opening for the Jubilee Year, and we trust this is an index of the enlargement of our work along all lines that shall take place during the year.

—The Anti-saloon League, of Des Moines, is not a mere sentimental society. As its name implies it is in actual war with saloons and other lawbreakers of that city. Foremost in the crusade recently inaugurated against lawbreaking in that city by saloonkeepers, druggists and gamblers, is the Rev. H. H. Abrams and I. N. McCash, both of whom opened fire on these men from their pulpits. A recent sermon by I. N. McCash, pastor of University Place Christian Church, prevented an ex-saloonkeeper from becoming the city's assessor. Detectives have been employed by the League and seventeen drugstores and wine saloons were found to be selling liquors in violation of the law. Considerable gambling, especially of the slot-machine type, was also found. Great interest has been awakened and will result in a higher respect for existing laws. We are glad to hear of these crusades against lawbreakers and hope that the decent element of other cities may catch the contagion and do some more cleaning along similar lines.

—A dispatch from New York, of the 17th inst., to the Globe-Democrat, says:

The American Missionary Association has appointed one of its secretaries, the Rev. A. F. Beard, D. D., and Hon. Lucien M. Warner, of Bridgeport, Conn., as a special delegation to visit Porto Rico and investigate concerning the initiation of religious work there on behalf of the association, which represents the Congregational Churches of the United States. The association is believed to be the first religious organization in the United States to take the initiatory steps for work in Porto Rico, resulting from the island coming into possession of the United States. The association has also made a special appropriation for Chinese work in Portland, Ore.

We would not rob our Congregational brethren of any credit due them for religious enterprise, but the truth of history compells us to state that the American Christian Missionary Society, representing the Christian Churches or Disciples of Christ, sent a representation from the Chattanooga Convention in October last, to Porto Rico to spy out the land, and the same issue of the Globe-Democrat that contained the above dispatch contained a report sent to the President by our missionary, J. A. Erwin, who also reported in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST several weeks ago. As to the Chinse work in Portland, we are ahead of them several years. Let us provoke one another to love and to good wsrks.

—The contributed articles in this paper on our work for the Jubilee Year properly lay great stress on raising $100,000 for Home Missions, $150,000 for the foreign field and adding 100,000 souls to the church. This is a very modest sum for so large a body of people, with such wealth as they have, to raise this year. And 100,000 conversions ought not to be a difficult task. But light as these burdens are they will not be carried to their destination without hearty co-operation, liberal giving, earnest praying, sound preaching, much exhortation and, above all, great diligence on the part of every awakened Disciple of Christ. In short, it means work, and work that is greatly needed. Let every interested Disciple of Christ—for there are many who are not interested in these matters—take a personal interest in these things and do personal work in order to make sure of their accomplishment this Jubilee Year.

—One of the apparent and practical ways of increasing the blessing of our Jubilee Year and the Jubilee Convention is to increase the circulation of our church papers. In this way the spiritual life of every church and each of its activities may be greatly stimulated. Church papers have come to be about as effective an agency in the development of spirituality in the individual, the home and the church as either watching, praying or preaching. They help the Christian to watch, they help him to pray and they often reach the heart with sermons when no other food is accessible, to say nothing of the advantage of having the best thought of the age on the living topics of the day. There should then be an effort made by every Disciple of Christ to extend the circulation of our church papers this year. This is one of the things that should not be omitted.

—Strange, isn't it, that some people and even some preachers will say, "You can't tell what the Campbellites believe because they have no creed," and yet these same folks will declare on tiptoe by all that's good and bad that they "believe in baptismal regeneration!"

—While we are all anxious to see men and women bowing to the authority of Jesus of Nazareth and being added to the church, let us not forget Paul's injunction to the church at Corinth, "Let every man take heed how he buildeth." Preachers especially should scrupulously observe this rule. It will not strengthen the church, neither the cause of righteousnses, to persuade men into the church on compromise terms. There should be a full surrender to Christ. Men must not be induced nor inducted into the church other than by the door—Christ. They must be converted to Christ, not to a doctrine; neither to men. To do this the Word of God must be preached, and only such other influences brought to bear upon men and women as are consistent with its teaching. To take heed how one builds is to have due regard for the tools that God has put in our hands therefor and the care and thoroughness with which we do the work.

—It is proper, in this Jubilee number of the paper, that the first page should be occupied with the picture of the man who is to preside over the Jublee Convention. W. F. Richardson, pastor of the First Christian Church, of Kansas City, though comparatively a young man, is widely known throughout the brotherhood, having served some of our leading churches as pastor, and being a regular contributor to our current religious literature. He was not present in the Chattanooga Convention, being confined at home by a lame knee, but he was chosen unanimously as president of the next convention without any knowledge on his part that he was being considered for that position. Bro. Richardson was born in the year 1852, and graduated in Eureka College in the year 1876. In a letter to a friend recently, referring to the Jubilee Convention, he wrote as follows, without any thought that the editor of this paper would ever see it or that it would ever be printed:

Before receiving your letter, I was thinking of the Jubilee Convention and my own part in it, and the conviction was strongly forced upon my mind and heart that the convention was in some danger of being diverted to a mere cyclone of enthusiasm which would leave little of real result, other than hurtful, in its wake. It seemed to be borne in upon me that it must be made an occasion of deep, spiritual exaltation for our people, and must have, as one of its direct results, that of bringing our churches and ministry into closer contact with the Lord himself, and into a more entire subjection to his will. The very next day came the letters of yourself and Bro. D. And, as if to emphasize the coincidence, the next number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST contained a strong editorial by Bro. J. H. Garrison, which read as if he had just talked the matter over with you, so familiar was the sentiment expressed. These and other facts seem to me to indicate that our people are already beginning to look toward the Jubilee Convention as an occasion for a spiritual advance of all our churches. The Lord grant it may be so!

This extract is a better indication of the type of man he is than any description which we could give. We are glad to give our readers an excellent likeness of this popular preacher and pastor.

—Ashley S. Johnson, LL.D., founder and president of School of Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., has compiled and arranged a self-interpreting New Testament. The unique feature of this commentary is that the explanatory comments are simply other Scriptures bearing on the same subject. The idea is a good one and we see no reason why such a book would not be of great service to preachers. The Scriptures explain themselves, is a common remark with the Disciples of Christ, and this book is constructed on this theory. A copy of this Self-interpreting New Testament may be had or further information about it may be obtained by addressing the author a letter at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. The book will be sold as are all of his publications to advance the interests of the School of Evangelists, to which he is devoting his life. This new book is the result, as he states, of twenty-one years of patient study and will doubtless be duly appreciated by Bible readers and students.

—Since the minutes of the American Home Missionary convention at Chattanooga can be had in full in the November number of the American Home Missionary it would be much more satisfactory for the reader to send to Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, Ohio, for a copy than to read a review of the same in any paper. There are so many things of interest and so much said on each thing that a review would fail to impress the mind of the vastness of the work done in our land by this society last year. And now that it is the Jubilee Year of this society this magazine will furnish you excellent material for kindling a fire in your heart and church that will not fail to bring renewed life and blessings. We should be glad to know that there was a copy of these minutes in the home of every Disciple of Christ in the land.

—The Church Progress, this city, last week, in speaking of the proposed Protestant missions in Cuba and the Philippines, said: "In spite of warning from some of their own ministers they persist in wasting money in fields where they simply sow tares and reap thistles." This reminds us that the Roman Catholic journals just as persistently waste their words in trying to resist these missions. The only difference is that wind is cheaper than money. In another paragraph the same paper says: "There are ten million Catholics in this country, and we will see to it that Protestant missionary enterprise doesn't repeat its nefarious practices in the Philippines." What manner of threat is this, we should like to know? But all the same, neither bluffs nor threats will keep Protestant missionaries out of Cuba and the Philippines. Then, if after hearing these missionaries, the natives prefer to retain their present religion, they can do so. Coercion will not be used to change them, but Roman Catholicism will be put upon its merits as a moral and religious force.

—On the first day after the signing of the treaty of peace, the representatives of eleven great reform societies met in national convention in Washington, D. C., to discuss new problems and responsibilities that have been thrust upon this nation by its war with Spain and to strengthen the backbone of the present Congress. The eloquent addresses of the able men and women who came before the convention kept it at a high pitch of enthusiasm from first to last and the sentiment expressed was strongly against the return of any of Spain's surrendered islands to oppression. The convention favored the immediate introduction of every moral force of our nation into those islands. The spoils system in governments was strongly condemned and the need for increased Christian influence upon congressmen and Congress was as strongly urged. The drink problem received a large share of the time and attention of the convention. That the strong speeches made in this convention on the burning questions of the day will greatly strengthen the public conscience in favor of a higher standard of morals in our national life cannot be doubted and we are glad to note that another convention of a similar character is to be held next year to complete the federation against the saloon and to discuss the issues that may then be before Congress.

—We are compelled to omit a great many news items and condense others this week, by the demands of the Jubilee matter.

—Great interest is reported in the meeting at Austin, Minn., by Miller & Givens, evangelists. Crowds are too great for the seating capacity. Meeting will continue till Jan. 1, when the new building will be dedicated.

—The church at Carrollton, Mo., has just celebrated its 53rd anniversary. Bro. J. T. Ogle, pastor, writes: "It was a delightful occasion. Letters were read from several former pastors." It is a good thing for churches as well as individuals to observe these birthday anniversaries.

—EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I have just finished reading your Christmas number, and I unhesitatingly pronounce it the best of the year. It is certainly like sitting down to a feast of good things. May the Lord long continue and bless the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

FRANK E. JONES.

Galva, Kan., Dec., 24.

—If any class of people are debtors to our church papers it is our preachers and our missionary secretaries. In how many ways this is true may be known without mention here. We presume that not a preacher nor a missionary secretary could be found among us that would not at once acknowledge the truth of this statement. Now this debt they can easily pay by preaching at least one sermon, each, this Jubilee Year, on the merits of church papers and their usefulness in the individual, home, church and mission life. Church papers preach the gospel, stimulate the mind for spiritual things, and encourage every good work, and they are the chief sources of information concerning the state and progress of the work in other places. They are not rivals of the preacher and the secretary, but their best aids. Should not they, therefore, be at pains to increase the demand for church papers in their respective congregations this Jubilee Year? There is ample room in the merits of a good church paper for a splendid and useful sermon, and the time should be found to preach it.

—One of the characteristics of the Disciples of Christ this Jubilee Year should be prayerfulness. We could not better observe this glad year than to make it a year of prayer. Not only should there be more prayer meetings and prayer circles held, but more closet devotions; more constancy of the spirit of prayer in our hearts from day to day. Not only should there be more praying, but our prayers should have more purpose in them. The things that the church and the world most need should be well defined in our minds, most earnestly desired in our hearts and most importunately asked of God. And, withal, our own wants, coldness and indifference to spiritual things should have a large place in our prayers. Let this, then, not be a day or a week, but a year of prayer. We need it, the church needs it, the ministers of the church need it, our missionaries need it and the world needs it.

—The Wesleyan Methodist Church, of England, proposes to raise $5,000,000 for a 20th century special fund. The Methodists of this country have proposed a $20,000,000 fund. This is liberal giving and means much for Methodism in the next century. Why could not a people a million strong raise an extra million dollars for educational, church and missionary purposes for the elevation of our plea nearer to its proper place in the 20th century?

—We hear most favorable reports of our Children's Department, conducted by J. Breckenridge Ellis, of Plattsburg, Mo., and of the "Advance Society," of which he is the founder. No child can belong to this society without profit and enjoyment, and the influences for good that will go out from it are incalculable. We again ask parents, preachers and all adult readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to call the attention of children to this department. The briefs of children's letters and stories are especially interesting, and we have heard of older people who read this department with decided relish. Brother Ellis has a way of putting things that makes them attractive and interesting alike to old and young.

—The Ministerial Association, of Salt Lake City, has put in shape for circulation throughout the United States an address calling upon the people to join with them in their protest against Hon. B. H. Roberts being allowed to take the place in Congress to which he has been elected. The address presents the undeniable evidence of Mr. Roberts' polygamous belief and life, declaring that he at this time has not fewer than three wives. The address further states that Mr. Roberts nor his friends denied the charge of having a plurality of wives during the campaign, and claims that he is not even a citizen capable of exercising the privileges of citizenship. The address holds that this is a bold attempt by Mormon leaders to compel the national recognition of poligamy by the quiet recognition of Mr. Roberts as a member of Congress, which thing would bring reproach upon the commowealth of Utah and the fair name of the United States, hence its call upon the people everywhere to resent the insult, by using their influence to prevent his seating in the next Congress. The document, withal, is a strong presentation of a great moral issue, thus revived, and is worthy of careful consideration by every lover of purity and holiness in the home and in public life. We should be glad, if space permitted, to publish the address in full, but such an issue as it raises, which we have stated, is alone sufficient to arouse all our readers to a sense of the danger attending the seating of such a man in the highest legislative body of our country.

—The following paragraph from an interview with Archbishop Chappelle, papal delegate to the West Indies, reported in a recent number of the Catholic News, would be amusing if not so threatening. Singular that the Archbishop said nothing about the religious reconstruction of those islands. But perhaps it is in this direction that the President of the United States can be of assistance to the Archbishop and thus return the unasked favor. But here is what Archbishop Chappelle is reported to have said:

"My mission," said the Archbishop to a reporter while in Washington, "is one of a priest and an American citizen as well. While striving to watch over the religious interests of the Catholic Church, helping the bishops in the work of reorganization, I shall use my utmost influence to help the Government of the United States to succeed in the work of political and social reconstruction. I am, indeed, profoundly convinced that upon that will depend in large measure the social, political and economic welfare of the inhabitants of these islands.

PERSONAL MENTION.

T. T. Holton, of Lincoln, Ill., can be had for a protracted meeting immediately after Christmas.

J. S. Hughes, Station O, Chicago, offers to Christian people everywhere his new lecture on "Dowilism and Christian Science."

A line from L. H. Stine, Quincy, Ill., informs us that his work in that city is opening up in a most encouraging way, and they hope to have a part in the 100,000 souls for Christ this Jubilee Year.

C. G. Le Masters is to preach for the church at Tillamook, Ore., during 1899, and will be the first pastor the church has yet had.

The high altitude of Ogden, Utah, compelled J. H. Bauserman to seek another field of labor. He is now at Valley Falls, Kan.

Without a dissenting voice I. C. Thompson, of Toronto, has been retained at Ulman, Mo., for the eighth year of his ministry in that place.

C. W. Cooper, of Carthage, Mo., writes that he has been disabled from preaching for six or eight years, but is now able for work again and would like to correspond with some church in need of a preacher.

J. P. Lichtenberger, pastor of the church at Canton, Ill., writes encouragingly of the work in that city. His official card is a simple yet comprehensive statement of the peculiarties of the people for whom he preaches.

G. F. Assiter, late pastor of the church at Chillicothe, has accepted calls from the church at Boonville and that at New Franklin, Mo., dividing his time between the two churches. His address after Jan. 1 will be New Franklin, Mo.

B. F. Daily, for three years pastor of the Christian Church at Greenfield, Ind., recently accepted a call to the church at Somerset, Pa., and will begin work there Feb. 1st, 1899. He has done a good work at Greenfield.

W. A. Gardener, for many years pastor of the West Side Church at San Francisco, a brother widely known and highly esteemed, not only in California, but in Missouri, his former home, has accepted a call of the church in Honolulu, Hawaii, and as he orders his paper changed to that island, we take it that he makes the change at once. Bro. Garnder has but recently recovered from a severe illness, and we trust that this change will inure to his health, as we are sure it will to the prosperity of our cause in Honolulu. Our best wishes go with him to this western precinct of our American territory.

T. A. Meredith, evangelist and singer, Howard Lake, Minn., writes: "I am ready to engage with any church for meetings upon terms that will prove easy for them to meet. Have had several years' experience as pastor, evangelist and singer and have been successful. Correspondents will receive prompt answer.

In its report of the Chattanooga Convention, the Record of Christian Work, East Northfield, Mass., pays the following excellent tribute to a few of our prominent preachers, as follows: "The Rev. F. D. Power, of Washington City, who presided over the Home Convention, was the pastor of President Garfield and preached his funeral sermon. Through twenty-four years of work in Washington, he has built up a splendid church, which has planted and fostered two other congregations in that city. His presidential address on "The Holy Spirit in Missions" was a marvelous speech of power. The Rev. W. J. Wright, of the same city, fanned the zeal of the convention into a flame with his address, "Missions the Heart of Church Life;" and the Rev. Geo. H. Combs, of Kansas City, in a discourse, "The Preacher's Responsibility in World-wide Evangelism," gave the ministers an eloquent and much-needed lesson. The Rev. Geo. Darsie, of Frankfort, Ky., took the convention, in thought, up on the mount of inspiration and showed them the beauty and glory of America and led them to see the importance of taking it for Christ. President E. V. Zollars, of Hiram College, in an address on "Christian Education," made all feel the great need of thorough mental training for efficient Christian service."

Origin, History and Needs of the American Christian Missionary Society

Jubilee Year.

Call to remembrance the former days.—Heb. 10:34.

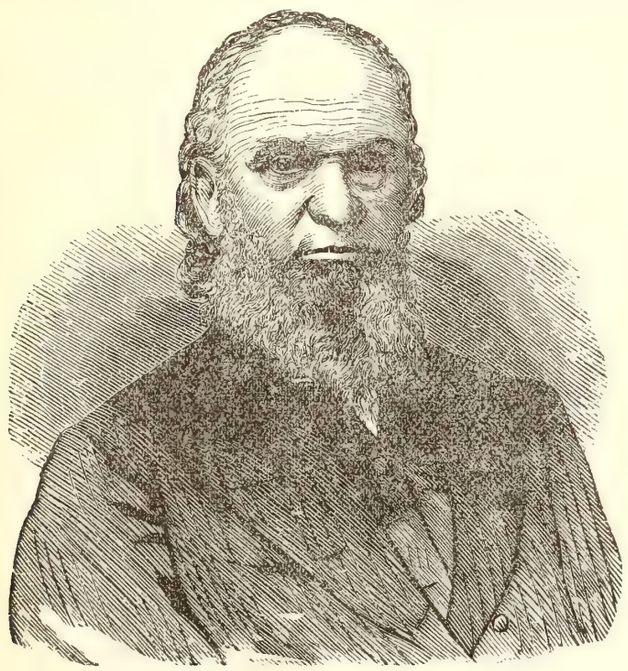
Memorial feasts are pleasing to God and profitable to men. God ordained that Israel should have her Sabbath, her Passover, her Penticost, her Feast of the Tabernacles, her Sabbath year and her Jubilee; and of all these the chiefest was the Jubilee. It was the fiftieth year, all captives were free, all debts were remitted, and every one returned to the possession of his patrimony. It celebrated God's goodness and noted God's care for Israel.

Into such a Jubilee Year the American Christian Missionary Society has entered. Organized in 1849, it completes its fifty years of history in October, 1899.

How shall we fitly celebrate this glad year? By thanksgiving and thanksliving; by calling to remembrance the former years and noting God's care; by lifting the work of the American Christian Missionary Society to the front of all the enterprises of the brotherhood; by winning 100,000 souls to Christ this year; by giving at least $100,000 for Home Missions this year.



May God give us wisdom and knowledge, zeal and courage; may he cause his face to shine upon our work and give the increase!

David S. Burnet, the Father of our Co-operative Work.

I have laid the foundation and another buildeth thereon.—1 Cor. 3:10.

Honor to whom honor is due is a just saying. As we approach the Jubilee of the American Christian Missionary Society, there will be a renewed study into the beginnings of our organized mission work.

D. S. BURNET.

The men of the pioneer period can be arrayed into three groups:

1. Those opposed to all co-operative work, a very small but noisy group.

2. The middle group, those who believed in missionary work, but who did not wish to be too aggressive in pushing it on. This was a large group in the decade between 1840 and 1850.

4. The third group, a respectable number of men who saw clearly that if our plea was to win victories, it was to be by organized effort. These said, (1) we can do nothing in distributing the Bible abroad without co-operation; (2) we can do comparatively little in the great missionary field of the world, either at home or abroad, without co-operation; (3) we cannot concentrate the tens of thousands of our Israel in any great Christian effort without co-operation.

Relying upon these self-evident truths, this band of men pressed it home upon the heart of the church that a meeting must be held and the church of God organized into a great committee to work and plan and pray and pay for the advance of Christ's kingdom in the hearts of men. Foremost among this group is David S. Burnet. When others hesitated, Burnet pressed on; when others halted, he stopped not; while other consulted their fears, he counseled only with conscience and courage, and urged and pleaded with his brethren to organize for aggressive work. When the brethren of Cidcinnati and vicinity organized in 1845 a Bible Society, D. S. Burnet was selected as its president. In the time of hesitancy between 1845 and 1849, it was Burnet's voice that sounded clear and strong for organization and co-operation.

The pages of the Christian Age will show his dovotion and leadership in this work. When the convention was called it was D. S. Burnet's name that was signed to the call. When the convention met and Alexander Campbell remained away on account of illness, D. S. Burnet was the unanimous choice for president of the first general convention, and guided its deliberations to a successful issue. Of course, with Mr. Campbell standing so high among us, no other name than his was thought of for president of the new society, but D. S. Burnet was the first vice-president and afterwards served the society for many years as corresponding secretary, without pay. He was distinguished as an organizer, and our present organized work owes its origin to his efforts more than to those of any other man. Of it he wrote, "I consider the inauguration of our society system, which I vowed to urge upon the brethren if God raised me from my protracted illness in 1845, as one of the most important acts of my career."

It is thought that he wrote the constitution of the society; it is certain that he was the father of co-operative mission work among our people, and as such deserves to be honored.

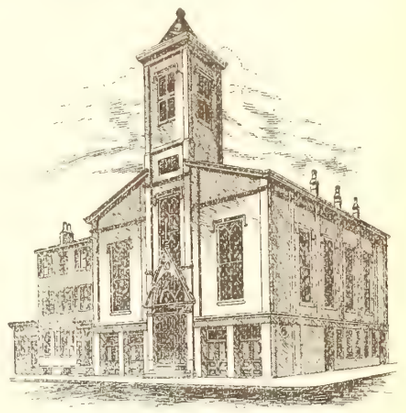
Its History.



The American Christian Missionary Society was organized in Cincinnati, O., Oct. 26th, 1849. D. S. Burnet presided over the convention out of which came this society.

Alexander Campbell was elected the first president and remained such until his death in 1868.

The society is organized to preach the gospel in this and other lands. The first missionary was Dr. James T. Barclay, to Jerusalem. The first work at home was the church at Steubenville, O. In 1853 Alexander Crane, a liberated slave, was sent to Africa as a missionary; soon after reaching the field he died of African fever—our first martyr missionary. In 1858 J. O. Beardslee and family went to Jamaica to found a mission; that work continues to this day. It is now under the care of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

The work in the home field began in 1853. Chicago was helped in 1854, B. F. Hall planting our cause there. The Central Church was the outgrowth of his work. D. S. Burnet was supported as missionary pastor of the First Church in Philadelphia, Pa.

Since 1849 the missionaries of the society have organized 2,192 churches; baptized 87,547 believers; churches have been helped in their infancy and weakness; state and district missionary societies have been formed and guided into useful service; state boards of missions have been supported and invigorated into fruitfulness; a missionary atmosphere has been created; a missionary conscience educated. If a tree is known by its fruits, the American Christian Missionary Society will stand the test.

WALNUT HILLS CHURCH BUILDING.

Its history is a glorious one. It came into being from the feeling that we must unite our efforts to win larger victories. Its career has been with the best of the church in all these years.

In 1857 its income dropped to $405.85—the lowest amount ever reached. Then came the work of Isaac Errett as corresponding secretary, and it was lifted to $16,000, which remained the highest amount until Robert Moffett brought the sum to $24,000, which was the standard for many years. Last year its income went beyond $41,000, and now in the preparation for its Jubilee Year it is asking $100,000 as the least sum that can be asked as a fit celebration of its Jubilee. BENJ. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The First President of the Society.

So he fed them in the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skillfulness of his hands.—Psa 78:72.

The man who stood head and shoulders above his brethren, and was the only suggested name to be president of the newly organized missionary society, was Alexander Campbell, born Sept. 12th, 1788, in the north of Ireland, of Seceder Presbyterian lineage. He moved to America in 1809. He began to preach at an early age and took up his father's plea for the union of all God's people, on the basis of the Word of God as the only rule of faith and practice. His father, Thomas Campbell, was the man of talent who suggested the motto, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." The son, Alexander Campbell, was the man of genius, and took up the cry of Christian union given him by his father, and by his commanding talents compelled a hearing and pressed it with convincing force and power upon the hearts of thousands of persons in various parts of the land.

In the Christian Baptist from 1823-1830 he used the weapon of criticism with telling power, it was the battle of the giants, the hand of all were raised against one, the hand of one against them all. Alexander Campbell conquered a peace, and the right of the Christian union movement to live.

In the Millennial Harbinger his work is more constructive and less general, less critical and more suggestive, and in the Harbinger, in line and precept, he taught the duty of organization and co-operation in the upbuilding of the cause.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

David S. Burnet suggested the organization of the missionary society, but Alexander Campbell was its first president and remained such until his death in 1866.

Mr. Campbell was absent from the first convention, "owing to indisposition." He was made a life director of the society by E. B. Howels, of Cincinnati, paying $100, and was at once elected president of the society. Mr. Campbell was not a liberal giver as compared with others, but as president he gave the work his advocacy. He presided over nearly every convention, in later years, calling to his assistance one of the vice-presidents. He delivered the annual addresses, and by his commanding influence brought many wavering ones to the support of the work. The last convention over which he presided was in October, 1863, at Cincinnati; he was very feeble and called to his assistance R. M. Bishop, vice-president. He was a great theologian, a great teacher, rather than an organizer. By the weight of his character, the greatness of his intellect and the momentum of his goodness, he rose to leadership, and all this endowment of power he gave to the American Christian Missionary Society in the days of its littleness and weakness. BENJ. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

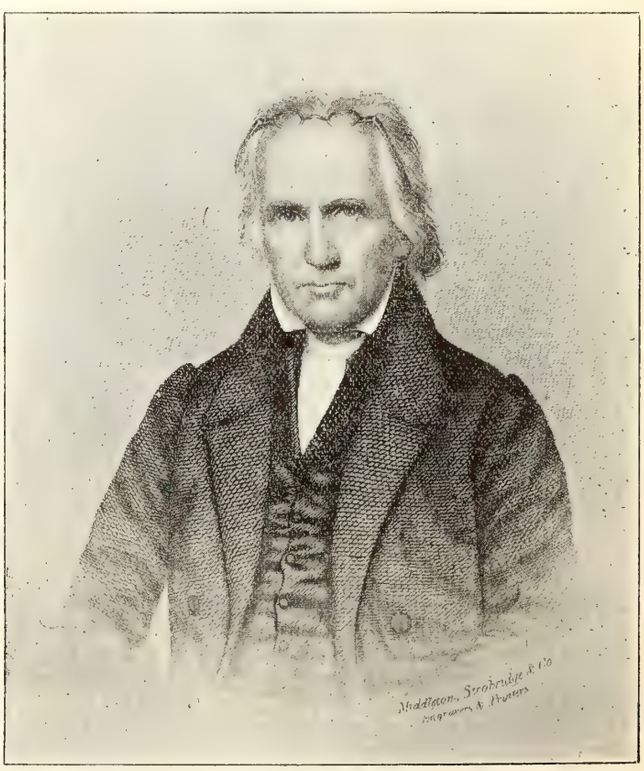
Our Work Among the Colored People.

Soon after the war the attention of our people was called to the Christian duty of educating and Christianizing the negroes of the South. As early as 1871 a committee was appointed on "Preaching the Gospel to the Freedmen," consisting of L. L. Pinkerton, T. M. Harris and J. C. Goodrich. Two of the members of this committee were raised in the midst of slavery. The introduction of the report contains the following: "It would be difficult to exaggerate the spiritual destitution of the colored people of the Southern states. They need education in the popular meaning of the word; they need instruction in the most elementary principles of the doctrine of Christ; they need instruction in the economy of human life; in a word, they need instruction in everything." And one of the resolutions adopted was: "That all colored ministers employed by this society be required to frequently call the attention of their people to the subject of education and to urge upon their people the paramount duty of providing schools for their children." How clearly they saw the true need! The first recommendation of the committee, however, was: "That the churches be requested to take at least one collection annually for the support of evangelical work among the freedmen, and to send the money so collected to the General Christian Missionary Convention." There was a motion to strike this from the report—ayes, 27; noes, 35.

In 1873 Thomas Munnell made extended mention of the donations for and work among the freedmen. His report also contained the report of Wm. Baily, secretary of the local board, in regard to the establishing of a school for the education of colored men for the ministry. The school was established at Louisville, Kentucky—P. H. Morse as teacher. This school was continued till 1876 when, for lack of support, it was discontinued. We have frequently heard this effort called a failure, yet H. J. Brayboy, of Lowndes Co., Alabama, of the class of '75, has been a true leader of this people for nearly a quarter of a century, and I have found others doing good work for the salvation of their race who had received all their education there. They knew not how well they wrought. It was during the administration of Thomas Munnell that special emphasis was given to this work in his reports. Committees were appointed and special schemes set on foot to do educational and evangelistic work among the negroes. As he closed his earthly labors just the year before our Jubilee, it is only fitting that we call attention to his invaluable labors for this race. I have carefully gone through the minutes during his administration and find that he gave heart and life and labor abundant to the advancement of this cause. It was during this period that the Southern Christian Institute was established (an account of which will appear in this issue), and evangelistic work was done in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.

For some years after this little was done by our General Convention. About he year 1888 a school was started at New Castle, Kentucky, and a property was purchased, the money for which came largely from the churches in Kentucky. This school, like the one at Louisville, was not sufficiently supported, and in 1891 the property was sold and the proceeds, $2,500, given to the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization.

In 1889 the convention at Louisville appointed a committee on work among the negroes. J. W. Jenkins was chosen agent to represent this work in the field, and did valuable work both in raising money and in studying into the needs of the work.



At the National Convention held at Des Moines in 1890, according to the recommendation of J. W. Jenkins, the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization was appointed. The members of the board were J. T. Hawkins, president; W. J. Loos, secretary; E. L. Powell, vice-president; H. L. Stone, treasurer; J. W. McGarvey, W. S. Giltner and Joseph I. Irwin—all but one (J. I. Irwin) were of Kentucky. Four members of the board, then chosen, remain as members until the present time. For one year this board searched for a corresponding secretary in the South, and at the convention at Allegheny in 1891 W. J. Loos reported. This was one of the greatest reports ever made in our history, considering that no progress had been made.

It was in the fall of 1891 that C. C. Smith wss chosen corresponding secretary, and commenced his labors Jan. 1st, 1892. Since then a place has been given, in each convention, to the consideration of this work. During the seven years since the calling of a secretary this board has raised and expended $68,737.09, or almost ten thousand dollars a year. It has, during most of the time, maintained three schools: one at Louisville, Kentucky; one at Edwards, Mississippi, and one at Lum, Alabama. It has each year maintained from three to six evangelists in the field. It has by improvements made at the Southern Christian Institute added to its value at least $10,000. It has built a school building at Lum, Alabama. It has laid aside $4,000 for the purchase of a home for the Louisville Bible School. Last January this work was made one with the American Christian Missionary Society for the raising of funds, the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization to receive twenty per cent. of all funds after the expenses of raising are deducted. Credentials for the Jubilee Convention.

The Jubilee Convention of our people will be held at Cincinnati, O., October 13-20, 1899. It is expected that ten thousand delegates will be present. In addition to the regular feature of our conventions there will be special features celebrating the Jubilee; studying our history, learning lessons from our past and drinking inspirations for our future.

On account of size, during some of the sessions the convention will be divided into sections, meeting in different places for the consideration of different subjects.

The business of the American Christian Missionary Society will be transacted at a business session, properly announced at the regular hours. Those who can vote in this business session are designated by the constitution as follows, Art. 3:

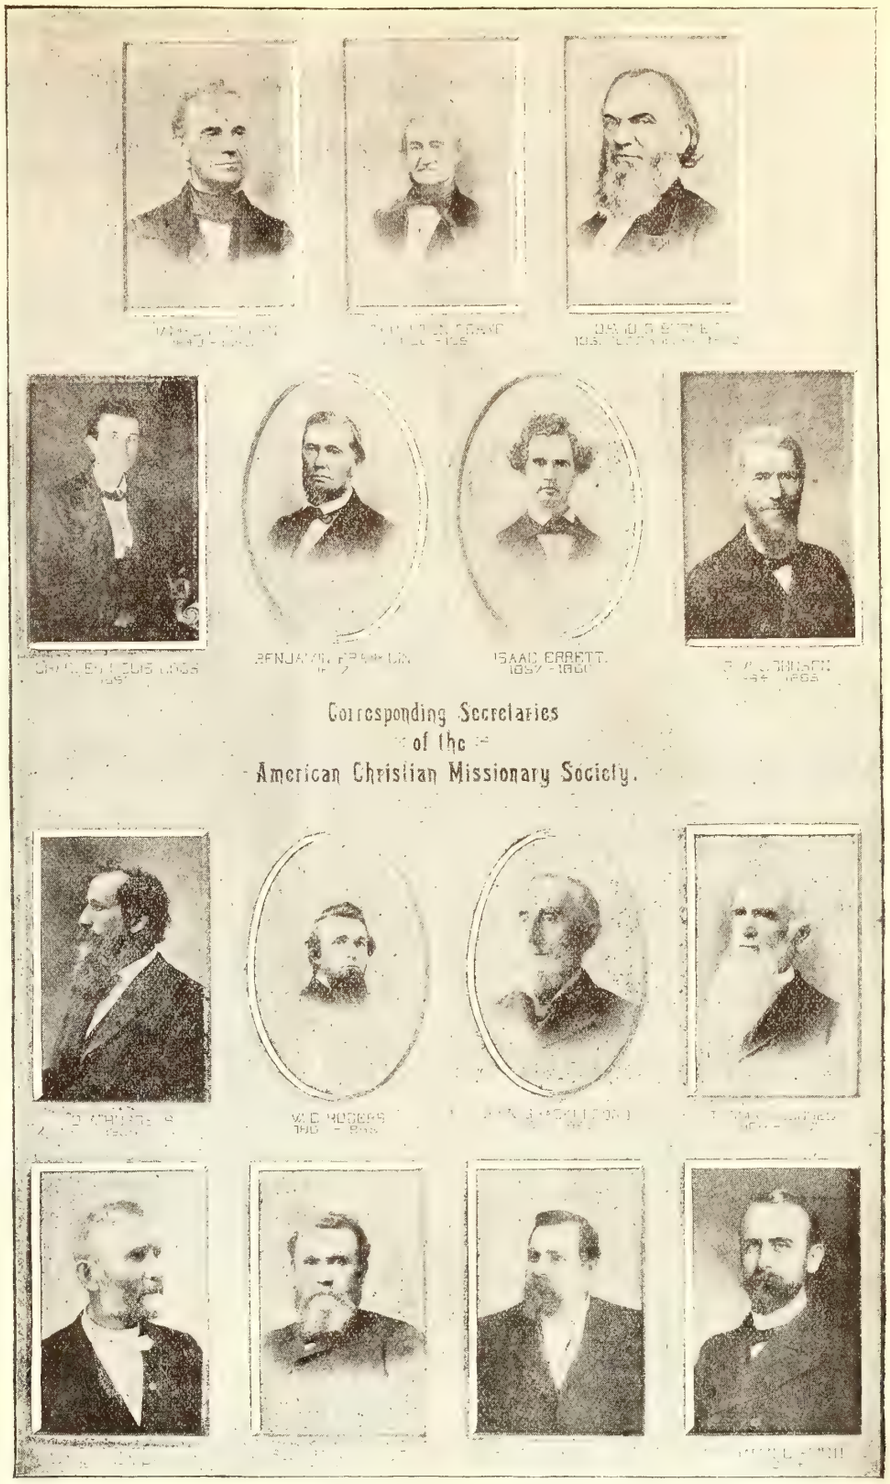
Its members shall consist of Life Directors, Life Members, Annual Members, Delegates from Churches of Christ and Delegates from States as follows, viz.: Any member of the Church of Christ may become a Life Director of the Society and a member of the General Board by the payment of $100, in five annual installments; a Life Member by the payment of $50, in five annual installments; or an annual member by the payment of $5. Any congregation contributing $10 or more shall be entitled to one delegate in the annual meeting of this society for that year; and any State Missionary Board or Society contributing a dividend from its State Treasury for the objects of this society, shall be entitled to two delegates in the annual meeting of the General Society, and to one additional delegate for every five thousand Disciples in the state; any church, Sunday-school, or other local Christian association, shall be permitted one delegate annually for ten years for each Life Membership or Life Directorship taken by the Association as such; or such Association may elect to bestow a memberseip or directorship upon a person to be named by them; provided that no person shall be entitled to a seat in the General Board, or General Society, who is not at the same time a member of the Church of Christ.

By-law.—All members of the Church of Christ who may attend the annual meetings of the American Christian Missionary Society shall be entitled to participate in its deliberations, but not vote.

On account of the great number of people expected at our convention we shall provide a committee on credentials to decide who are the voters of the convention according to to the above constitutional provision.

The following form will do for a certificate:

CERTIFICATE.



This is to certify that..... has been appointed a delegate from the church at..... .....to the General Convention of the Christian Church at Cincinnati, O., Oct. 13-20, 1899.

Signed.....
Clerk of Church.

The names of Life Members and Life Directors are on record; they need only to enroll their names.

Secretaries of state boards will be careful this year to give delegates from states the proper credentials.

Jubilee Poem.

BY SIDNEY DYER, PH.D.

[This poem was written for the Jubilee Celebration of the Baptist Church. The last verses are adapted to our work and workers.—BENJ. L. SMITH.]

PATRIA NOSTRA CHRISTO.

O, wondrous land! thy onward march sublime
Has far outstript the prophet's wildest dreaming!
The miracle of all historic time;
Thy name and fame o'er all the world are beaming!

A land complete in all its map and make,
With paradisal vales and gushing fountains;
Whose cataracts the deep foundations shake,
And heaven itself seems pillared on its mountains.

Jehovah was our guide across the sea;
He gave us half the world, his best creation,
To build a state where all left truly free,
Would yet in union from a model nation.

When first Columbus touched the new-found world,
The terra firma seen in wondrous dreaming,
The cross-emblazoned flag he there unfurled,
And swift its orient beams shot Westward streaming.

Ere long the Pilgrims in his footsteps trod;
To spread their rigid faith they did not falter,
But everywhere, that they might worship God,
They reared a holy shrine, and built their altar.

But worldly thrift outstript their utmost zeal,
And throngs impelling throngs were past them driven,
To whom the Sabbath bell made no appeal,
Nor holy text inspired the hopes of heaven.

Though not, as on Pentecostal Day,
With cloven tongues endowed, a heavenly token,
The mingling tribes of earth that hither stray,
In their own tongue hear God's great wonders spoken.

Burnet loved the fields that met his anxious eyes;
How few, alas, the reapers thither hasting!
Lo, all around he heard imploring cries
To gather sheaves already ripe and wasting.

How Challen planned, and Scott did cheer!
The consecrated Errett still is living,
As from his sainted grave we hear
His voice proclaim the blessedness of giving.

A fitting man was he, commissioned first;
Forth to his work, his faith not burning darkly;
Far to the East his voice prophetic burst—
A captain of the host, our beloved Barclay.

We had our consecrated Bishop, too,
And loved his gentle sway and Christlike spirit;
To bring this land to Christ, how brave, how true—
God grant such bishops we may oft inherit!

With all his armor on, and flushed with zeal;
"This land for Christ," Munnell did call—
And ere the echoes died of his appeal,
He rallied churches one and all.

When some grew faint, and drew the helping hand,
And sad perplexities made our faith decline,
Then Moffett came to lead our band;
His clarion voice sounds all along the line.

Then Hardin comes, and Smith him follows;
"Home Missions to the front" is now the cry;
The holy cross before them all is glowing—
A holy symbol to guide the people's eye.

O, glorious Cross! thy outstretched arms excite
To holy zeal and ceaseless consecration,
Until, like thee, arrayed in spotless white,
Our blest Redeemer claims his ransomed nation!

A Voice from Arizona.

A voice from Arizona crying, Arizona for Christ! Arizona for the religion of Christ, as Christ taught it and as Christ had it taught and as Christ wants it taught. Yes, better still, America for Christ! Why not? America for Christ means the world evangelized. The English language is to be the commercial language of the world. Freight it with the pure gospel and it will be borne around the world. "Home Missions to the front" is the true idea. It will harm none. It means good to all. One hundred thousand dollars for Home Missions. Shall we have it by the "Jubilee Convention?" (1) We are able to give it. (2) The Lord demands it. (3) The field is ripe for the harvest. (4) There is a rich reward for the faithful. Let us have it then. I want to attend that convention and hear it read aloud and see the joy and witness the enthusiasm.

Out of Love for Christ.

One hundred thousand dollars this year? Yes, because it is our Jubilee Year and we should have this sum to express our joy. We have the unmixed gospel and it is more in demand than ever before, while creeds are rapidly losing power. We are the only people who give the full apostolic answer to the question, "What shall I do to be saved," ande very inquirer in the United States has a right to this answer. It having been given to us shall we not give it to others? People are growing tired of divisions now existing between God's people, and as we are the only ones proposing unity upon common and scriptural ground shall we not press this proposition upon all believing hearts? There are the great cities that must be taken for God or they will take the country for the devil. One hundred thousand dollars would help to enter these centres where the gospel will be heard and obeyed. By all means let us have this sum out of our love for Christ and his cause.

A Great Idea.

A great idea once lodged in the brain and dermeating the entire nature makes the ordinary seem insignificant and the extraordinary altogether possible. The Chattanooga Convention gave us a great idea—the worthy celebration of the Jubilee of the A. C. M. S. What we have done immediately sinks into littleness and only something great can melt the demands of this kingly thought. To properly and adequately honor the fifty years' history of noble organization means that we should have such a gathering in Cincinnati as our people have never before known—a gathering whose rejoicing shall be heard round the world. It means, too, that there shall be poured into the treasury of this society a sum that shall barmonize with the greatness of the occasion. Would we not be ashamed of less than one hundred thousand dollars? The very thought of less would chill and kill the enthusiasm of a magnificent anniversary. Our songs would go halting and our speeches would give forth no flash or fire. It is imparative that Home Missions receive unusual emphasis in the coming months—that our people be roused to the mighty possibilities of this work and that every congregation lend a hand—a hand that shall push the work with might and main, a hand that shall cleave unto the task, a hand that shall be turned in receptive attitude until it shall be full and then empied with prayer and praise into the treasury of the A. C. M. S.

The Divinest Pleasure.

The pleasure of giving was the divinest pleasure our Master had. He gave himself. We cannot well refuse our smaller gifts.

By all means let us raise $100,000 for Home Missions this year. Men who never gave before should do so this time if the Jubilee is to be any joy to them.

Those who fail to do so can have no part in the great "Hallelujah" that will echo to the throne when the $100,000 mark is passed.

I suggest a general day of prayer for this great undertaking.

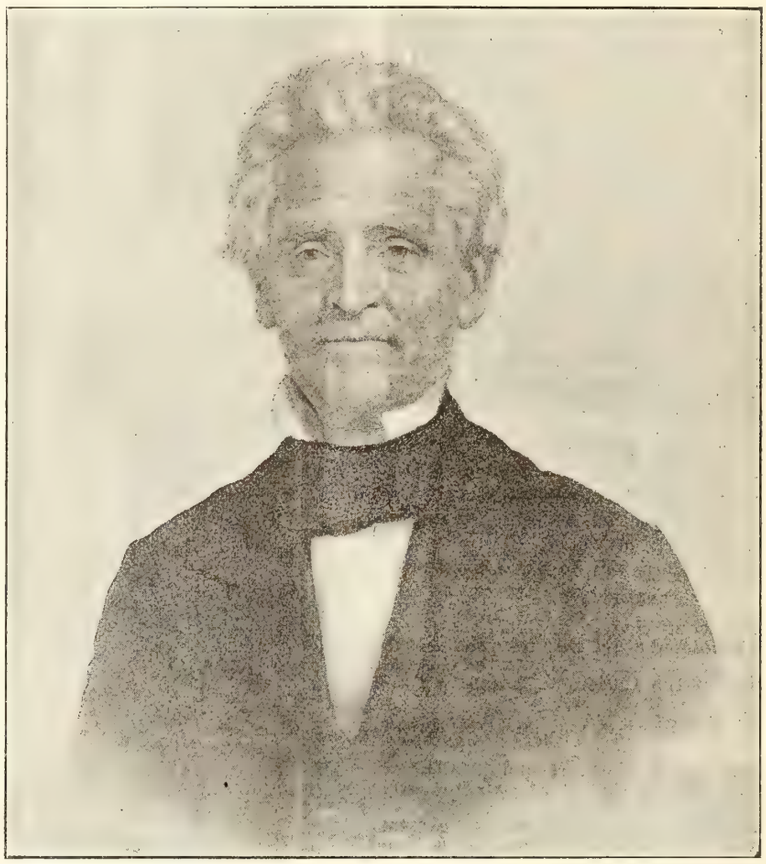
One Hundred Thousand for Home Missions.

Is this too much to ask of one million Disciples? A "Jubilee Year" should let the world know that we have faith in our plea and in our country, and that we are a people whose hearts are in the right place on this missionary question—the growing question of this and the next decades. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The world is coming more and more to appreciate service. Theology, like faith, is dead without works—works that tell how we have learned of God. Our neglect of Home Missions is a great shame, and the more so because the needs of the fields and our opportunities to enter them with every promise of success were never greater. The American missionary may reach people of almost every nationality on American soil. America for Christ means the world for Christ. There are yet whole sections of our great land which have not heard the gospel as preached by the apostles. There are visions of great and populous sections where a few earnest missionaries sent early into the field established churches which became a light and a power for these growing communities. If our brethren could only see what a little money will do now, and that if we delay we may almost be shut out from the opportunity to establish the cause that is dear to all who love the Lord, they would surely come forward with liberal hands for this work. We need, too, to enter our great cities. We cannot do this successfully without large appropriations. We can enter the towns that are to be great cities with a small sum, and this the board has been doing; but we need to plant a score of churches in our New Yorks, Bostons and Chicagos. Let us get ready to sing, "The Year of Jubilee has come."



R. MOFFETT.

Cleveland, O.

An Easy Task.

When will we begin to be logical and work forwards instead of backwards. Our foreign enterprises are leading our Home Missions by six times. In order to have a due money product for the foreign fields we should cultivate the home fields, which are in the very nature of the case the base of supplies for Foreign Missions. "Home Missions to the front" would mean millions for Foreign Missions. Enlarge the base of supply!

Here is a suggestion: We have over 5,000 ministers in the United States. Let every preacher make ready to give $5 in the May offering to Home Missions this Jubilee Year; 5,000x$5=$25,000, or one-fourth of the $100,000 asked.

JOHN SMITH.

Every $300 spent in Home Missions may as well mean three new congregations, 150 new members and money raised to support three new ministers.

In like ratio, $100,000 may as well mean 335 new congregations, 50,250 new members, and 335 new ministers at work in new fields.

We have one city in Oregon, Portland (100,000), in which we could profitably invest the $100,000 to get started in its evangelization. And there are some other cities of our nation almost as large and important as Portland, that ought soon after to have the attention of the brotherhood. How much, indeed, have we to do to bring Home Missions to the front?

One million people are charged from the Lord to save the world. The United States is their base of supplies for missionaries and means.

Every state secretary and every preacher should begin at once to sound the note of $100,000 for Home Missions in this Jubilee Year, declaring with emphasis for the broadening of our base.

Oregon ought to raise $2,222 and stand full 6 ft., 2 in., with form erect, beside her sister states, hearing the holy mission from above and moving with diligence and compassion to save our nation and a lost world.

J. B. LISTER.

Eugene, Oregon.

A Great Work.

This will be truly a Jubilee Year, long to be remembered by us, if we save one hundred thousand souls for Christ and raise one hundred thousand dollars for our home work. We can then more vigorously enter our great cities and have during the next fifty years a larger base of supplies for all our missionary work. Too long we have neglected the opportunities at our very doors. The plea we have reaches the cities at this time as no other can do. Doubtless for such a time as this God has raised us up, and if we fail to do our duty others will arise more worthy than we. Home Missions to the front, with one hundred thousand dollars for the Jubilee Year, is our watchword.

Special Claims Upon the People.

The A. C. M. S. has special claims which should commend it to the earnest co-operation of every church in the land.

1. It is the mother society. And as such its rightful position is at the front. It can point with pride to forty-nine years of meritorious work. It has sought the glory of God and the salvation of souls. It has wrought according to apostolic and scriptural methods. It has disseminated apostolic and Bible truth. Its missionaries have organized churches and Sunday-schools in destitute places all over the West. It is the mother of all our missionary societies. Next to the Bible itself, it has contributed to the unity and strength of the brotherhood, and every lover of pure and primitive Christianity should recognize its great service and rally with might and main to its bugle call of "$100,000 for Jubilee Year.

2. Every dollar given to its work calls out three or four other dollars from local fields, that would not have been available but for the dollar given. A man quadruples his money the moment he gives it. So it is that $300 from the society will support on evangelist in the field. And very often less than that sum will station a pastor with a poor, struggling church to water and cultivate it, and make it the pillar and ground of all our work. But it is a well-authenticated fact that to build up one true gospel missionary church in any needy section North, East, South or West, is to lay the foundations, not only for the conversion of scores and hundreds of our fellowcitizens, but of thousands in the regions beyond. What a mighty impetus to our cause, then, would $100,000 be in the hands of the A. C. M. S. Let us give it, and rejoice to give it.

3. That America is ripe as a mission field, goes without saying. In free and enlightened America people are searching for a free and enlightening gospel. And the A. C. M. S. will assist mightily in giving it to them, with $100,000 at its disposal. Nor will it lose sight of the thirty millions of the people of our country who never attend church. And it will look after the three-fourths of our Western farmers who are without church privileges. Golden opportunities have already been lost by the niggardliness of our giving and the half-heartedness of our support. And it becomes us as a great and growing religious body to in a measure atone for our woeful negligence by handing over to the A. C. M. S. the small sum of $100,000 for its stupendous undertaking of evangelizing the ripest mission field of the globe.

4. Intelligent self-interest should prompt every state to respond liberally to the call for $100,000, for the A. C. M. S. is right now working hand in hand with twenty-nine state boards. That it does not co-operate with more is due to its hands being tied for lack of funds. $100,000, for the A. C. M. S. means more money for the work in the various states of the Union.

5. $100,000 will enable the society to move upon the cities in a manner hitherto unknown. If, as Bishop McCabe has said, a million dollars were at his disposal, he would put every cent of it in Chicago, we need have no fear of oversupplying our society with funds. And if with the limited amount at its command so great and so glorious a work in the cities has been accomplished, what may we not expect from $100,000 at its disposal this year, and an ever-increasing amount in the years to come?

X.

A Real Jubilee.

One hundred thousand dollars should be the minimum and not the maximum of the gifts of Disciples of Christ for the cause of Home Missions. The calls that are coming to our secretaries asking help in spreading the great plea of the Current Reformation, East, West, North and South, should stir our hearts and touch our pocketbooks, until we shall give more rather than less than $100,000 for the "Jubilee Year." With such an income as this we could enter the cities, and to enter these city fields with well-equipped men, with sufficient financial backing, means to take the cities for primitive Christianity. $100,000 for Home Missions and the rally all along the line will bring us up to the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, '99, with 100,000 souls for Jesus Christ, and then it will be a Jubilee indeed as well as in name.

A Birthday Jubilee League.

Next year we are going to celebrate the Golden Jubilee of our good old mother, A. C. M. S., who has done so much for our beloved family of God. Has added over 2,000 churches to our brotherhood, baptized over 87,000 believers into Christ, and last year organized more than one church every week. And besides this she has encouraged, helped forward and mothered every good enterprise of our people from fifty years ago until now.

Let us all begin now to get ready to attend the birthday Jubilee next October. And especially let us go to work now to get up a special gift for the good old mother. And then whether we go or not she will know we thought of her and cared for her, and it will make her glad, and the heart of our whole brotherhood will rejoice.

I am one who is willing to join a "Birthday Jubillee League," agreeing to give one dollar as a special birthday gift to mother A. C. M. S. We ought to have a hundred thousand others to join it. And then would be solved the problem of "One Hundred Thousand Dollars in 1899."

I am yours for raising it,

B. T. WHARTON.

Marshall, Mo., Nov. 30, 1898.

Must Work for it.

"One hundred thousand dollars for the Jubilee of the American Christian Missionary Society!" We can get it if the preachers work for it. We must get it if the home board is to undertake aggressive work in our large cities. The cities are increasing in population very much more rapidly than the country, owing to the continual and ever-increasing movement of population from rural to urban districts and to accessions of large bodies of aliens. We must plant churches where the people are. We must engage the enemy in his own stronghold. We have been skirmishing long enough; let us celebrate the Jubilee Year by entering into the thickest of the fight with the determination to give no quarter.

A Wise Decision.

The Chattanooga Convention decided that this offering should be $100,000, and we must see that it is not a cent less. The A. C. M. S. is now fifty years old, far enough removed from youth to shield her from foolish and hurtful mistakes, and sufficiently far from old age to protect her from decrepitude. She is just in the zenith of her power, rich in health, experience and holy ambition. Her field is America, the fairest land under the sun and the pivot of the world, and her people are Anglo-Saxon, the race designed to rule the world. But this field, as we all know, has been neglected and this Jubilee Year is the time to rectify the wrong. Twenty-nine states receive from her a helping hand, and just as fast as she is able others will be helped. And better still: Give her this $100,000 and she will enter our great cities.

M. M. DAVIS.

Must Reach the Mark.

We must reach the one hundred thousand dollar mark for Home Missions in ninety-nine. Because (1) it will be the fiftieth anniversary of the American Christian Missionary Society. A less amount would not justify a Jubilee Convention of so great a people as we are.

(2) We have confessed our neglect of Home Missions in the past, and must promptly make amends.

(3) It is the best cause among the greatest and best people in the world.

(4) America is a ripe harvest field. A little money invested here yields a larger and quicker return than in any other field.

(5) Owing to her location, the character of her people and institutions and her inexhaustible resources, she is now and is destined to be the base of supply for the evangelization of the world.

One hundred thousand dollars would enable our home board to promptly enter many of the great cities of our country and take them for Christ. The Lord help us to see and grasp this strategic moment of our opportunity! Let every preacher, church and Disciple take up the cry, "Home Missions to the front!" and make the parent society occupy on her fiftieth anniversary that place she so richly deserves. Then we shall have a Jubilee Convention indeed.

The Everlasting Commandment.

As a body, the Disciples have not yet fully awakened to the supreme importance of the everlasting command, "Go ye!" We have not yet come to see clearly the sublime fact, that the primary object of our organic existence is to convert the whole world to Christ. Self-culture is, indeed, desirable, but self-culture, in the gospel sense, without the recognition of the supremacy of the missionary, is to have a body without a spirit. Every Christian is a sent messenger to the unsaved world. When he ceases to follow up the mission which he is in the world to pursue, he ceases at that very point to be Christlike—he is not any longer a "Christian."

A congregation is simply a body of sent messengers, with the same everlasting command behind them—"Go ye!" Losing sight of this is to forget the gospel idea of a church on earth. Your primary obligation is not to simply exist as a congregation, but to save mankind. By so doing, you feed your own life. Ceasing in this, the sap of spiritual vitality ceases to flow in your veins, and death speedily ensues.

Think not of missions as a kind of supplementary to the gospel life. It is not. Missions, or "the gospel of Christ for all," is the gospel of Christ. He died for all. "Go into all the world," and "teach all nations," and "preach my gospel to every creature," are directions that cannot escape the notice of the lively conscience.

Each year this central truth, like a bright star, ascends higher toward the zenith of the Church of Christ in this country. Brothers, help to spread the truth. Help to rouse all the congregations to Christ's own ideal. Let not one phase of this divine work be lost sight of. If you cannot go, send some one who can go.

W. BEDALL.

Saying and Doing.

"What more could I say than to you hath been said" regarding the Home Mission work for the present year? This is not the question I should ask, but what more can I do than I have already done? would be the better interrogation. Brethren, we must come to a realization of the fact that it is not the saying, but the doing, that counts in the Lord's work.

The home board said just what was needed when it raised the cry, $100,000 for Home Missions for the Jubilee Year. Now it is left with the brethren in the field as to whether the work will be fully accomplished. If those of us who have this responsibility resting upon us will sit in our libraries and write "up-to-date" articles for publication we will do well. Those of us who write these articles and then with loving hearts and willing hands, in the love of God and for his glory, put into practice our own suggestions, will raise the "$100,000 for Home Missions this year" and will do our part to "win 100,000 souls for Christ."

The Beginning of Wonders.

One hundred thousand dollars for Home Missions! One hundred thousand conversions! Century of wonders! Times both hopeful and portentous! Holy ambition!

One thousand years' progress compressed into one hundred; a continent settled; the nations made neighbors; language printed on the lightning's wing and dropped on listening ears in every city of the earth; the air vocal with the voices of far-away neighbors, and all the world opened to the gospel and the march of civilization.

Most important issues of the century—the the authority of the Christ and the Word of God and the unity of the church as represented or intended by the Disciples of Christ.

The problem must be decided in America. She is the source of supply. "HOME MISSIONS TO THE FRONT!"

Put one hundred thousand dollars in the Home Mission field to help the weak places this year, and take no backward steps hereafter, and the Disciples will soon be the first in strength and influence in our country and among the most active in the foreign fields. It is wonderful what a little means will accomplish. We must reach this wide domain and penetrate the dense population of the cities. Let us place our material things at the feet of our Captain and King and enter the twentieth century fully equipped with the armor of God. Lord help us to discern the signs of the times and our part in the living issues!

Chattanooga's Contribution to the 100,000 for 1899.

The meeting at the Walnut Street Church closed last Friday night. In many respects this is the greatest meeting this church has ever had. It has stirred the entire city and produced a profound impression. After three weeks in the church we built a tabernacle on Market Street with a seating capacity of 700. This was filled from the start. It was here our success was achieved. There were about 70 additions to the church; 52 by primary obedience. The church has been greatly strengthened and encouraged. We can now see a bright outlook for the cause here. Not many years hence we shall have one of the strongest churches in the city. A word should be said of the preacher and his singer. J. V. Updike is an up-to-date evangelist. A long and successful experience has admirably fitted him for his work. He understands the gospel and can preach it with power. He is in earnest and has a warm, sympathetic heart. He preaches the truth in love, but he preaches it. During the entire meeting there was the heartiest cooperation and sympathy between him and the regular minister. Not a hitch or misunderstanding occurred; each respected the other's wishes and opinions, and shoulder to shoulder we worked together. Prof. H. A. Easton, the singer, was in charge of the music. He understands well his part and performs it with strict fidelity. The singing was the best we have ever had in a similar meeting. I must not omit "honorable mention" of the church itself. Its members prayed and gave and labored earnestly and faithfully. Never did a church more loyally support such a work, and they deserve much credit for the splendid results. Many gave up their business almost entirely to work for the meeting. Such sacrifice is as rare as it was genuine.

Food for Reflection.

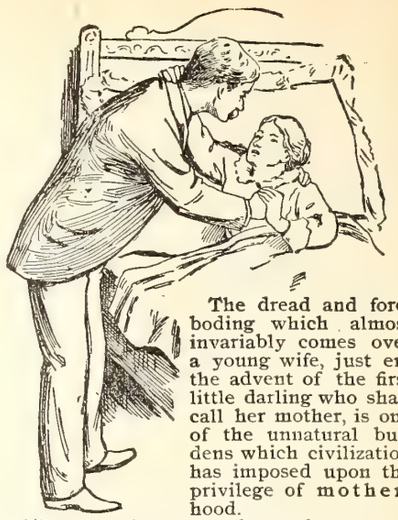
The November number of the American Home Missionary contains the report of the Chattanooga Convention, and is filled with facts which furnish food for reflection. To give even an epitome of its contents would require more space than I can expect to have allotted to me, hence I shall cull a few interesting facts and figures from it, and hope that after tasting the delicious fruit, my readers will not be content until they have secured and devoured and digested the entire lot.

First, we have some encouraging facts. The total income for the year closing Oct. 1, 1898, was $41,345.67, a gain of $3,446.40 over last year. There was an increase of 316 in the number of contributing churches. The average per member for Home Missions was 23 cents. In this respect we hold the fourth place among the leading Protestant bodies. 234 churches were reorganized during the year; this being by far the largest number organized by any Protestant body from which reports could be had. The work of city evangelization has moved forward with an amazing rapidity—and its success in the past is an earnest of what can be done in the future—if only the money is forthcoming, or better yet, if the money comes forth. We must take America through its cities and must take the world through America. Let us give united thanks unto God for what he has helped us to do.

Second, we have some thought-provoking acts. There are only 37 churches that gave as much as $100 for Home Missions during the year. "Despise not the day of small things" does not mean, "Be satisfied with it."

There is an almost innumerable foreign population among which we have done little or no work. "I am debtor both to the Greek and to the barbarian." Let us hasten to make it possible that each of them shall hear the mighty Word of God in his own tongue. On pages 28 and 29 we have some heart-searching "cries of need." Listen: "We must build or die." "Please do not refuse us." "Please help me preach the primitive gospel to my Scandinavian brethren." From every quarter comes the "Macedonian call;" let us not turn a deaf ear to it.

These facts are gathered from the report of the acting board. The department reports, such as that of the superintendent of C. E., etc., are equally interesting. We have already entered upon our Jubilee Year and should lend every energy to make it a year of magnificent achievement.



Send a request for the November number of the Home Missionary to Benj. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O., and then read it when it comes, and pass it on to some one else.

SUCCESS COMES to those who persevere. If you take Hood's Sarsaparilla faithfully and persistently, according to directions, you may depend upon a cure when a cure is possible.

HOOD'S PILLS are easy to take, easy to operate. Cure indigestion, sick headache.

The dread and foreboding which almost invariably comes over a young wife, just ere the advent of the first little darling who shall call her mother, is one of the unnatural burdens which civilization has imposed upon the privilege of motherhood.

There ought not to be such an overwhelming sense of depression and weakness as a woman feels at this time and there would not be if she was in a perfectly strong and healthy condition. In thousands of cases motherhood has been divested of all its dangers and a large proportion of its pain by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which is the most marvelous remedy ever discovered for restoring complete organic health and strength to the delicate special structure involved in motherhood. Taken early during the prospective time it makes the mother strong, energetic and cheerful and carries her through the period of trial with comparative comfort and ease. It increases the baby's natural, constitutional vigor and adds to the joys of motherhood the supreme satisfaction of a strong, robust, lusty infant. "Favorite Prescription" is also the best supportive tonic for nursing mothers. Every expectant mother will appreciate what is said by Mrs. Fannie M. Harry, of Galesburg, Ills., (545 Churchill Ave.) In a letter to Dr. Pierce she writes:

"I have used your medicines in my family for a long time, and find them to be all that is claimed. I cannot recommend them too highly. My confinement was made easy, as I experienced none of the pains such as others have at that period, and the first born the one that mothers fear so much. Besides, the medicine has helped me in many other ways. I would recommend all afflicted women to try Dr. Pierce's valuable medicines, and thus become well and strong."

Eugene Divinity School.

Wednesday, December 14th, was a day of great rejoicing among the many friends of the Eugene Divinity School in Oregon. It was occasioned by paying the last dollar of indebtedness on the building and its fixtures. The school property now represents $7,000, all of which has been raised by the ceaseless efforts of the dean, E. C. Sanderson, A. M., D. D.

The Jubilee Thanksgiving service was well attended and was a highly spiritual affair. Those who took part in the program were Rev. M. L. Rose, pastor of the Eugene Church, J. A. Bushnell, president of the Board of Regents, President Chapman, of the University of Oregon, Rev. Edwin Beaudreau, Rev. J. J. Handsaker and superintendent of missions, Rev. William F. Cowden. The students recited the one-hundredth psalm and furnished special music. The dean closed with words of encouragement. "We are now financially free, but we yet owe much to God. May none of us feel that we are to cease working, but let us realize that we have larger fields and new responsibilities."

The remarks of all were encouraging and full of praise. The president of the University of Oregon closed his remarks by saying, "Glory to God and his servant who has been instrumental in doing all this."

The evening was spent at the home of Dean and sister Sanderson, where a most delightful social time was had and a delicious dinner was served.

Rev. William F. Cowden spent the week with the school and delivered a number of lectures on practical church work. It is needless to say that these were grand. They seemed to be the cream of a life of rich experience in the work of the Lord.

HARRY BENTON.

Correspondence.

Kansas City Letter.

Kansas City has for some time gloried in her reputation as the leading city of the great Mississippi Valley in many particulars. Not only has her growth been remarkably rapid and substantial, but in two respects she has outstripped even the cities of the first class. As a railway center and a stock market, she leads the whole country. Her trunk lines radiate in every direction, while her stock-yards and packing houses employ enough men to make in themselves, with their families, a respectable little city. As a wholesale market for all the staple commodities of commerce, she is taking front rank. Her churches and schools, hospitals and benevolent homes, are cause for just pride. But in one thing she was lacking; and the proud head of the boasting Kansas Cityan was brought low in the presence of a visitor from St. Louis or Cincinnati, by the question, "Where is your great assembly hall, like ours, where thousands can gather for purposes political, religious, musical or otherwise?" She endured this humiliation as long as possible and then set to work to surpass other cities in this, as she has done in other respects; and is now completing her convention hall, which is said to be the finest structure and most complete in the whole West. If this statement is called in question, and we are asked to prove it, we reply that we do not wait for proof, we simply admit it! This building, which has a seating capacity of fifteen thousand, will be opened to the people with a popular concert at the beginning of the new year, and when opened will be absolutely free from debt.

All this is good, and seems worthy of praise. But there is a fly in the ointment. Many of the good people of this city have been sadly disappointed and grieved, during the past few weeks, by the action taked by the directors of this building, for the raising of the paltry sum needed to finish and furnish it. When the report was made that a few thousand dollars were still required to prepare the hall for occupancy, the gifts began coming in with the generosity which has ever marked the people of this city in public enterprises. In a few days half the sum had been promised and the whole would shortly have been in hand. But, when Mr. K. B. Armour gave a splendid cow from his magnificent herd of blooded cattle, to be sold for the fund, somebody suggested that any such gifts received be used as prizes for ticket-holders for the opening concert. The idea took like wildfire, and soon a full-fledged lottery was in operation on our streets. Many gifts of stock, jewelry, merchandise of all kinds and other vendable articles came pouring in, until it is estimated that there will be fifteen thousand prizes. The papers have "boomed" it daily, and a hundred and sixty thousand tickets have already been sold, with demands for more. The city and surrounding country have gone daft on the subject, and men, women and children have been crowding the office of the directors, eagerly snatching for the chances of gain.

It is needless to say that this whole affair has been a most demoralizing one. Not only has it consumed the earnings of many poor men and women, and boys and girls, who could illy spare the quarters they paid for these tickets. This is the least of its evil results. It has given the vice of gambling a public recognition in this city which it has not had for many years; and if we do not reap the fruit of this sowing in an increase of the vice among all classes of our people, it will only be because its evils are so plainly manifest as to forbid that any but those already victims to the awful habit should be led away by this spasm of indulgence. Another result which is to be deplored is the toleration with which it makes many good people look upon an act which is absolutely wrong, judged either by the law of God or of state and the city. Although this sale of chances has all the marks of an ordinary lottery, and differs from it only in the purpose of its institution, there are many excellent people, doubtless, who feel that it is entirely harmless. "It is for the good cause, you know!" But we must not forget what Paul says of the principle of "doing evil that good may come." The most deplorable result of this infatuation on the part of our people, it seems to me, is its effect on the young. It will be difficult for their parents, after purchasing for them chances in this drawing, to persuade them that there is any special harm or danger in repeating the act on other occasions. Many a youth will have the first tiny flame of the passion for unearned gain kindled in his heart this convention hall drawing. May God in his mercy avert from our city and people the most serious of the results of this unfortunate affair and purge the hearts and clarify the vision of us all, till we shall be careful, in civic as in religious life to void the very appearance of evil.

Turning for a moment to a more pleasant theme, I am glad to report that the Sixth and Prospect and Forest Avenue Churches of this city have recently closed revival meetings, which were marked with good interest and gratifying results. Bro. H. A. Northcutt helped Bro. Combs at the former church, and Bro. J. J. Morgan, of Warrensburg, assisted Bro. Kokendoffer at the latter. Their labors were highly appreciated by the brethren. Bro. Carey E. Morgan, of Minneapolis, is to assist me in a meeting with the First Church in January. We are hoping for a season of rich refreshing from the Lord.

Texas Letter.

Booker T. Washington, the Moses of the negroes of the South, made a great speech at Ft. Worth recently before the Farmer's National Congress, every word of which is worthy a place in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but for want of space only a few sentences can be given. He said:

"The negro problem in the South is fast passing from a question of sentiment into one of business, and one of commercial and industrial values. In working out a solution of this problem, it is well to bear in mind that the mere fact of law could not make a dependent man an independent man, could not make an ignorant voter an intelligent voter, could not make one citizen respect another. These results come to the negro as to all races, by beginning at the bottom and working gradually up toward the highest civilization and accomplishments. The negro will find himself valued and appreciated as a citizen in proportion as he learns to do something as well or better than any one else. I have just finished reading a little pamphlet written by a well-educated colored man, Mr. Geo. W. Carver, giving the results of his experiments in raising sweet potatoes this year. He shows in plain, simple language, based on scientific principles, how he has raised 266 bushels on a single acre of common land and made a net profit of $121. The average yield of sweet potatoes to the acre in the section of the South where this experiment was tried is 37 bushels. This same colored man is now preparing to make the same land produce 500 bushels of potatoes. If I were to write a volume, I do not think I could state the case of the negro more strongly than this illustration puts it. No race that makes itself permanently felt in building up the country is long left without proper reward and recognition. The most important problem now confronting the negro and the negro's friend, is the turning of the force of the negro's education in the direction that it will contribute most to the betterment of the country and the negro himself. Recurring again to the instance of the colored man who made his education felt in raising sweet potatoes, I would say if we had a hundred such men in each county in the South there would soon be no race problem to discuss. But how are we to get such men? Those interested in the education of the negro must look facts and conditions in the face. Too great a gap has been left between the negro's real condition and the position for which we have tried to fit him through the medium of text-books. Much that the negro has studied presupposes conditions which do not exist. There has been almost no thought of connecting the educated brain with the educated hand. Education of the head increases wants, and unless the hands are educated at the same time so as to supply these increased wants, in many cases you will find an individual of little benefit to society. It is almost a crime to take young men from the farming district and educate them, as is often done, in every subject except agriculure, the one subject which they should know most about. The result is that the young man, instead of being educated to love agriculture, is educated out of sympathy with it and instead of returning to his old father's farm and showing him how to raise more produce with less labor, he is often tempted to go into the town or city and live by his wits.

"Immediately after the war it would have been wiser if some of the time spent in trying to go to Congress, and in making political speeches, had been spent in trying to become the leading real estate dealers, or carpenters, or in starting dairy farms and truck gardens. When a person eats another person's food, wears another's clothes and lives in another's house, it is pretty hard to tell how to vote, or whether he votes at all. In Alabama we find it a hard thing to make a good Christian out of a hungry negro. It is said we will be hewers of wood and drawers of water, but we will be more; we will turn the wood into implements of agriculture and the water into steam, and thus make a bond of friendship between the two races in a way to make us realize anew that God hath made of one blood all people to dwell on the face of the earth."

B. B. Sanders, state evangelist, holds his first meeting under the board at New Hope, with good results and a church of 28 members organized.

W. C. Dimmitt, one of our oldest and most honorable preachers, has the sympathy of us all in the death of his daughter, Miss Sallie, which occurred at Benjamin, Nov. 24.

John Logan, late state evangelist of New York, has been employed by our board to begin work Jan. 1. Bro. Logan is one of the best preachers in the South. E. M. Douthit has also been employed as singer. Now with Sanders, Logan and Douthit in the field we cofidently look for a great work.

S. K. Hallam resigns at McKinney and it is said he will probably go to New Mexico as an evangelist under the home board. We regret much to lose men like Hallam, Boen and Calvin, but are comforted in the thought that others will be blessed by their labors.

G. Lyle Smith begins work at Terrell, Jan. 1. Bro. Smith, by common consent, is one of the best men in our ranks and Terrell is an important place, so we are happy.

The President's Atlanta speech has stirred the hearts of the South to its center. Never since Grant's immortal sentence, "Let us have peace," have our people been so aroused. And well they may be, for his words are pathetic, patriotic and fraternal. "Sectional lines no longer mar the map of the United States. Sectional feelings no longer hold back the love we bear each other. Fraternity is the national anthem sung by a chorus of forty-five states and our territories at home and beyond the seas. The union is once more the common altar of our love and loyalty, our devotion and sacrifice. The old flag again waves over us in peace, with new glories which your sons and ours have this year added to its sacred folds. Every soldier's grave made during the Civil War is a tribute to American valor. And while when the graves were made we differed widely about the future of this government, the time has now come in the evolution of sentiment and feeling under the providence of God, when in the spirit of fraternity we should share with you in the care of the graves of the Confederate soldiers.''

Speeches like this, in spite of partisan prejudice, from men like McKinley, will soon bridge the ''bloody chasm'' and make us one again. M. M. DAVIS.

Brigham H. Roberts.

Anent the agitation over the recent election of the above-named gentleman to a seat in the Lower House of our National Congress, a statement of the case as it appears to one on the ground will not be out of place in the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is very difficult for one to talk intelligently on a subject with which he is not familiar, or about conditions from which he is far removed. This accounts in part at least for some very foolish talk that has been indulged in by different parties in the East, who are not under the necessity of weighing their words before uttering them. Let it be understood that successful opposition to the seating of Roberts can not be based on theological grounds. The fact that he believes in an Adam God cuts no figure any more than Mariolatry. It is his constitutional right to believe in such a god if he chooses to do so. To make the fight on such grounds is to prejudice our own cause, for politicians will say that it is a sectarian agitation pure and simple and they will pay no attention to it.

If Roberts is kept out of the seat to which he is elected, it must be on the ground of constitutional ineligibility. It must be shown that he is not a citizen of the United States, or that he is a criminal in the eyes of the land. This is what is attempted to be done in the circular issued by the Ministerial Alliance of Salt Lake City. The United States Government granted amnesty to only such as abandoned polygamous relations permanently. B. H. Roberts, by the charge of the governor of the state, who is a Mormon and the child of a plural wife, and his own admission, is cohabiting with at least three women who bear his name and are known as his wives. He is a good Latter-day Saint, which in its last analysis means a present-day polygamist, not only in theory, but in practice. It is a fact that the Mormon people as firmly and as generally believe in the doctrine of plural marriage as they ever did. There have always been some among them who repudiated it in practice. But it still forms a part of the vital faith of the church, as is evidenced by its retention in the book of ''Doctrines and Covenants'' and the public teaching by the leaders, both from the pulpit and in their literature. It is not dead, nor does it sleep. It is abandoned as saloons are closed on Sunday. The sidedoor is open. It is only in a state of partial suspension. They confidently look forward to the time when the practice will be fully restored. And this is perfectly natural. Believing themselves to be the chosen people of God, they expect him to open up the way for them to obey his commandments, of which plural marriage is one of the most important. They confidently expect to be the dominant power, not only in Utah, but in the whole world in time. Believing this and that it is a heaven-imposed duty to marry more than one wife, it is not strange that individuals dare the slight danger of prosecution since statehood, and continue to live in the old relations. It would be passing strange if it were otherwise. Given the premise of the past history and present faith of Mormonism and it is simply impossible to reach any other conclusion than the present existence of polygamous relations among them. But we are not left to a process of reasoning to establish the fact. It is before our eyes. It stalks abroad at noonday. It is safe to affirm that there is not a sane person, man or woman, in Salt Lake City who is not perfectly satisfied that Roberts is guilty as charged. Yet, in spite of this conviction, that amounts to knowledge, Mr. Roberts was elected by Gentile as well as Mormon votes. The fact that Gentiles voted for him does not prove the innocence of the candidate, but the indifference of the voter. In Utah as elsewhere there are too many voters who ask but one question when asked to vote for any individual, viz., ''Is he the regular nominee of my party?'' If he is, though he be a Herr Most, he gets the vote of him who puts party above purity.

It is not a surprising thing that Mr. Roberts should have been elected to Congress from Utah. He is the most popular speaker and writer in the church, and the literal exponent, so to speak, of its teachings. It will be a surprising thing as well as a disgraceful thing for him to be seated in the Congress of the United States. Not that morally he is not as good as some who have been there, but because he is the subject of an ecclesiasticism that is organically antagonistic to all government save its own, and whose teachings and practices are utterly subversive of the very foundations of civilization, to say nothing of Christianity. If, as is possible, by some technicality of law, he gains his seat, then in the interest of civilization and decency the constitution should be so amended as to make marriage monogamy. This would be in the interest of the happiness of Mormon wives, for if the pathos of polygamy could be told it would melt the mountains to tears. W. H. BAGBY.

Nebraska Missionary Notes.

The state board of the Nebraska Christian Missionary Society met at Lincoln Tuesday, December 13th. Everything is looking reasonably hopeful. The large debt which we have been carrying for so many years is now down to less than $250. Receipts are coming slower than we had hoped, but we expect an increase soon. A goodly amount of evangelistic work is being done. Two new churches have been organized this year by the evangelists of the state board, Schuyler and Beulah. Each of these fields are very hopeful. The state board is planning to do some work in districts eight and nine in the near future. Good meetings are in progress at Wilber and Seward. These places were organized last year, and will be aided a little this year in sustaining their work. A. K. Wright and Miss Austin are in the meeting at Seward, and Lemon and Travis at Wilber. These brethren are soon to commence a meeting at Wymore. We hope for great things from that meeting. J. H. Moore is in a good meeting at Diller, where he is the regular pastor for one-half time.

The Ministerial Convention held at Fairbury last week, though not largely attended, was a most profitable meeting. District No. 6 held its convention at York the latter part of the same week. District No. 8 will hold its convention at Arapahoe the last of this month.

Our secretary, W. A. Baldwin, has been doing some figuring lately. He finds that according to our membership we are giving more liberally to our missionary cause than many of our older states. But we are not satisfied yet; we want to do still greater things for God. We expect to make this Jubilee Year the best year in the history of our work; a larger contribution for missions, more souls for Christ and a greater spiritual growth among our members. We need more pastors in the state; men of faith and good works; men who will be able to lead the churches into higher and better things. This is bound to be a great state in the years to come. Its resources are almost limitless along the lines of agriculture.

The greatest trouble with our work here is that of continual changing of preachers. I came into the state two years and one-half ago, and there are now only two pastors in the state who occupy the same pulpits they were in at that time. We must have an improvement along this line. Preachers and churches also are too restless. Every time a condition arises that is not just congenial the first thought is, I will change places or, We must get another preacher; when they ought in the spirit of the Master try to better the condition. I know just how it is. I am tempted to do the same thing many times. Brethren, let us cease being children along these lines. Let us become brave, earnest, consecrated men and women for God. Let us do our duty in faith and loving kindness, and the Master will take care of the results.

Fraternally, F. A. BRIGHT,
Pres. of Nebraska Christian Missionary Society.

Notes from the Foreign Field.

The receipts for the last month amount to $9,392.03. This is a gratifying gain over the corresponding month a year ago.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Gordon expect to spend the month of February visiting the churches. After February Mr. Gordon expects to return to his work in India.

John G. McGavran and G. L. Wharton are preaching and camping among the villages.

G. W. Coffman writes about the holy men in India. Some are especially holy, having held their arms up above their heads so long that they have withered and become useless. Some of the marks of holiness are absence of clothing, long and matted hair ashes and

The Dipper or the Dropper?

There are cough medicines that are taken as freely as a drink of water from a dipper. They are cheap medicines. Quantity does not make up for quality. It's the quality that cures. There's one medicine that's dropped, not dipped—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. There's more power in drops of this remedy than in dippersful of cheap cough syrups and elixirs. It cures Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Colds, Coughs, and affections of the Throat and Lungs.

paint on face and body. Some claim that they never sit down, others sit on spikes, others wear long nails, sometimes having caused the nails to grow through the hand by clinching the fist. These are the chief signs among the Hindus of holiness.

Nathoo Lall recently had four baptisms at Charwa, India. Two were baptized in Hurda the last month.

H. H. Guy, of Japan, writes that the time is ripe for the preaching of the gospel. The different missionaries understand this and are doing more direct preaching than they have ever done in the past.

Two young men were immersed in Akozu, Japan. Another convert is 89 years of age. The indications for a large increase this year are good.

Teizo Kawai has reached Japan. He will locate in Akita and carry on work there.

R. L. Pruett and F. H. Marshall have been preaching around Shizuoka. They have been preaching a part of the time where the gospel had never been preached. When they told them of the true God and of his wonderful love to poor sinners, two of them worshiped the preachers.

M. B. Madden reports two baptisms at Izuno and three at Fukushima. He reports two new stations opened and thirty copies of the Scriptures sold.

T. J. Arnold writes that on the ship on which he returned to China were twenty-five other missionaries. They represented seven societies and six nations.

A. L. Chapman is greatly pleased with his new field. Were it not for the opposition of the Turkish Goverement this would be one of the most fruitful fields in the world. In the Custom House five of his books were confiscated. The authorities were afraid that these books might incite the people to revolution.

Dr. Garabed Kavorkian writes of the tour he has been making among the churches of Turkey. The Turkish Governor and the American consul gave good heed to his message.

Dr. R. J. Dye has been appointed to go to Africa as a medical missionary. He will sail from New York about the 14th of January. He will take the place left vacant by the death of Dr. Biddle.

The Society is looking for two men for Cuba. If men able to speak Spanish can be found the expense of starting the work will be materially lessened.

A Visit to Columbia.

It was my place to deliver four lectures to the students and friends of Bible College, in Columbia, sometime during the month of April, 1899, but as Bro. Richardson, who was to lecture in December 1898, was unable to fill his engagement, I exchanged times with him. So I spoke there beginning December 13. Bro. Moore was not sufficiently recovered yet to be at his post. I would have gladly taken care of the classes while there, but they had been dismissed till their professor could be with them. The subject of "Sacred Geogrpahy" was hardly appreciated, as the first evening there were less than forty persons present. After that the gain was rapid; the second evening there were 140 present and 300 the third evening. Chapel service at the State University the morning I was there was small, only thirty-five being in the seats, and but one professor. Religion seemed to be used with great economy. They have about five hundred students, all told, in the University. They have ample accommodations for two thousand. And yet, so far as I know of their classroom work, it is good. I met with a number of young men competent to speak on the subject, and they gave a good report of the work done in the university.

I attended chapel service at Christian College, over which Sister Moore presides, and took tea there one evening. That school is crowded. They would have had many more if they could have furnished the room. The work done there is excellent. This can be made a great institution. And in the hands of Sister Moore the cultus will be the very best and the work of education thorough.

As to the Bible College, in my opinion we need a building and at least 100,000 dollars endowment. The lot that has been purchased is in the right place. No better selection could have been made. Let some whole-hearted brother now come forward and place a good building on it. They would, perhaps, give him the name of the hall, and thus perpetuate the record of his good deed. Two able men should be there all the time, who can stand by the work every day, with as much ability as the men who are employed in the State University. I was treated very kindly while there and will remember my visit with great pleasure.

Christian Institute, Shanghai, China.

Dedicated Day, Nov. 6, 1898. Contains (1) chapel, for church services; (2) li rary; (3) preaching hall; (4) office and study; (5) two school rooms; (6) preacher's (Chinese) home; (7) baptistery and dressing rooms; (8) room for women's work. Cost, with lot, $3,700. Located in the center of the American settlement. The occasion was indeed an important one for the work in China. Congratulations pour in from all sides. The idea akin to that of the "institutional church"—has awakened a good deal of interest here already, as this is the first attempt of the kind in the East, as far as I know. Concerning our work here the N.-C. Daily News, this city, Nov. 8th, says:

Yesterday afternoon the dedicatory services of a new building to be used in connection with the uplifting and Christianizing of the Chinese were held, a large number of foreign and native guests being present.

The Institute is situated at the angle of Miller and Hanbury Roads and is somewhat original in plan, resembling in some particulars the "institutional churches" of the United States. At present there is only one building which includes a preaching hall, chapel, library, two class rooms, a baptistery and quarters for a native preacher, also a study and office. Every department is well furnished and the institute is already in working order, most of the rooms being now used for the purposes for which they were intended. At present this building will be the headquarters of native work of the peculiar character which the institute undertskes to do, but it is confidently hoped that this building will be but the forerunner of several such institutes in other parts of the Settlements and around.

The cost of the land, building, etc., has reached roughly $7,300 (mex.) largely subscribed by a few friends especially interested in mission work in Shanghai. The property, however, is in the name of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society of the United States. There is a day school for boys, night classses for teaching English, a girls' days-chool in another building and work among women will be carried on here for the present. Operations are now in progress for the formation of a literary society, which is expected to do incalculably good work.

The number of church members is now 34, but a material increase is looked for.

Shortly, the aim of the institute is to enlighten and help as many natives as passible of all classes and of all ages, with the ultimate object of converting them to Christianity.

The work has begun well and there are not wanting signs of its future success.

At the service held yesterday afternoon commendatory addresses were given by Rev. G. F. Fitch, of the Presbyterian Mission Press, and Rev. G. R. Loehr, of the Southern Methodist Mission, U. S. A., whilst Rev. W. P. Bentley, the principal, gave a most interesting account of the history and objects of the work.

The signs of success are not few. We had three confessions and immersions last week. This event and the advent of a son into our home, makes this a memorable week in our lives.

Iowa Letter.

It is not often that Iowa daily papers keep any religious body of people before their readers for weeks and months. For sometime the Episcopalians have been greatly exercised over the election of a bishop for Iowa. The outcome was the election of a Chicago man, and the defeat of Dr. Green, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Dr. Green had many Iowa papers against him. As to the merits of his case, I will venture no statement. But all know that the daily papers took up the matter, and for weeks kept it up, because of the sensational elements in the contest. The absence of the Spirit of Christ in religious gatherings insures many columns of advertising in our papers.

The Iowa colleges have a state oratorical association, in which they contest annually for state honors. From this annual contest the winner represents the state in an interstate contest. Drake University has twice won in the state contest and sent her man to the interstate gathering, and Oskaloosa College once did the same. The victors in these cases were Joseph Dyer, Miss Ethel (Brown) Garrett, now in China, and Leslie Morgan. Drake University wishes to add another name to this list as soon as possible. On December 8th she selected by home contest her delegate for the state contest in February, 1899, at Mt. Vernon, Ia. Miss Susie K. Glaspell, of Davenport, Ia., was the winner. M. A. Thompson, recently of the 51st Iowa Volunteers, carries second honors, and F. E. Knowles was third. Miss Glaspell has the enthusiasm of the whole school with her in her effort at the state contest. Mr. Knowles won second place in thought and composition. Other contestants were M. G. E. Bennett, T. T. Thompson and D. N. Gillett.

Dean Everest has greatly improved in health, but his physicians advised a milder climate for the winter. He has left for Texas where he will devote the winter to completing his forthcoming book on ethics. The writer has been selected by Dean Everest to meet his classes in the Bible College to the close of the school year in June. Until that time address me at University Place, Des Moines, Ia.

On Dec. 5th and 6th, C. C. Rowlison, of Marshalltown, Ia., with his wife, was in Des Moines. He delivered two lectures at the Central Church for Pastor H. O. Breeden. His theme was Church History and his work was a part of the institutional program for the winter. He will come again on Dec. 19th and 20th and again on Jan. 9th and 10th. The students in chapel gave Bro. Rowlison a hearty reception.

G. L. Brokaw, of the Christian Index, has just issued a vlume of sermons by Iowa writers. It is a book of 500 pages and entitled, very appropriately, "Doctrine and Life." There are twenty-eight sermons and as many portraits and biographical sketches. Among the names I mention Dean Everest, B. S. Denny, D. A. Wickizer, Chacellor Craig, I. N. McCash, Sumner T. Martin, James Small and H. O. Breeden. A copious index adds to the volume of the book. Barring some slight typographical errors the book is a credit to its publisher and to the contributors to its pages. The writer has sent out ten copies as Christmas presents.

Circular Letter of the Board of Education.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE CHATTANOOGA CONVENTION.

1. That the churches be requested to observe Educational Day, the first Lords day in July—no offerings to be called for—the purpose of this observance to create and foster a general interest in the work of our colleges, and specially the department devoted to educating young men for the ministry of the Word.

2. That the state organizations be requested to devote a part of the program of the annual convention to the subject of collegiate education, and call attention to the importance of giving ample support to our colleges.

3. That the next annual program of this society devote one session, or its equivalent, to this important suject.

STATION N, CHICAGO, Nov. 18, 1898.

DEAR BROTHER:—We call your attention to the above recommendations and earnestly beg your co-operation in the campaign for EDUCATION ON THE CAUSE OF EDUCATION which has been committed to our charge.

1. We believe—

(1) That our colleges ought to be put on a financial basis.

(2) That the children of our own families ought to attend our own schools, at least as far as the courses given will carry them.

(3) That the standard of our colleges should be made equal to any competing institutions.

(4) That these things can and will be done if the attention of our brethren is called to this problem, and if this cause be laid to the hearts of the people all along the line.

2. For this campaign the American Christian Missionary Society has granted that one session of their valuable time be given to our colleges in which they shall present their work and claims for support. An educational secretary is to be appointed in every state and addresses on education among the Disciples are to be given at the various state conventions. The first Lords day in July has been set apart as Educational Day in all the churches. Preachers are asked to preach on education, its relation to the Christian life, its necessity for the work of the Christian minister and missionary, etc. Godly men are to be exhorted that supplications, prayers, intercessions and thanksgivings be made for all presidents, professors and students who are in high places of opportunity, that they may lead a righteous and godly life, that God may lead them into all the truth, that they may send out many messengers of light and salvation to this needy world. It is to be hoped that the thanksgiving will be, not in word only, but in deed, in all liberality as God hath prospered every one. But a general collection is not asked for by the Educational Board. It is hoped that these services will prepare the way for the visits of the presidents, financial secretaries and other representatives of our colleges and schools that they will be received gladly, heard with interest and sent on their way rejoicing at the opening of the Lord of the hearts and purses of his people.

3. For this an extended literature will be issued from time to time by the Board of Education.

The Educational Bulletin is to be continued under the valuable oversight of Mrs. A. A. Forrest, of Irvington, Indiana, as editor. This will contain during the year—

(a) The address of President E. V. Zollars, "Education, its Impartance and Status among the Disciples," given at the National Convention at Chattanooga.

(b) The address of President J. H. Hardin on "College Endowment," to be given at the Congress of Disciples at St. Louis, April next.

(c) "Short History of Education among the Disciples." A booklet by Mrs. A. A. Forrest.

(d) "Outlines of Sermons," on education among the Disciples, by Professor J. B. Sweeney.

(e) Articles are to appear from time to time in the papers which have so kindly opened their columns to this work. These will be written by men on the field and acquainted with the claims of each institution.

Besides the above work of publication the Board of Education acts as a distributing center for the common literature of our colleges. The above pamphlets will be mailed to every preacher in the country for use on Educational Day. Also a circular of each college will be enclosed, which will set forth the particular history and work. Statistics are being gathered which will show the facts and condition of our schools.

The Board of Education will act as a clearing house for all matters in common between the colleges, as far as is desired, in the correlation of courses, in the interchange of students, in the advocacy of a common cause before the general public.

4. For this most valuable work the Board of Education consisting of the following representatives of the several institutions:

J. H. Herdin, President, Eureka; Hiram Van Kirk, Secretary and Treasurer Disciples' Divinity House, University of Chicago; Mrs. A. A. Forrest, General Editor, Irvington, Ind.; E. V. Zollars, Hiram; B. C. Deweese, Kentucky University; O. T. Morgan, Drake; J. B. Sweeney, Add-Ran, donate their services. The only expense of the board will be that of publication and correspondence. These will not exceed $400. Last year without any public appeal friends of the educational cause gave $126.78. We ask the same to continue their support this year. Many others will doubtless be glad to send us personal offerings of from $1 to $10. Many churches will also kindly give us a portion of their missionary offerings. Five per cent. of the whole amount given for outside work could be used by this board in as advantageous a way as possible. Other churches may be pleased to make us a special offering. Above all we covet your sympathy and co-operation.

POROUS PLASTER

Do you know that we have hundreds of letters from all parts of the world telling us of the wonderful cures these plasters have made? Do you know that all other so-called porous plasters were started after Allcock's had acquired their enormous sales and world-wide reputation? Do you know that none of them have the medicinal properties of Allcock's? Just put them to your nose and compare the fine aromatic odor of Allcock's with the smell of all others. Notes and News.

The Mason City (Ia.) auxiliary observed C. W. B. M. Day in a public program Lord's day morning, Dec. 11, occupying the regular preaching hour. Our apportionment of $15 was raised and our membership increased. The society now numbers 107.

JOSEPHINE PRUSIA, Sec.

We are about completing the remodeling of our church at a cost of about 600, under the pastorate of Bro. A. J. Ellis, who has helped us raise this money and also a church debt of $200. Churches needing a pastor who can also help them would do well to write to him at Blanchard, Ia. W. S. WOOD, Clerk.

Another beautiful church edifice has been opened for worship. The dedication of the new church at Ligonier, Ind., took place Nov. 20. The pastor, Geo. Musson, was assisted in the dedicatory services by E. V. Zollars, president of Hiram College. The choir was composed of singers from all the churches of the city, and Miss Anna Sack presided at the piano. Elder Musson, pastor of the church, directed the services and had full charge of the meeting, while Prof. Peters had charge of the choir and directed the music. The church was filled to its utmost capacity, the audience being composed of the best people of the city and surrounding country. The yearly meeting having just been held on the two days previous, there were also many visitors from the principal towns in the surrounding country. Other pastors of the city made short addresses at the evening service. The occasion was an enjoyable one and long to be remembered. It is said that there is now but one better church building in Ligonier.

Relief Fund Remembered.

Church Anniversary.

The Church of Christ in East Smithfield, Pa., will observe the 30th anniversary of the dedication of its present edifice, and the 68th anniversary of the organization of the church, together with the annual roll call service and silver offering on the 14th day of January, 1899. Dinner served at noon.

C. W. B. M. Notes.

Chas. A. Young closed a successful term of three months' Bible teaching at the University of Virginia Dec. 16. After holding an institute at Martinsville, Va., he will begin work at Athens, Ga., in the University of Georgia.

C. W. B. M. Day was largely observed in the churches, although the storm greatly hindered the attendance and lessened the collection.

Ann Arbor, Mich., reports a collection of $60 on C. W. B. M. Day.

Mrs. Helen E. Moses has been quite ill since her visit to Cincinnati, O., and Ann Arbor, Mich. She has canceled future appointments for the winter.

The Missionary Institute, Dec. 13-15, under the auspices of the Bible College at Irvington, Ind., was very well attended and profitable. The severe cold weather and poor heating of the Downey Ave. Church necessitated the sessions being held in the Y. M. C. A. room in Butler College building. It was greatly regretted that Mrs. Helen E. Moses was unable to be present and deliver her address.

Letters have been received in this country from Olivia A. Baldwin, M. D., and Annie Agnes Lackey, mailed at Marseilles, France. These sisters are en route to India under appointment by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Miss Ada McNeil, M. D., arrived safely in Bombay, India., after a pleasant voyage. She spent a few days visiting places of interest in Bombay, then stopped at Hurda with the missionaries. She is to be associated with Bro. N. Mitchell and wife at Bina.

State Mission Notes.

"One hundred thousand additions this year."

This is the motto of the General Home Society for this year. Missouri's quota of this number is about 10,000. I said in my notes a few weeks back that we ought to do this, and from every part of the state has come the hearty response, "We can and we will." If you have studied carefully the figures presented in the last "Notes" I am sure that you can't help but see that one of the surest means to the accomplishment of this purpose is to keep our state mission work to the very highest point of efficiency.

If we are in earnest in this matter we will not be content with well wishing, but will go to the fullest possible well doing. The wishing is all right if it leads to the doing, otherwise it is mere sentimentality. Will you believe me if I say that we never have had such opportunities for aggressive successful work in all our history as now? God is proving us by the presentation of these opportunities. Will he find us wanting as he thus tests us?

We are limited, cramped, curbed by the awful want of funds. This coming month, January, is the old month for the taking of the state mission collection and the raising of the apportionment. Many who have been observing Mission Day did not in November because the notice was so short. Let such remember that it is always in order to work, watch and pray, yes and pay, too, for state missions. What better gift can you bestow than to make a New Year's gift for bringing Missouri to Christ?

Let us have a generous, hearty response.

Yours in his name, T. A. ABBOTT.

4144 Westminster Place, St. Louis.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

As Christmas is drawing near it is an appropriate time for all of the auxiliaries to send in their quarterly dues and thankofferings and C. W. B. M. Day collections. If any auxiliary failed to observe the 4th of December with a special service, let a program be prepared and rendered as soon as possible.

Two of the fifty auxiliaries that we desire to organize during the missionary year have been organized. The credit of the organization at Savannah is given to Sisters Dew and Williams—two loyal workers who reside there. Sister Goode writes that they have organized an auxiliary at Wyatt Park Church. There are now two good auxiliaries in St. Joseph.

Miss Mattie Burgess has returned to Missouri from India and is now caring for her afflicted mother at her home near St. Joseph. Will many of our women write her letters of loving sympathy?

Mrs. Sarah H. Jenkins, of Kansas City, the former treasurer of the Missouri C. W. B. M., has been quite ill for the last three months. We earnestly hope that she may soon be restored to health. She has spent many years in Christ's service and has ever been a liberal contributor to the support of the cause. She has been identified with the C. W. B. M. from the beginning and has made generous donations every year. We missed her in the fall conventions and the board meeting, and her absence was deeply deplored. The lovely Christian character of Sister Jenkins would add strength to the work of any cause.

Catarrh of the Stomach.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drugstores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. These tablets can be found at all drugstores.

Ministerial Items.

Returns from the offerings for Ministerial Relief are beginning to come in and it is expected that every church and preacher will take this offering.

If you did not take the offering at the time appointed let it be done yet.

This Jubilee Year must be the beginning of greater things for the ministry. When you read this let your next duty be to send your offering to Howard Cale, Indianapolis, Indiana.

The January remittances to most of our beneficaries were made in time for Christmas and more than eighty of the "Lord's poor ones" made happy in the remembrance of the fellowship of their brethren.

If you have not a part in this it is a mistake. Your Christmas will be happier if you help this work.

A brother from Illinois writes:

I send my congratulation to Ministerial Relief. It is but a mite, $2.00, but it is all that I am able to give. I am past earning anything, being an old man, almost 79 years old, and with very limited means.

I hope and pray that our brotherhood will respond to the call liberally.

A correspondent suggests that all of our papers put in a standing announcement of the name and address of each representative of the different associations authorized to receive donations, as he could find none of their addresses in the papers. A good idea.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Dec. 21.—At the North Park Church, five additions since last report.—J. M. CANFIELD.

Liberty Christian Church, Dec. 18.—Bro. Wm. Mondy, of Ohio, began a series of meetings here one week ago to-day. Bro. Ward, of Irvington, is here to-day. Seventeen confessions to date. Meetings will continue.—W. E. LISHER, elder.

Indianapolis, Dec. 26. — There were six additions at the North Park Church, of this city yesterday.—J. M. CANFIELD.

MISSOURI.

Civil Bend, Dec. 20.—We recently closed a meeting at Oak Ridge, Daviess county, with 13 additions; nine by baptism and four otherwise. We are now in a meeting at Eagleville. Bro. A. L. Johnson is with us and renders valuable aid to our work. We have the promise of M. S. Gillidett, who will come to our aid also.—Z. MITCHELL.

Spickard, Dec. 19.—J. P. Schooler just closed a very fine meeting here with 40 additions to the church and the church cemented together in love and full accord one to another.—WESLEY BROWN.

Our work at Mechanicsburg starts off very nicely; good audiences, and one confession Sunday night. We are planning for a meeting to begin with the new year.—R. B. HAVENER.

Buffalo, Dec. 13.—Sunday night closed the fifth week of our meeting conducted by Edmond Wilkes, of California, Mo. Through his efficient teaching there were 56 additions. We enter the new year in "full force" with J. D. Babb, leader. He has served us as pastor one year, and it is the unanimous voice of the church that he stay with us another year.—WM. A. COY.

St. Joseph, Dec. 23.—Fifty-six additions in our meeting at First Church.—C. M. CHILTON.

ILLINOIS.

Chauncey, Dec. 19.—Recently held a meeting at Young's, Marion county. Nine conversions; one by letter.—JAS. F. ROSBOROUGH.

Illiopolis, Dec. 21.—We have closed a short meeting; 10 added. Bro. G. M. Goode, of Lexington, Mo., did the preaching. Began my sixth year here yesterday.—S. F. ROGERS.

Arcola, Dec. 19.—I have been here and at Humbolt, Ill., 10 months. Have been able to say there have been added to the Arcola list 38 names and to the Humboldt nine names. Expect to give my whole time to Arcola next year. Yours for the "100,000 for Christ in '99."—J. T. CLEMENS.

Camp Point, Dec. 21.—Meeting at Bedford, Ia., closed with 54 accessions. Bro. Walters is doing a most excellent work at Bedford and is held in very high esteem. Our work was crippled for want of room. The brethren will probably build during the coming year. My next meeting will be at Leon, Ia., commencing Jan. 1.—R. A. OMER.

Irving, Dec. 24.—Our meeting at Chapin with W. H. Cannon closed with 27 added. Many were men and women of prominence and influence.—A. O. HUNSAKER.

Watseka, Dec. 26.—Two more made the ood confession here yesterday and one was added by letter. Have been preaching a few nights at Pitwood and have been rewarded by hearing several own Jesus as Lord and Savior. Bro. King is their pastor and is beloved by all. —B. S. FERRALL, pastor.

IOWA.

Our work is prospering. Improvements have been made on our church property to the extent of $700, making our building the best in this county. One confession recently.

Fraternally, C. P. LEACH.

Moulton, Ia.

Ft. Madison, Dec. 19.—One confession and one by statement last night. J. Carroll Stark, of Hamilton, Ill., Sundayed with us and preached two excellent sermons.—R. H. INGRAM.

Keosauqua, Dec. 17. — Bro. Hendrickson closed a five weeks' meeting at this place with 10 additions. Considering the weather and sickness in our vicinity the results were all that could be expected.—A. G. FELLOWS, clerk.

KANSAS.

Winfield, Dec. 19.—I held a short meeting at Walnut with four additions and pledges made to save the church from being sold; work in Winfield gradually improving and a move on foot to pay off the entire church debt of six or seven hundred dollars.—W. T. ADAMS.

Halstead, Dec. 17.—Our meeting closed Dec. 18 after five weeks with 46 additions. L. B. Coggins, of Mt. Hope, Sedgwick County, did the preaching. Bro. C. is a very able man and he has a warm place in the hearts of the people of Halstead.—D. W. THOMPSON.

The Christian Church at Parsons has just closed a six weeks' special meeting. The whole church has its influence and each individual member made to feel a deeper seuse of consecration and spirituality. The meeting was conducted by the pastor, W. W. Burks. assisted by Prof. C. E. Millard, as soloist. Bro. Burks in this special effort has preached some masterful sermons, which prove him to be both a scholar and a student. He is a strong preacher and has done much for the Parsons church and for the Christian cause in the state of Kansas. The singing of Prof. Millard added much to the success of the meeting. Prof. Millard won the hearts of the audience in the great convention at Chattanooga, where he recently sang. The Parsons church felt indeed fortunate to be able through their pastor to secure him.—A. M.

Erie, Dec. 21.—Ten additions since last report; three at Shaw, three at Rush Schoolhouse (eight miles north of Erie), four at Erie, and three to be baptized at Erie soon.—C. J. SANDERS.

Halstead, Dec. 22.—The series of meetings held by Bro. L. B. Coggins lasted five weeks. Closed last Sunday, 18th. The number of those uniting were 32 by baptism; 11 by statement and three by letter, making a total of 46. The house was crowded nearly every evening, notwithstanding the bad weather.—T. L. EVANS, clerk.

Galena, Dec. 23.—Two additions by letter and two baptisms in December.—R. A. THOMPSON.

MILK CRUST

When our baby boy was three months old, he had the milk crust very badly on his head, so that all the hair came out, and itched so bad, he made it bleed by scratching it. I got a cake of CUTICURA SOAP and a box of CUTICURA (ointment). I applied the CUTICURA and put a thin cap on his head, and before I had used half a box it was entirely cured, and his hair commenced to grow out nicely. Feb. 24,'98. Mrs. H. P. HOLMES, Ashland, Or.

CUTICURA REMEDIES appeal with irresistible force to mothers, nurses, and all having the care of children. To know that a single application will afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a speedy cure in the most torturing, and disfiguring of skin and scalp diseases, with loss of hair, and not to use them is to fail in your duty. SLEEP for SKIN-TORTURED BABIES and REST for TIRED MOTHERS in a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, and a single anointing with CUTICURA, greatest of skin cures.

Sold throughout the world. POTTER D. & C. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. How to Cure Baby's Skin Diseases, free.

Publishers' Notes.

I am highly pleased with the Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899. The preliminary notes are instructive, the expository comments well chosen, the lesson analysis suggestive, and the practical lessons and suggestive hints to student and teacher are helpful if thoughtfully used. I frankly say that I know of no better aid to the teachers and advanced scholars than Christian Lesson Commentary.

H. C. GARRISON.

Richmond, Va.

Christian Lesson Commentary, the handsomely bound volume of more than 400 pages, leaves little to be dsired in the way of aids to the study of the Sunday-school lessons for the year 1899. A glance at the pages shows that vast labor has been employed in its preparation. One who will pursue the daily readings which immediately precede each lesson, and will study the lesson in the light of the very copious and appropriate notes and suggestions accompanying it, must become intelligent in the Scriptures covered by these lessons.

We have for several years given the volumes of this series, as they appeared, a permanent place in our library, and we prize them very highly as commentaries on the Scriptures. Every teacher and advanced student in our Sunday-schools should have this book.—Christian Courier, Dallas, Tex.

Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, edited by W. W. Dowling, is before me. Like its predecessors, it has the marks of thoroughness. The editor of this work never allows anything of vital interest in the text to escape his attention. In every lesson what needs to be said is well and amply said. Teachers and students in the Sunday-school who secure this commentary will find it replete in needed analysis, exposition and other treatment of the lessons. The editor and publishers deserve much praise for what they in this book have so well done. W. O. MOORE.

Indianapolis, Ind.

I have carefully examined the Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899. It shows painstaking scholarship and fidelity to the work. Its different methods of treating the text—expository, illustrative, applicatory and practical—with its suggestive questions and hints on teaching it, opens the lesson fully to the understanding and gives a wide range of thought. It is a rich storehouse from which a teacher can be thoroughly equipped for teaching any grade of pupils. The numerous maps and illustrations, and the dictionary of Scripture proper names, with their pronunciation and meaning, are prominent and valuable features.—I. A. Thayer, New Castle, Pa.

The Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, by Rev. W. W. Dowling, is published by the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis. This is an attractive and interesting commentary on the international Sunday-school lessons for 1899 and is well worthy a place in the library of Sunday-school workers. It is richly illustrated and has many attractive features. It is practical, spiritual and exegetical, and will be found very valuable to all Sunday-school teachers and students.—The Central Methodist, Louisville, Ky.

Expansion.

Expansion of knowledge.
Expansion of zeal.
Expansion of charity.
Expansion of ideas.
Expansion of numbers.
Expansion of influence.

Expansion of the circulation of religious literature in order that the other expansions may be brought to pass.

The past week has certainly been one of expansion for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Our friends have been kind; and better than that, they have added to their kindess activity. From all directions we have added many new subscribers, even renewing one from far-away Kailua, North Kona, Hawaii.

Nor do we fail to appreciate the renewals of our old subscribers so tried and true in their faithfulness.

Their subscriptions are fully as helpful and really more encouraging because they know, and by renewing approve the quality of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

We would like to acknowledge the assistance of each one, but we cannot justify ourselves in taking much space and thereby excluding things which will be more helpful to our readers. We will say that the aid of every one of our subscribers is solicited and when extended is thoroughly appreciated by us.

We plead for the best cause, let us have the best paper in Christendom. Continue to encourage us and you will see that result.

"I thought I wrote a card asking that my CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST be changed from Memphis, Mo., to Jacksonville, Fla. I have not, however, received a copy since coming here. I am getting right hungry to see the dear good paper once more." J. T. BOONE.

Jacksonville, Fla.

The card was received and change of address made at once. The next issue was mailed promptly, but having missed the last one to Memphis, Bro. Boone's very commendable appetite was not disposed to be patient. It is only when we miss blessings that we really appreciate them. While we are on the subject, let us say that we will be obliged to our readers to report to this office any failure to receive the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST regularly and promptly.

Do you know that T. W. Grafton's Life of Alexander Campbell contains a clear and comprehensive account of the chief events in the life of the great reformer, that it is a neat cloth bound volume of 234 pages and that while it sells for One Dollar we offer it with one year's subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to old and new subscribers, for Two Dollars? "Think on these things," but don't think too long; act while the opportunity is yours.

"I wish to renew my subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and to thank you for the "Easy Chair" items. My sentiments exactly; "A pair of yarn mittens given as an expression of love, far preferable to a gold watch given as an investment." BETTY BROWN ARMER.

Richmond, Ky.

The gems of thought and words of encouragement in the practical affairs of life, that appear in the Easy Chair each week, are the occasion of our receiving many letters of thanks and commendation.

It is proper to caution our readers not to confuse the Bible which we are offering in connection with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with the many inferior editions on the market. Ours is the genuine Oxford Self-pronouncing Teacher's Bible. The type is Bourgeois, 8vo. The Bible measures 8 1-8 x 5 1-2 inches, and in the pasteboard box weighs two pounds and twelve ounces. It is guaranteed to please.

For $2.50 we send the Bible and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for one year. This offer is subject to withdrawal at any time without notice.

"I have been a subscriber to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for twenty-two or twenty-three years, and as for me and my house, we will continue to serve the Lord by renewing our subscription for another year.

Peace on the fields that were red with the slain—
Peace in God's country forever!

II.

Peace where the great ships have roared with their guns—
Where the battle smoke darkened all stars and all suns;
Peace in the hearts of the patriot ones—
Peace in God's country forever!

III.

Peace where the lightnings from heaven are hurled;
Where the loved flag of Freedom forever's unfurled—
Where the red stripes of glory shall garland the world—
Peace in God's country forever!

What Two Boys Did—II.

BY ALFRED BRUNK.

Mr. Latham's office was situated so he could oversee the selling departments of both the wholesale and retail branches of his establishment. As he watched the busy scene below him, saw the people come and go, strange thoughts passed through his mind. He thought of Jesus who, "though he was rich yet for your (our) sakes he became poor," of Paul trudging all over the country giving his life freely that the gospel might run and have free course; "as poor, yet making many rich." He laid back in his chair and closed his eyes. Visions of wealth floated before him. Merchandise, jewels, silver and gold were heaped upon his right hand and upon his left. A bright angel approached him and with a magic wand showed him the poverty, squalor and degradation of earth's millions and pointing to the wealth surrounding him said, "Whose shall these things be?" The angel turned away and vanished. Ravishing music greeted his ear. Mammoth temples were unlocked and their gorgeous wealth was stacked about him. Higher and higher rose the pyramid until he was completely shut in by the glittering array. The air became close and stifling; he tried to shake down the huge mass that he might extricate himself from his prison. He succeeded so well that the different articles fell upon him, and he was pinned to the earth. A mocking laugh greeted his ear; the wealth was brushed aside and he was raised to his feet, and stood facing the most horrible looking object he ever saw. "Whose shall these thing be?" asked the hideous one. "Well, not yours; they were given you in trust, and you have used them as if they were your own. Come with me." He gave a quick jerk and pulled himself loose from the grinning monster.

"Ha, Bro. Latham, I caught you napping this time," said Mr. Hollingbrook, shaking him by the hand. "No; I haven't time to sit down. Just called to tell you of a poor family of Swedes down on Wharf Street. Bad circumstances; no money, no work, drinks I suspect, two children quite sick. I called to see if you would permit Myrtle to go with me to their quarters and play the mandolin and sing for them. I will, of course, take good care of her till she gets home."

Myrtle! Myrtle again! What did it mean?

"Did you say they were very poor? and sickness in the family?" He pressed an electric button. Soon a young man stood before him. "John, send a barrel of flour, the best, to—to—what number, Bro. Hollingbrook? Oh, yes, 54 Wharf Street, fifth floor; and, yes, two hams, five dozen eggs and—and—what else, pastor?"

"Some oatmeal," suggested Mr. Hollingbrook, much surprised at the turn of affairs.

"Yes, a dozen groats, and have Dr. Markham call at once, and have Clover Dairy furnish them a gallon of milk daily till further notice."

The young man withdrew, and Mr. Latham turned to his pastor.

"Sit down," he said, "I must talk with you about a serious problem," then he repeated what the boys had told him. They conferred together for sometime and agreed upon a plan which they both deemed wise. That night Mr. Latham called the two boys and Myrtle into his presence.

"Boys," said he slowly, "I have carefully thought over your remarks and have arrived at this conclusion: You may try your mission work for one year; I shall interfere with none of your plans. All I ask is that you consult with Bro. Hollingbrook in all important matters. Myrtle can go with you when her mother or pastor or some other reliable person can be there to protect her. That is all I have to say."

For answer Harry and Myrtle both fell upon his neck, while Fred was so happy he knew not whether to laugh or cry, and compromised by looking as solemn as an owl.

The boys began their work with great enthusiasm. It created no little gossip among Mr. Latham's friends to know that his son had gone into mission work with a poor German boy, among the worst class of foreigners in the city, and that his daughter assisted them. For the work, in the nature of things, became so well known that several of the Cedar Avenue members went to all the meetings, thus making it possible for Myrtle to attend. The boys soon found that it was no small task which they had undertaken. While some would attend the meetings and give good attention, the majority were very unruly, and the boys could do very little with them. They would listen very respectfully to Myrtle's playing or singing, but would make all kinds of hideous noises when Fred or Harry attempted to speak to them. Fred won upon them, however, as the months passed, and they learned to love him. Before the year was ended the two boys appeared before Mr. Latham, and Harry said:

"Father, I am convinced that I would never be a good missionary. I am ready to take my place in the store."

"But what of Fred and the mission?" asked his father.

"He is going to keep it up, although it does get discouraging at times; but he is getting to be the best hand to keep them quiet I ever saw. Why, they all just love him," said Harry, proudly looking at Fred.

"The worst trouble, Mr. Latham, is that they ask me so many questions that I can't answer," said Fred. "I thought as they were poor and ignorant that I could get along all right, but I find I was mistaken."

"That's just it," said Harry," and I am going to work hard in the store and send Fred to school, and then he will be a match for any of them."

"How is this, Fred?" asked Mr. Latham.

"Why, Harry said that as he couldn't be a missionary and I could, he would take the money God gave him and send me to school, and he would be preaching the gospel through me. I didn't want to do it at all, sir, but he believes it is the Lord's will."

"Fred, suppose I were to loan you the money to pay your way through school, when do you think you could pay it back?" asked Mr. Latham.

"I couldn't take it that way, sir, for as I expect to be a poor missionary it is not likely I should ever be able to repay you."

Mr. Latham again consulted his pastor. "Bro. Latham, I will be frank with you. You are blessed with wealth, and it is rapidly increasing. Your son has been given back to you and may, perhaps, continue the business after you are gone. Fred has the proper material in him and will make his mark in the world if he is given an opportunity. You may do untold good by educating him and it may return upon your own head in a way you little suspect now." Mr. Hollingbrook saw what the father did not see.

"Fred," said Mr. Latham a few days after this conversation, "I have made up my mind to educate you if you will permit me to do so, and I do this unconditionally. That is, you are not to bind yourself to follow any particular course in life. The only thing I shall insist upon is, that you attend the university at Prairie Centre."

Fred thanked him heartily, but demurred at leaving Worthington. He would be compelled to give up his mission; but upon that point Mr. Latham was inexorable, and Fred consented to abandon the mission for the time being, and went to Prairie Centre. There he remained for five years. Being of quick perception he learned rapidly, especially in the languages, several of which he mastered. Harry worked hard in the store, conquering all difficulties, and was general manager of the business by the time Fred had completed his university course. Myrtle not only attended school, but perfected herself in music. One day Harry was busy in the store when in walked a tall young man with handsome, classical features.

"Why, Fred, how do you do!" said Harry. "How you have grown. And so you are through school at last. I am so glad, for I have missed you every day you were away."

"Yes, I am glad to get back. You, too, have grown, but not so much as I have. How are—are all you people?"

That evening Fred took dinner with the Lathams, and it was a happy group that surrounded the table. Mr. Latham, proud of the part he had taken in the development of Fred; Mrs. Latham, the genial, smiling hostess; hale, hearty Harry, happy at the return of his friend; Myrtle, accomplished and beautiful as a rose from celestial gardens; Fred himself, stately, 'tis true, but with a heart filled with love for all the world.

"Well, Mr. Gotleib, what are your plans now?" asked Mr. Latham.

"They are in a chaotic state at present, Mr. Latham," replied Fred. I thought I would rest and recuperate for a few days before beginning active operations."

"Quite right," said Mr. Latham.

During the course of the dinner Harry saw what his father and mother did not see, and he rejoiced in his heart. After dinner the gentlemen retired to the library.

"Fred," said Harry, "I have not labored all these years for naught, and of my available funds I have set aside a considerable portion for our mission work. This I place in your possession, not as a gift or charity, but as my part of our work. You are to use it as seems best to you."

"And I supplement it with a like amount," said Mr. Latham.

"I can accept this money upon one condition only; which is, that it is not mine, but the Lord's, and to be used for his glory and for the salvation of souls."

"Certainly," said Mr. Latham, "only you are to use it as your judgment dictates."

"Then I will accept the trust as the Lord's steward," said Fred.

"Say, Fred, before reopening the mission would it not be a good idea for you to visit the different cities and churches this summer, and look into the actual condition of things over the country and wind up with the General Convention?"

"I would like to do so, Harry, and doubt not I would gather up many practical suggestions, but I doubt the propriety of using this money for that purpose."

"No, no, Mr. Gotleib, you are entirely mistaken; this money is the Lord's, it is true, but you are to use it as your judgment dictates. If you deem it best to travel and look into existing conditions, it is yours for that purpose; if you feel that God will be honored by spending a portion of it upon your own person, then it is your duty to do so; and in fact this is necessary, as you must have food and clothing."

"I am glad that you look at it in that light, and I shall follow your suggestion without the fear that you and Harry will think I am wasting your money."

"As I expect to go to the convention, we we will come home together," said Mr. Latham.

Fred traveled for more than three months, visiting the principal cities of the country, being gladly welcomed by the brethren everywhere. As a large portion of the time was vacation season he preached in many of the pulpits in various cities, and could also note the condition of the poor who were compelled to remain at their posts through the hottest season as well as at all other times.

"Father," said Harry one day, "that money we turned over to Fred—is it his money, or is it the Lord's money?"

"Why, it is the Lord's money, to be sure."

"How, then, can he travel all over the country and spend it sight-seeing?"

"Why it is this way, Harry: We gave him the money upon the single condition that he use it for that which, in his judgment, would best advance the cause of God, and this has a wide application. We know that out of this money his personal expenses must be met. Suppose we had told him that one stipulation was, that under no circumstances should he pay more than $15.00 for a suit of clothes. Had he accepted the money with that condition attached, he would have been under obligations to fulfill it to the letter, but as it now is, if he can best glorify God by wearing the best of clothes, it is his duty to buy the best; but if he can advance the cause better by wearing the cheapest clothing, then it is his duty to get it. As to his traveling, if it were for the purpose of personal gratification it would be a wrong use of the money; but if it be for the purpose of disseminating the light of Christianity, it is perfectly right and proper."

"Then, father, the money is his to use for the Lord's glory and for the salvation of souls."

"It is."

"And it would be the same if it were houses, or lands, or goods, would it not?"

"Yes, the same principle would govern," replied his father.

"Then, father, why does not this store and all other wealth belong to God, just the same as Fred's money does?"

"Why, there is a great deal of difference, my son. We gave Fred this money upon a certain condition. He is in duty bound to comply with that condition. As to our property, we earned it by our own hard work, without any conditions whatever."

"I am not so sure of that, father. Doesn't the Bible plainly say that 'the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof?' And that being the case, whose is all this property? It evidently is not ours, for we cannot take any of it away with us when we die; and as God is eminently just he would not deprive us of that which is ours. If it does not belong to us, then whose is it? Not our neighbors', for God has given it into our temporary keeping. No, father, it is not ours, in any absolute sense at all. It is ours only that we may use it for God's glory and for the salvation of souls."

"Why, Harry, you are quite a polemic. I have known for sometime that you were something of a dreamer, but I did not know you could argue your case so well."

Nevertheless, it set him to thinking, and when a man will think there is some hope for him.

At the convention Fred was an interested listener to all that was said. He was especially taken with the motto, "The world for Christ," and eagerly drank in everything which bore upon the "how" the world is to be won for Christ.

Mr. Latham was there, and he and Fred returned to Worthington together.

The Prodigal Girl.

BY SOUTH G. PRESTON.

How oft have you heard of the Prodigal Son,
From pulpit, from platform and press,
A story of love, repentance and woe,
First told by the Immaculate One.
But say: "Did you ever in all this world—
This world where every thing goes in a whirl—
Did you ever," I say, "Hear a loving, kind word,
In pity spoken, to a Prodigal Girl?"
Spurned by womankind, from society driven;
A helpless wanderer, forlorn and alone:
Not a friend in the world—Is there none in heaven,
Who pities, while she reaps in sorrow the sown?

There's a welcome at home for the Prodigal Son,
For the world rejoices and loves its own—
Receives the libertine in its mansions of pearl,
While it scorns the name of the Prodigal Girl.

I saw a young maiden both lovely and fair,
As she dwelt in a city of the world—
She was modest and pure and of noble birth;
Was Genivieve Brown, with graces rare.
I saw her again; but short months had flown;
People gazed on her as she passed along,
The woeful victim of a slanderous tongue—
An innocent sufferer of a terrible wrong.
The maiden went on, little dreaming of the fate
That would carry her down to the depths in a whirl:
She saw at last, when it was too late—
That her mother's only child, was a Prodigal Girl.

I saw her again as she tried to rise
Above the suspicion of friends—
But there was none to love, or sympathize,
She found no friend, beneath the skies.
In the House of the Lord, there was none to hear
Her cry of sorrow—her wail of despair;
For no one in that vast and fashionable throng,
Had ever err'd, or committed a wrong.
When they led her out of the elegant pew,
The Angelic Host in sorrow withrdew—
And the tears of repentance that fell from her eyes,
Were carried by angels above the skies.

I saw the gentleman that caused her shame,
As he knelt in his cushioned pew;
The trial was over: "He wasn't to blame!"
And the ministering angels again withdrew.
The church for him the battle had fought;
While he gazed unmoved on the ruin he'd wrought.

I saw her again; saddest scene of all,
In the Chamber of Death, alone;
Her beautiful spirit from earth had flown—
In obedience to her Savior's call.
God had forgiven her—not so the world—
The world, that turns with a dizzy whirl—
On earth she heard no loving, kind word,
In heaven was a welcome for the Prodigal Girl.
Loved by the angels, safe at home in heaven;
A redeemed spirit, in the City of Pearl—
No longer from joy and happiness driven;
But a guardian angel for some Prodigal Girl.

Sunrise on the Desert.

BY STELLA CLANTON.

All night beneath the cloudless summer sky,
Not with effeminate draperies drawn round,
But in unfettered majesty as warriors lie,
The naked desert lay in sleep profound.

No sound, no touch disturbed its slumbers deep;
No trees could whisper on its bare brown breast,
No sound from man could interrupt its sleep;
No breath of flowers disturb its peaceful rest.

Deep stillness reigned; and when a streak of gray,
Fast deepening into a rosy red,
Announced the coming of the royal day,
I walked forth in the silence with bowed head.

My feet were in the barren desert sand,
But o'er me and around me the Most High
Proclaimed his presence, as with lavish hand
He spread his splendid glories in the sky.

The east grew brighter; with no cloud in sight
To take the brilliant beauty for its own,
The wealth of color in the sun's rich light
Was given to the calm, clear sky alone.

The sun arose above the level of the land,
Its rising hidden by no bush or tree;
It spread its slanting rays across the sand,
And changed the desert to a golden sea.

I marvel not that untaught man should kneel
And groping blindly for the Holy One;
That he the presence of a God should feel,
When bursts upon his sight the rising sun.

The Family Altar.

BY F. BURGE GRISWOOD.

To those of us who have the blessedness to recall the habitual gathering around this sacred home centre in the days of our early childhood and youth, it is a great sorrow to observe the sad decadence in these modern times of so worthy a practice.

Even among professing Christians, the habit of family prayers has largely fallen into disuse and the individual members of many households are left to irregular and solitary devotions.

If parents could fully realize the influence for good that follows the daily assembling of the family group, for the recognition of God's gracious mercies, and for prayer for a continuance of his loving care and protection, they would not readily give up, or neglect such potent means of grace and blessing for themselves and their children.

Especially during the summer outings, when both young and old are more or less absorbed in worldly recreations, are the wonted times for hallowed devotions relinquished, and desultory readings of the Scriptures and hurried communion with God take the place of the sweet home hour of prayer and praise. In the midst of these sad reflections, there has come to me so beautiful an instance of faithfulness to Christian duty, that I feel impelled to speak of it as a worthy example for the imitation of those who have proved remiss in the obligations to our holy religion.

In a summer watering-place in a large and fashionable hotel, a venerable mother, with her sons and daughters and their wives, husbands and children, to the number of thirty souls, is spending a month or more. Every day she makes it a rule to assemble the whole party for reading of God's Holy Book, and for prayer and thanksgiving to the Author of all good. Wherever this earnest Christian woman goes she takes with her the faith and love which should govern the children of the Most High in every phase of life. To her there is nothing so important as her promised allegiance to the King of kings. No joy so sweet as the service which he permits and the communion which he grants.

Who will say that every pleasure on earth is not enhanced in tenfold degree by the hour daily consecrated to God and heaven.

—Christian Intelligencer.

STANDING or kneeling on the sidewalk were a group of boys intent upon a game of marbles. One little urchin, with knuckles on the chalked line, suddenly raised his head to call out to a companion:

"Stand out o' my sunshine, can't ye? I can't half see what I'm aimin' at when you shut off the light."

We went on our way with a wish that his admonition could reach a wider circle. For in the great game of life that busies us all there are so many who are barring the light. They watch the work that is going on around them, and by chilling indifference or contemptuous comment shut out the sunlight, and so spoil many an aim that might else be true.

A Complete Commentary

FOR

EVERY TEACHER AND BIBLE STUDENT

This should be the watchword of every Sunday-school in the land. Thorough, systematic work cannot otherwise be expected. In selecting these books it is always wisest to secure the Best.

I. The Christian Lesson Commentary,

for 1899, prepared by W. W. Dowling, is the most systematic, thorough and helpful published in all this broad land. Scores of the most competent critics, reviewers and practical teachers of various religious denominations have so testified. It contains 416 large pages, with many illustrations, maps, charts and helpful tables—64 pages more than PELOUBET'S, and 24 pages more than HURLBUT'S, the only other Lesson Annuals that belong to its class.

Style and Price.—Neatly printed on calendered paper and substantially bound in cloth, $1.00 per copy; $9.00 per dozen—25 per cent. cheaper than the much smaller books noted above.

II. The Lesson Helper

by the same author, is considerably smaller in size than The Lesson Commentary, but contains much of the same material in a more condensed form, designed especially for Senior Classes and their teachers. Schools and Teachers that feel that they must have a lower priced book than the one first noted above, will find The Lesson Helper very satisfactory; and they may order it with the full assurance that it is more complete every way than any lesson annual or quarterly published by the Christian Church, with the single exception of The Lesson Commentary.

Style and Price.—Printed on fine calendered paper, and substantially bound in heavy boards, only 35 cents per copy; $3.60 per dozen.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

More of Us.

Well, children, are you about done with 1898? I am going to get me a bran-new year in a few days, a year nice and clean without any mistakes or sorrows in it. Just think! None of us have done anything wrong or wasted any time in 1899. What are you going to do with this year? Wouldn't it be a fine thing to celebrate this 1899 by keeping all the resolutions of the Advance Society? One year in which we read a verse of the Bible every day! That would be something to be proud of! And a quotation each week from a celebrated author; and remember that five pages of history a week and 30 lines of poetry amount to 1,525 pages and 10,950 lines for the year, if I haven't multiplied wrong. That's the way to store your minds with bright and useful thoughts and give you something to talk about, so when you are in company you won't have to sit dumb like hens.

I have already told you about 35 of our members. Before I tell of others I had better begin with Plattsburg, because I live here, you know, and if I left any of these out, they wouldn't have so far to come to "get me." Our preacher is Bro. T. H. Capp. He told his Junior Endeavor Society about our society, and I made a speech—I am sorry you were not there to hear me—and when Bro. Capp said he was going to join, we got 14; his children, Resa, Nannie and Frank; and Cordie Harris, Irene Walker, Rose Blethro, Millie and Bessie Imbler, Ruth Rea, Beryl Marshall, Don and Fanny Hockaday, Perry Crafton. And the next Sunday we got some more; but since we had to wait a week to get them, I am going to wait before giving their names. Because if this piece was nothing but a string of names, it wouldn't be very exciting. That's so with fishes, you know. It's fun getting them, but taking them home on the string is only mildly amusing. Miss Kate Barnes also joined, because how are you going to do anything great without a few older persons? And the ages of all these average about 11 and 12. Why couldn't our members get their preacher to do this in their towns? Are you afraid of your preachers? I hope not. Frank M. Reid (12), Madison, Cal., says, "I read about the Advance Society and thought it was just fine!" His father is the minister at that place. Here is a chance for Frank's father. Florence Belle Beattie lives in Dover, Mo., Minnie B. Snyder (11), in Milton, Ky.

"I am a ltttle girl," writes Della E. Durham, from Arbela, Mo., "that would like to join the Advance Society. I am eight; my mother died about three years ago. I came from the Christian Orphans' Home, to live with papa and mamma Searight. My five brothers and sisters have homes in different places of this state." Children, it is a blessed thing to have a home of our own, but there is one thing sweeter—to make a home for somebody else. From Raytown, Mo.,comeRoy Greene and HomerSlaughter. Mattie Maxfield (12), New City, Ill., says, "I like continued stories and then I am always anxious for the next paper." Laura Belle Campbell (12) is from Dayton.

Lena Collins (12), Benton, City, Mo., tells this story: Sunday-school Teacher—"Who killed Abel?" Little Girl—"I don't know, ma'am; I just moved here from Arkansas." The funniest thing Emily B. Riley (9), Kearney, Mo., ever saw, was some seals beating a drum. She doesn't say where she saw them, but I suspect it must have been at some entertainment, for I've been in Kearney and saw no seals. Helen Ross (8), lives in Independence, Mo.; Jessie B. Shafer (12), in Nilewood, Ill.; Emily Rice (13), Enfield, Ill., tells this true incident: "One Sunday morning at Sunday-school, two little ducks came waddling in and went straight up to our superintendent, Miss Johnson, who picked them up and carried them out. This caused much fun for the time being."

Mary Emma Keithley (8), Center, Mo., sends a true funny story: "Once while some people were being baptized, a little boy—whose grandma had been dipping her old hens in water to break them from sitting—looked up at his papa and said, 'I guess they won't set any more, will they, papa?' " Lina Pike,Nevada, Mo.,(10) kept our resolutions three weeks before sending her name; she wanted to test herself. Henry Grady Maxwell (9), New City, Ill., is a pretty busy boy. He goes to school, helps feed the chickens and pigs. Every day he shucks his little wagon full of corn and hauls it to his pet pigs. He says, "I wish I could do something to make these columns a success." He can—by showing the paper to others and talking about it.

Here are a little boy and girl from Mt. Vernon, Ill.—possibly a brother and sister. The lad writes, "I am a little child just 54 years old and weigh 185 pounds. I want to join your society, and wonder if I can really and truly keep all of the pledges." —(F. P. Scott.) The little girl says, "I am delighted with your Advance Society and want to be a member. My papa still calls me his little girl; I am one of the children yet, for my big boy loves to play with his 'little mother,' and my baby grandchild delights to pull my glasses from my eyes, and we all have a happy time. I am not an owl, and I don't believe you could make an owl of a happy little robin if it lived a hundred years."—(Mrs. Scott.) I wish we had more children like these. They are not grown people, but growing people. Lots of people quit growing at about thirty-five, and they spend the rest of their lives in creaky boots and serious faces, saying, "Make less noise, children!" I know a physician who is seventy-nine, and who just began to study Hebrew last fall—isn't grown yet!

Virginia Winn (12), Dover, Mo., says, "I am trying to get up a circle here; I've gotten one member." Here is a little band in Essex, Ia.: Hazel Gilmore (7), Lola Gilmore (12), Myrtle Seward (12). Kate Keith (11), Lexington, Ky., is a "native of the Golden West;" she went to school three years in California. Grace Doolittle (9), Cozad, Neb.; E. Maude Kimler (17), Davis Mo.; Effie Smith, Church Hill, Tenn.; Mabel Ragland (12), Newton, Kas.; Ruth L. Gorham, Hudson, O.; Bessie Bacon, Overton, Tex.; Grace Stewart, (14), Santa Paula, Cal.; Irvin Stewart Mill Grove, Ind.; Ralph (13) and Lois O. Perry (10), Thomas, Okla.; Cecil (12) and Mildred Hughes (9), Davenport, Wash.

An amusing story comes from Canada:

Marion and Dorrit, two little cousins, were on their way home one night, after they had been out to tea. They were sleepy and fussy, so Marion's mother told them to watch their shadows. Marion was greatly pleased. But little Dorrit was frightened by hers and tried to run away from it. When she found she could not do this she cried, "Take it away! take it away!"—(Grace G. Flaglor, St. Johns, N. B.) Ruth L. Gorham is ten, and lives in Hudson, O. She got her teacher,Miss Mattie M. Douds, to join our society. C. Ellis Younger, Lebanon, Mo., is twenty.

But I must wait for another time te name others. Don't be afraid you are forgotten. am very grateful for the kind things that have been written me, but I can't repeat them here, because you couldn'tsee me sitting in my corner and blushing, and you might think me vain. Several have said they never cared to read till our society started. The kind words have made me quite happy, although I have a lot of other things to make me happy, too; plenty of candy—chocolate is my specialty —and good books, and a great big turkey that we can eat the hash of ever so long after he—for it is a gobbler—has been warmed over for dinners. I don't say this to brag, but to remind you if your kind words please me, who have all I need, what will they do for those who have not so much! Lots of people—big people, too, and church members —never try to be friendly to others, but stand up stiff, like little wooden animals waiting for somebody to come along and put in their little yellow ark with its red roof and blue windows. I just punch such ones in the back, and when they turn about in surprise, I grapple their hand, somehow, before they know it. It does 'em good. Well, there are many children who are shy and friendless, who would like to be noticed, but don't know how to ask you to like them.

Do you like to read? Then you like to talk about your books. This is the last week I can give you for sending your ten favorite books and three favorite authors. Many votes are already in. So far, the books that have the largest vote is "Little Women," and "Robinson Crusoe;" it is a tie between them. The favorite author is Miss Alcott, and Longfellow comes close behind. Next two weeks will be devoted to our continued story. A new character is introduced, and if you haven't read the other chapters, you can get along all right anyway. Good-by, children; I send you all New Year's greeting, and may you have a very happy year, and I would like to send you all a present, but there are 140 of you now, and besides, if I am posted up in my Delineator, presents are not the fashion this year, anyhow.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

In the Gospel of John the ministry of Jesus begins with a week of interesting experiences. After the prologue the first day's incidents are described in 1:19-28. This was probably on Thursday, counting back from the end of the week on which the wedding in Cana occurred. The first day was signalized by the arrival of a deputation of Jews who asked John the Baptist concerning himself and his work, and drew from him the reply that he was not the expected Messiah, but only a voice preparing his way. The second day (29-34) was seemingly the moment of Jesus' return from the temptation, of which occasion John took advantage to bear witness to him as the Lamb of God and to speak of the signs by which this fact had been confirmed at the baptism of Jesus. The third and a portion of the fourth day's incidents are chronicled in the lesson.

On the third day John the Baptist was in the company of two of his disciples. Like the prophets of the Old Testament he had gathered about himself a group of men who had listened with enthusiasm to his preaching, and perhaps carried it later on into wider regions. They were his disciples, and to them he gave instructions, teaching them to fast and to pray, and conforming more or less to the religious customs of the time. But John was not ambitious to be the center of a group of admirers, and when Jesus appeared he gladly welcomed his arrival as the moment when the real work of the kingdom was to be inaugurated. His own ministry had been but preparatory. As Jesus passed by John pointed him out to the two disciples as the Lamb of God. By this phrase he seems to gather up the most sacred meanings of Old Testament history. The significance of the term does not seem to lie so much in the fact of its relation to the animal offerings of the Old Testament, for of the coming death of Jesus John probably knew nothing. His ideas of the Messiah were not those of a suffering servant. More closely does his thought seem to relate itself to the new covenant of which Jeremiah had spoken, by which sin was to be taken away. In the patriarchal age covenants were ratified between the divided parts of a lamb, and thus were made sacred. The lamb stood as the symbol of the covenant, the sign of obligation upon both parties to keep its terms. Jesus came to give himself to this work of rebinding men to God, and his life and death alike were the expression of the sacredness of the covenant. In his death particularly lay the full expression of his ministry, and his blood as the sign of his life became "the blood of the everlasting covenant" (Heb. 13:20).

Of the two disciples to whom John spoke one was Andrew. Whether or not the other was John it is impossible to know with certainty, but this has been conjectured. Both were interested by the words of their master, and followed with curiosity to know more of the purposes of Jesus. He saw them following him and turned about to encourage them in their questioning. He gave them just the encouragement they needed. He invited them to come and see where he lived, for he was probably enjoying the hospitality of some citizen of Bethany beyond Jordan, where lay the ministry of John at this time. It was four o'clock in the afternoon when Jesus and the two disciples of John went to his abode. How much of that night was spent in converse we do not know, but the result is shown in the conduct of one of those men immediately after. This was Andrew, who is known chiefly as the brother of Peter, but who, it must be remembered, was a disciple before his brother. It was to Peter he now went as soon as occasion offered, and assured him that the Messiah was at last in their midst. What Jesus had said proved his Messiahship to their minds. Andrew needed nothing further to start him upon the career of a disciple of Jesus. This work he began at once by going to the one nearest, who was his brother.

How interesting must have been the first interview of our Savior with Simon, who was afterward to play so important a part as the leading disciple. When Jesus looked upon him he understood at once his characteristics, and gave him a name which was not only expressive of the latent character of the man, but became the name by which he was known in the group of disciples—Cephas, the Hebrew equivalent of the Greek name Peter. This word certainly did not express Peter's character at that time, but rather was the prophecy of what he was to become—a man of rock in later days in defense of the truth.

On the fourth day of this memorable week Jesus started for Galilee to spend a brief time with his mother and relatives in the northern provinces before he returned to Judea to begin his active ministry. Two of the disciples whom Jesus had called to his side, Andrew and Peter, lived in the little town of Bethsaida near the Sea of Galilee, and another townsman of that place, Philip by name, had likewise come to listen to John's preaching. Jesus found him and invited him to follow him. Philip at once sought his friend Nathanael and brought him to the Master with the assurance that he of whom Moses and the prophets had written was found in the person of Jesus, who was supposed to be the son of Joseph of Nazareth. Nathanael was surprised that one who lived in such an obscure place should be thought the Messiah. He was to come of the royal family of David and to carry on a kingly campaign, ending in the destruction of Israel's enemies and a reign of peace and power. Certainly this teacher from Nazareth bore no resemblance to the popular idea, but between the lines we must read the story of Philip's conviction, growing out of an unrecorded conversation with Jesus, and to the question of his friend he had the best of all replies that can be made to any scepticism regarding the claims of our Savior—"Come and see."

The remainder of the chapter should be carefully studied in connection with the lesson. That which convinced Nathanael of the character of Jesus was the word with which he met him, recalling to him some recent meditation of his under a fig tree, where he had probably been thinking of the vision of Jacob at Bethel with its upreaching ladder. Jesus called him an Israelite in whom there was no guile, an Israel out of whom the Jacob had departed; and when Nathanael, perceiving his knowledge of his nature and of his recent meditation, confessed in astonishment that he was the Son of God, the King of Israel, Jesus assured him that he would see more marvelous things than these, and that soon; nay indeed, from henceforth he should see the vision of Jacob realized in the opening of heaven to earth and the ascending and descending angels bearing the messages of the Son of Man.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

The work of every Christian, like that of John the Baptist, is to point men to Christ. It is also the work of every teacher to hand over his pupils to the higher teacher when they have completed their training with him. Jesus is eternally the Lamb of God, the indispensable means of redemption, the one whose blood has sealed the everlasting covenant between God and men. The considerateness of Jesus' conduct toward the inquiring disciples illustrates how anxious we should be to encourage those who are timid seekers after our Master. Where does Christ abide? The answer to all scepticism is the answer of Jesus to the disciples, and of Philip to Nathanael, "Come and see." One need not argue where the facts are so abundant. If men once come to Jesus with true hearts they will not only abide with him, but will at once seek to bring others. Jesus knows what is in men and seeks those for service who can best perform it. Unpromising persons and places are not to be despised. Personal work with those nearest us is most effective in fulfilling our work of saving men.
